WILD TORNADOES.

They Cause Ruin and Death in Wisconsin Towns.

A Circus Tent Blown Down at Washburn—Two Persons Killed and Many Others Hurt—Heavy Wind in Iowa.

IN WISCONSIN.

ASHLAND, Wis., Aug. 10.—Ashland and Washburn were struck by a terrible tornado Saturday afternoon about 3:30 o'clock. Houses were blown down, buildings unroofed and many vessels driven ashore. At Washburn a circus tent was wrecked. Two people were killed and fifty injured. The cyclone came from the northwest, and was sudden. Rain poured in torrents. The main business street was like a river. The storm drove through the large hotel, the Chequamegon, like a mill-race. Twenty yachts on the bay were wrecked. Four men were picked up off a capsized sailboat after the storm. The Swedish Lutheran church, the Genery block, the Daily Press office, the Ashland theater and Franklin house were unroofed.

At Washburn, across the bay, Williams' circus was in full blast when the storm struck. Prof. Williams was going through an act with trained horses when the tent fell. The horses, wild with fright, burst out through the frantic mass of people. Two little children of George La Belle and an unknown boy were taken out dead. They were blown 500 feet. Miss Wilson's right leg was broken. The depot was turned into a hospital and the dead and wounded carried there. It was a terrible scene. Mothers were frantically looking for children and children wandering about wounded and bleeding. The injured number at least fifty, several of whom will die. The wires are all down. Whole blocks of business houses were torn from their foundations and blown down, injuring many people. The Feustad building, just completed, was totally demolished. Seven persons were in the top story, but all except one escaped without injury. The animals of Williams' circus escaped from their cages. An anaconda is still at large and several other animals have not been captured. The roof was torn off the large Omaha elevator and considerable grain spoiled by water. The damage in Washburn is estimated at $50,000. Tramways on the coal docks were demolished. The storm was similar to that at Superior several weeks ago.

IN IOWA.

OTTUMWA, Ia., Aug. 10.—The terrible heat of Sunday morning, which reached 99 degrees in the shade, was broken by a tornado which struck this city about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The storm in its full fury covered a somewhat limited area. Its course was from the southwest toward the northeast. The first damage done by it was at Humeston, where the wind was most furious. Cars standing on the Keokuk & Western track were blown off and the roof of the roundhouse was lifted. At Corydon the Methodist church and courthouse were damaged.

In this city the wind blew with great violence, taking off the roof of A. D. Moss' dry goods store, the roof of Harper & McIntyre Co.'s wholesale hardware house, the roof of A. P. Peterson's grocery store, damaging the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy round house, overturning the scaffolding about the coal palace and precipitating it on a lot of telegraph and telephone wires; uprooting great trees all over the city, and demolishing barns and other fragile outbuildings. The path of the storm through the country has been marked by the destruction of corn and the demolition of grain in stack. There was very little rain, and the damage was wholly by wind.

BLOOMFIELD, Ia., Aug. 10.—One of the most destructive wind and rainstorms ever known in this section of Iowa passed over Davis county Sunday afternoon. Houses were unroofed, fences blown down, besides much damage done to the fruit crop. An Adventist camp-meeting tent was blown away, the telegraph, telephone and the electric light wires are tangled and broken, and no lives were lost so far as known. The damage to crops cannot be estimated at this time.

DES MOINES, Ia., Aug. 10.—A terrific tornado, accompanied by rain and hail, passed through Decatur county Sunday about 12 o'clock, doing much damage. It was the worst storm known in that section. Crops are practically destroyed over a large section of the country. Trees were blown down and houses unroofed.

Death of a Negro Who Has Seen the Father of His Country.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—John Duckett, one of the aged patriarchs of Washington, died here at the age of 106 years. Duckett was born in slavery, in Prince George's county, Md. He was classed as a negro, but Indian blood predominated in his veins. The master who raised him sold him to a second master, and he to a third. This last in 1825 gave him his freedom. When a lad of 14 he saw George Washington, but the only recollection of the great man was a dazed remembrance of his gorgeous apparel.

Pension Statistics.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Pension Commissioner Raum states that during the year just closed 156,482 original pension certificates were issued, which is 80,845 more than has ever been issued in any one year. There are pending 929,486 claims, but the office is working them off at the rate of 30,000 per month.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Aug. 8.—J. W. Showalter, of Kentucky, on Friday won the United States Chess association's championship prize.

A TICKET NAMED.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Aug. 7.—When the convention of the people's party assembled Thursday Chairman Cavanaugh called for the report of the committee on resolutions. The following is a summary:

We hold that labor is the basis of all wealth and should be protected by law. The instability of the municipal governments of the state has led to the creation of enormous municipal debts, which are burdensome to all the people, and we, therefore, demand that the constitution of the state be so amended that it will be impossible to change the forms of municipal governments to meet the changing fortunes of politicians, and that no change of forms of municipal governments be permitted without the consent of the people. We demand the enactment and rigid enforcement of a law for the suppression of all forms of gambling in futures on all agricultural and mechanical products; favor the election of United States senators by popular vote of the people of the state; demand the rigid enforcement of laws against adulteration or counterfeiting of food; demand free school books for our public school system and compulsory education; demand the prohibition of child labor under fourteen years of age; demand the abolition of contract prison labor, believing in the doctrine of equal rights and special privileges to none; demand that taxation, national, state or municipal, shall not be used to build up one interest at the expense of another; favor government loans directly to the people on real estate or other ample security at a rate of interest not exceeding 2 per cent.; demand free and unlimited coinage of silver; oppose extravagance that collects of the people each year $500,000,000 for national expenses in a time of peace; demand the passage of laws prohibiting alien ownership of lands and that congress take prompt action to devise some plan to obtain all lands now owned by alien and foreign syndicates; demand a just and suitable system of graduated tax on incomes; believe in universal suffrage, and favor liberal pensions to all honorably discharged union soldiers of the late civil war and generous care for their widows and orphans.

The liquor question, which caused trouble in the platform committee, was gotten over by a resolution appended to the platform recommending to the national convention that the solution of the traffic lies in abolishing the element of profit and demanding that the exclusive importation, exportation, manufacture and sale of all spirituous liquors shall be conducted by the government or state at cost through agencies and salaried officials. The ticket nominated is as follows:

Governor, John Seitz, of Seneca county; lieutenant governor, Frank Rist, of Hamilton county; auditor of state, D. M. Cooper, of Athens county; attorney general, R. M. Smith, Summit county; treasurer of state, Henry Wolf, Cleveland; supreme judge, Judge Alfred Yaple, Hamilton county; school commissioner, J. E. Peterson, Green county; board of public works, J. S. Borror, Franklin county; dairy and food commissioner, W. J. Weaver, Portage county.

[Mr Seitz is 62 years old and was elected as a democrat to the state legislature in 1870. He was elected to the state senate in 1872 and 1874. In 1883 he was nominated for congress on the greenback ticket, for governor on the greenback ticket in 1885, and in 1887 for governor on the union labor ticket.]

SIX LIVES LOST.

BOSTON, Aug. 10.—Disaster overtook a pleasure party out sailing in the harbor Sunday afternoon and six lives were sacrificed. John Burk, a carpenter, living on Gates street, hired a 14-foot sailboat, canoe rigged, and took out for a sail his three children, aged respectively 14, 10 and 8 years, and his niece and nephew, Annie and James Carmody, aged 11 and 13 years. After sailing a mile they put ashore, Burk going on land after some candy for the children. While there he met three friends, James Ballard, Thaddeus Manton and Ferguson Churchill. With these men he got to drinking and finally, at his invitation, they, too, entered the boat, making nine in all, and the boat was slowly pushed before the light easterly breeze. When it became necessary to come about at the pumping station at 4 o'clock p. m. the men, being befuddled, crowded over to the lee side of the boat, which capsized. The water at this point is not very deep and the mast of the boat projected out some distance. To this all hands clung. It was over half an hour before help could reach them, by which time six of them had gone down from exhaustion. The boy Vincent and two men, Ballard and Churchill, were saved. Burk and the remainder of the family perished.

"It is now my privilege and pleasure and duty to present you your commission, and, in doing it, I desire you will take with it my best wishes, as I am sure you have the best wishes of not only the representative comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, but of the entire body throughout the length and breadth of the land for a successful administration, filled with pleasure and prosperity. I now hand you the new flag of the Grand Army of the Republic. We have marched under the old flag now for a quarter of a century and it is so worn that it is not safe to use it any longer, and on the silver anniversary of our order this new one has been obtained. I am sure it will be safe in your hands, because behind you will be 500,000 men who will stand by you and by this flag."

In response the new commander in chief said:

"Comrades, let me briefly say I accept this office with a heart of gratitude to the comrades who have chosen me for this high position, and I hope that when I have reached the end of my term of office I may leave as clean a record behind me as the comrade who has served you during the past year."

The Eloquent Pastor of the First Baptist Church of Chicago, Does Suffering Humanity a Great Service by Telling His Experience with a Great Family Medicine. Read:

"An almost fatal attack of La Grippe last winter left me with nasal Catarrh and such susceptibility to bronchial irritation that the slightest exposure would develop it, and a very little effort in public speaking would result in a distressing hoarseness. "Besides, I suffered with dyspeptic troubles, notably what is popularly known as 'heartburn,' from which I found it difficult to obtain relief. I was induced by a friend to try KING'S ROYAL GERMETUER, and it gives me great pleasure to say that its effect has been as magical as 'Koch's Lymph', is reputed to be, which is also a 'germ destroyer,' though taken in a different way. Catarrh, bronchial irritation, and dyspepsia have all disappeared before one bottle of the GERMETUER has been used.

"One of my sons, who has long been a sufferer from Catarrh, has received like signal relief from his old enemy. P. S. HENSON.

WITH FLYING FLAGS

HOW DETROIT WAS DECORATED FOR THE GREAT OCCASION.

SOME BEAUTIFUL ARCHES BUILT.

Detroit was in fitting holiday attire for welcoming the nation's defenders. The streets were gorgeously decorated, citizens vieing with each other in adorning their places of business and their houses with emblems of patriotism and mottoes giving greeting and welcome to the visitors. Never before has a city where an encampment has been held been decorated to such an extent as the city of Detroit. The business blocks were nearly hidden with banners, streamers and festoons of bunting, while the red, white and blue adorned nearly every dwelling. Jefferson avenue from the Third street depot eastward presented one bewildering panorama of brilliant colors. Flags and streamers hung from every window, while festoons greeted the eye at every available place. Pictures of the heroes of the conflict were to be seen everywhere, those of Lincoln, Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Michigan's favorite sons Custer and Alger, being the most common. Here and there a picture of Washington or some other of the revolutionary fathers was given a place, and political portraits—Harrison, Cleveland, Blaine, etc., were also shown. Many paintings of battle scenes were also to be seen. Woodward avenue and Griswold street were similarly decorated.

One of the most striking features of the decorations was the several archs that had been erected along the line of march taken by the grand parade. There were four of them, one on Woodward avenue at the entrance to the Grand Circus Park, one at the Fort street corner of the city hall and another at the Jefferson avenue bridge, and the tower at the intersection of Jefferson and Woodward avenues.

The arch across Fort street, called 'the "Arch of Peace," was an imposing structure. It was a good imitation of marble and had an air of solidity about it that would deceive even a close observer. On the east side of the arch the keystone bore the inscription, "Their Prowess Brought us Peace, Undying be Their Fame," and on the west side, "Cheerily on, Courageous Friends, to Reap the Harvest of Perpetual Peace." The top of the arch was filled with tropical plants while during the procession forty-five young ladies, dressed to represent the different states, stood in the balconies between the columns and strewed flowers on the marching lines below.

The arch on Woodward avenue, called the "Triumphal Arch," was an imitation of the triumphal arch of Rome. Over the arch were stars, crosses, crescents and other symbols, while stacks of muskets rested against the pillars of either side. At the top of each pillar was a cannon, while stands of colors were arranged about the arch to complete the ornamentation.

At the intersection of Jefferson and Woodward avenues was a lofty tower, the most imposing of these structures. On the pinnacle stood a soldier, flag in hand, while at the corners of the foundation were large eagles with outstretched wings. The sides of the tower were ornamented with battle paintings, while the whole was richly decorated with flags and colors and wreathes of evergreen.

The fourth arch, the smallest of the number was at Jefferson avenue bridge. It was called the "Turretted Tower." On the top of this soldiers were placed for firing the salute at the approach of the procession.

In Grand Circus park were many designs in the way of floral and foliage decoration that had been the admiration of visitors to the city for several weeks. The most conspicuous specimen among them was a triangular pyramid ten feet high on the west side of the avenue near the fountain. On one side of the pyramid was a portrait of Washington in flowers, on another a stand of arms and on the third the letters G. A. R. in a monogram. The designs were all worked in colors and the effect was very pleasing. On the east side of the avenue were several designs of the army corps in which Michigan was represented. The second corps was represented by a clover leaf, the eighth by a six pointed star, the eleventh by a green and purple cresent, the nineteenth by the Maltese cross and the sixth and sixteenth by Greek crosses.

The city hall was brilliantly illuminated at night by numerous electric lights placed there for the occasion. The lights were made to form various mottoes, the front of the building bearing the words "Hail! Victorious Army." In the center of the building and between two immense American flags appeared the well-known badge of the Grand Army, an immense eagle holding in his talons the national colors.

Belle Isle Park also came in for its share of attention from the decoration committee. In front of the casino was a beautiful arch of green and purple. On one side of the arch were the words, "The Union Forever," on the other, "Welcome," and on the columns "1861" and "1891." The names of Lincoln, Grant, Sherman, Logan, Garfield and Williams appeared in red letters on the green plat around the base of the arch. There were many other pretty designs of loyal symbols, that had been worked out by the landscape gardeners.

The committee on decorations were heartily supported by the citizens in their efforts, and the good opinion of the city that the vets will carry away with them has been greatly heightened by the elaborate and tasty manner in which the city had been decorated for their reception.

THE GRAND ARMY.

The Grand Army of the Republic was organized soon after the war by Dr. B. F. Stephenson, a physician of Springfield, Ill., who had served during the war as surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry. Post No. 1 was organized at Decatur, Ill., on April 6, 1866, with Gen. Isaac C. Pugh as post commander, and Capt. Kannan as adjutant. Soon after this post No.

DR. B. F. STEPHENSON, FOUNDER OF THE G. A. R.

2 was organized at Springfield with Gen. Jules C. Webber as commander, Gen. Webber, Col. J. M. Snyder, Maj. Robert M. Woods, Maj. Alfred A. North, J. T. Bishop and John S. Phelps freely gave their time and service in assisting Dr. Stephenson to spread the order in Illinois and the adjoining states. The first national encampment, or convention, as it was called at the time, was held at Indianapolis, November 20, 1866. There were present representatives from posts in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Missouri, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and the District of Columbia. Gen. John M. Palmer presided. Gen. Stephen A. Hurlbut, of Illinois, was elected commander-in-chief; Gen. Thos. B. McKean, of New York, senior vice, and Dr. B. F. Stephenson, adjutant-general. The rules and regulations originally issued contained a preamble and twenty-three articles, setting forth the objects of the order as then for the first time enunciated. These were: 1. To preserve and strengthen those kind and fraternal feelings which bind together the soldiers, sailors and marines who united to suppress the late rebellion and to perpetuate the memory and history of the dead. 2. To assist such former comrades in arms as need help and protection and to extend needful aid to the widows and orphans of those who have fallen. 3. To maintain true allegiance to the United States of America, based upon a paramount respect and fidelity to its constitution and laws; to discountenance whatever tends to weaken loyalty, incites to insurrection, treason or rebellion or in any manner impairs the efficiency and permanency of our free institutions, and to encourage the spread of universal liberty, equal rights and justice to all men. 4. Membership was thus defined: Soldiers and sailors of the United States army, navy or marine corps who served between April 20, 1865, in the war for the suppression of the rebellion, and those having been honorably discharged therefrom, after such service, and of such state regiments as were called into active service and subject to the orders of United States general officers between the dates mentioned. No person shall be eligible who has at any time borne arms against the United States. These regulations have been materially changed since that time, which is also the case with the ritual. The second national encampment was held in Independence hall, Philadelphia, Jan. 15, 1869; the fourth at Washington, May 11, 1870; the fifth at Boston, May 10, 1871; the sixth at Cleveland, May 8, 1872; the seventh at New Haven, May 14, 1873; the eighth at Harrisburg, May 18, 1874; the ninth at Chicago, May 12, 1875; the tenth at Philadelphia, June 30, 1876; the eleventh at Providence, June 26, 1877; the twelfth at Springfield, Mass., June 4, 1878; the thirteenth at Albany, June 17, 1879; the fourteenth at Dayton, O., June 8, 1880; the fifteenth at Indianapolis, June 15, 1881; the sixteenth at Baltimore, June 16, 1882; the seventeenth at Denver, July 23, 1883; the eighteenth at Minneapolis, July 23, 1884; the nineteenth at Portland, Me., June 24, 1885; the twentieth at San Francisco, August 4-7, 1886; the twenty-first at St. Louis, September 28, 1887; the twenty-second at Columbus, O., September 12, 1888; the twenty-third at Milwaukee, August 28, 1889; the twenty-fourth at Boston, August 11-15, 1890, and the twenty-fifth at Detroit.

The committee provided free accomodations for upwards of 35,000 visitors, the largest number ever provided for in this manner at any encampment.

A DIAMOND MEDAL.

Commander-in-Chief Veazey Handsomely Remembered.

Commander-in-Chief Veazey was presented with a magnificent diamond badge at National Department headquarters, at the Hotel Cadillac, Tuesday morning. The presentation took place in the large committee room of the hotel, in the presence of the commander's staff and a few privileged spectators. The presentation was made by ex-President Rutherford B. Hayes, who addressed Gen. Veazey as follows:

WHEELOCK G. VEAZEY.

"Commander-in-Chief Veazey: The comrades who with me have been honored with places on your staff, have assigned to me the agreeable duty of presenting to you this badge. We ask you to accept it as a token of the esteem, the admiration and the affection in which you are held by ourselves and by our comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic. It will, we trust, bring present joy to you and your family. It will remind you and them of the honorable part you bore in the great event of this age—in the sacred and stainless war for union and liberty.

"During your term of office you have, as you promised when you were chosen, amply kept between yourself and your comrades, not only the touch of the elbow but also the touch of the heart. Our hope is that this simple gift will remind you pleasantly of the events and scenes and comradeships of the great conflict—that it will recall the famous day at Gettysburg, the day of your opportunity, of your memorable service and of your signal triumph.

"It will also we hope, be to you a well-spring of gratifying meditations upon the future. In after times those who bear your name and share your blood will rejoice as they look upon this emblem—their prized family heirloom—and be filled with gratitude that Providence allotted to them the inspiring privilege of tracing their origin to one who, in his young manhood, was a splendid figure in the decisive battle of the Divine war, and who stood faithfully and bravely by Abraham Lincoln from its beginning to its end.

"Our wishes and our prayers are that your life may be long and happy in the land, which in the day of its deadly period you did your part to save."

After acknowledging his appreciation of the gift in a few fitting remarks Gen. Veazey was about to put the badge away in its case, but in obedience to cries of "put in on," finally allowed it to be pinned upon his breast, where it remained all day. The badge is of the same size and style as the regular G. A. R. badge, except that it is composed of solid gold, with Gen. Veazey's corps badges represented by blue and yellow stones, and a row of four big diamonds on the cross-bar which supports the ribbon.

COMMANDER EATON.

He Enlisted When a Boy and Served Through the War.

C. L. Eaton, commander of the department of Michigan, G. A. R. was born in Orleans county, N. Y., April 2, 1846. At the age of 16 he entered the service for the period of three months in the Sixty-seventh Illinois infantry, serving in that and the Seventy-fourth Illinois and the Twenty-third New York artillery until July 14, 1865. Commander Eaton came to Michigan in 1867. He was a member of the legislature of 1889-90 and is at present a member for 1891-92. During the session of 1889 he was chairman of the house committee on military affairs. His comrades by a unanimous vote elected him department commander at the encampment held at Muskegon in March last. He is deservedly popular in the order and is an indefatigable worker in its interests.

C. L. EATON, DEPARTMENT COMMANDER, MICHIGAN.

The following is a complete list of the men who have held the position as commander-in-chief of the G. A. R. and the periods during which they occupied the office. It will be noticed that Gen. R. A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.

Dr. A. M. Spaulding of Grand Rapids, Mich., says: "I prescribe Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup in my practice, and unhesitatingly recommend it. It operates upon the liver, kidneys and bowels, destroying the poison in the blood and tissues. It is a grand tonic and appetizer, and for a diseased stomach or dyspepsia, has no equal."

We are sorry to learn that Miss Ella Swift has tendered her resignation to the Clinton School Board, as she has decided to remain in Virginia City, Montana, where she has been spending the summer. Miss Swift has filled the position of teacher in the 2nd Primary department for several years, in a manner that has been highly satisfactory to the patrons of the school, and we voice the public sentiment when we say that it is with a great deal of regret that her resignation is accepted.

The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter McMahon died last Thursday night after an illness of many months. She had la grippe last winter and had not recovered from that when she came down with the measles, which left her in a very weak state. The best efforts of different physicians were futile and the parents were forced to accept the fact that their child had consumption. Mr. McMahon has been an invalid for years and the little child was his one ray of sunshine. The funeral was held Saturday at 9:30 a. m., at St. Dominic's church.

I SUFFERED from acute inflammation in my nose and head—for a week at a time I could not see. I used Ely's Cream Balm and in a few days I was cured. It is wonderful how quick it helped me.—Mrs. Georgie S. Judson, Hartford, Conn.

Being a sufferer from chronic catarrh, and having derived great benefit from the use of Ely's Cream Balm, I can highly recommend it. Its sales are far in excess of all other catarrh remedies. —R. Franken, Druggist, Sigourney, Iowa.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

EXORBITANT LICENSES.

An Important Decision Rendered by the Supreme Court.

The supreme court has handed down an important decision in the Bay City case of Dwight Brooks vs. Daniel Mangan and Samuel Catlin, in which it is held that hawkers and peddlers cannot be charged exorbitant license fees, as it makes unjust discrimination between residents and non-residents of a city, practically exempting residents from its provisions, while imposing unjust and unreasonable license upon non-residents. It was also held, in another decision, that officers could not be held for damages for false imprisonment as long as they had acted in good faith. The bench held that it was inevitable, under any criminal proceedings, that innocent persons will sometimes be arrested.

An Unlooked for Crop.

Ambrose Clouse, a farmer residing near Bronson, cut a crop in his field the other day that had been planted by other hands than his. While cutting wheat with a new binder he ran onto nearly a hundred pieces of telegraph wire that had been cut about as long as the wheat was high and set up in the field. He did not find it out until he had ruined his machine. A short time ago Clouse prosecuted some fellows for stealing his chickens and they said then they would get even with him.

Health in Michigan.

Reports to the state board of health by fifty-one observers in different parts of the state for the week ended August 1 indicated that puerperal fever, inflammation of the brain, dysentery and scarlatina increased, and typhoid fever, pneumonia and bronchitis decreased in area of prevalence. Diphtheria was reported at twenty-four places, scarlet fever at twenty-seven, typhoid fever at eighteen and measles at ten places.

Knights of Labor.

A Bank Suspends.

The banking house and store of E. J. Landers, at Imlay City, was closed by chattel mortgages. One for $2,000 runs to W. B. Churchill securing county funds; another for $1,345 runs to George Titus, and a third runs to Chester White. This would cover all the assets, leaving depositors in the cold. The event had been expected for some time.

Suicide of the Bride of a Month.

Mrs. Orville Quick, of Jackson, married one month ago, committed suicide by taking morphine. She was Mr. Quick's second wife, and he had left her, saying that when she did right he would again live with her. Mrs. Quick staggered onto the street after taking the drug and told her sister what she had done, saying she wanted to die.

An Old Saw Mill Burned.

The Wilson saw mill at Muskegon was burned to the ground. The fire originated from the refuse burner. The loss was in the neighborhood of $35,000, with an insurance of about $20,000. About seventy-five men were thrown out of employment. The mill was one of the oldest on the lake, having been running since 1868.

The birthday party given to celebrate the 86th anniversary of Mrs. Penthi's birth at Manistee was a novel affair inasmuch as it was attended by 24 women, the youngest of whom was 60 years old and the eldest 87.

Why marriage is sometimes a failure is an interesting and important question to all; and everyone, married or single, should read the absorbing story by the poet-novelist, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, written in that popular author's most forcible style, which is published in the September number of that always bright periodical, Demorest's Family Magazine. It contains, besides, an abundance of other good reading matter, just the sort that one enjoys at this season.

The Sunday School picnic at Devils Lake Tuesday, was largely attended and proved to be a very enjoyable affair. Six coaches were filled at Tecumseh, and the train was taken around to Manitou Beach. There the crowd scattered, many going to Beardsell's, others to Imerson's Hotel and some remaining at Manitou. Most of the company indulged in a basket dinner, and the afternoon was passed in boating and other amusements. The train returned on regular schedule time, arriving here about seven o'clock p. m.

"JUST AS GOOD,"

Say some dealers who try to sell a substitute preparation when a customer calls for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Do not allow any such false statements as this induce you to buy what you do not want. Remember that the only reason for making it is that a few cents more profit will be made on the substitute. Insist upon having the best medicine—Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is Peculiar to Itself.

CONDITION VS. THEORY.

Those who are in ill-health are confronted by a condition, not a theory, although there are numbers of people ready and anxious to theorize about it. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred S. S. S. will do the work of renovation. In cases of indigestion, loss of appetite and general debility this wonderful medicine acts with almost miraculous certainty. It restores the activity of the liver, purifies the blood and builds up the system. As a tonic for young and old it is without a rival. Though it is powerful in its effects, the youngest or the oldest can take it with the most beneficial effects. S. S. S. has behind it a record of half a century, and is more popular as a household remedy today than ever before.

Hot Weather

Drives Women to their Senses.

It's the time when they must have something to lessen their work. It's the time when they must have Pearline. Nothing else saves as much or does as much, in all washing and cleaning—and it's done without harm.

Soak your clothes in Pearline and water—no soap—Pearline contains all the soap necessary—two hours, or over night, rinse well, and they will be clean—particulars for this way of washing on every package. Hot weather increases the number who use Pearline—but in cooler times there's no falling off.

It's easily explained, you can drive women to use Pearline—some of them have to be driven to it. But, once they've used it, you can't drive them into giving it up.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 190 JAMES PYLE, New York.

AN EXCELLENT SCHOOL at which to secure a good literary, business or musical education. It meets the needs of young men and young women who know the value of time and are not afraid of earnest work. In addition to many special departments, it gives thorough instruction from the elementary English branches to complete scientific and classical courses. It is located in a pleasant village, with no saloons or gambling places, (the saloons were abolished by an 86 per cent. vote), and its beautiful buildings, its picturesque grounds, its admirable furnishings and equipments, and its strong and well selected faculty, make it a desirable school home. It has the best Business College in connection with any Normal School in the country; its Musical department is noted far and near for its high-grade instruction, its choruses, quartettes, band, orchestra and similar organizations; while its Penmanship, Shorthand and Elocutionary departments, and its Normal, Scientific, Philosophical and Classical courses stand abreast of the times in all that is new and good in education. $27 pays tuition, board and room rent for one term of 10 weeks, $56 pays the same for one year of 40 weeks. The Trustees have just granted to the President a ten years' lease, expiring in 1901. Let earnest workers investigate this school. Write for the "gift-book" and catalogue. Address the President, Irve Osborn has commenced the foundation for his warehouse. It will be one hundred feet long by about forty feet wide. Now, why can't Britton have an elevator, too?

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society realized $20 clear cash from their ice cream social at the Exelby House parlors last week. Just keep on, ladies, and you'll surely get a walk to the church.

George Clark has a new Gendron Safety bicycle and it doesn't throw him, either. He says Earl Lenardson didn't cheat him a bit, and anyone that wants a wheel can do no better to go away from Britton.

The first wool ever shipped from Britton was taken in by Sleeper, of Adrian, last Thursday—a good big carload. Let more carloads follow. Britton is as good a shipping point as any one could wish for and Mr. Sleeper and his hustlers, Prindle & Underwood, always pay all anything is worth.

What is the matter with our library association? There was to be a meeting the first of July to organize and do something, but the library will be forgotten entirely if the citizens don't wake up and show a little business. The Dramatic Club has done all that has deen done so far. Now let the older ones, with those subscription papers, do something besides talk. If we are to have a library in ten years it's high time some one was getting a move on themselves.

"JUST AS GOOD,"

Say some dealers who try to sell a substitute preparation when a customer calls for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Do not allow any such false statements as this induce you to buy what you do not want. Remember that the only reason for making it is that a few cents more profit will be made on the substitute. Insist upon having the best medicine—Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is Peculiar to Itself.

We don't know whether or not Ed. Pawson takes the HERALD, or if rumor carried the news to his poultry yard. Any way, one of his male Guinea fowls is trying to emulate our friend—"Franklin Facts'" motherly gobbler. Six eggs, however, will not do for him; he is spreading himself over twenty-five. By the way, said gobbler hatched, but could not raise his family. His intentions were good, but, like many another of his "sect," he was awkward and blundering about carrying them out. His feet came down in the wrong place and the brood suffered.

The White Rose club of Franklin held a lawn social at the home of Mrs S. N. Munger Saturday evening. The yard was brilliantly lighted and the tables gay with flowers, which, added to the happy groups of people, young and old, made up a scene of festivity and beauty worth being there to see. Ice cream and cake were served and the proceeds of the evening amounted to nine dollars, most of which goes to the State organizing fund of White Rose clubs. This pioneer club is doing a good work and the interest does not abate in the least. It is earnestly hoped that when Mrs. Baxter visits Lenawee she may stir up other towns to organize also. Remember, no other society can fill the place of this one, and, wherever it is not organized, there must be a gap in the ranks of the temperance army. Next meeting in four weeks, at L. E. Taylor's.

THE NEVER FAILING REMEDY.

Those who continue to suffer with contagious blood disease, after having gone through the usual course of treatment, have one consolation: They can fall back on the never-failing specific, S. S. S. Sometimes they suffer from the disease itself, and sometimes from the effects of the treatment itself, especially if mercury and other mineral poisons have been employed. In either case they can find an infallible remedy in S. S. S. It would be better to take advantage of the remedy before undergoing other treatment, as thousands have done and are doing, but it is not everybody's foresight that is as good as his hindsight.

GOOD FORTUNE OF A LAND BROKER.

In Feb. 1889 I commenced to use Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters for inflammatory rheumatism from which I had suffered for three years. My joints were swollen so that I could hardly walk, but three bottles of the Syrup, and the Plasters applied to my limbs, have cured me. C. R. Nicholson, Manson, Iowa.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

Puck of August 19th contains No. 4 of the series of cartoons called, "Cranks of the Day." The one in this number is entitled, "The 'Correct Thing' Crank." The doings of these foolish mortals who must have the correct thing in all cases are very amusingly portrayed.

The Hillsdale Standard says that persons sprinkling lawns should be careful about turning the hose on their shade trees. It is said that a stream thus thrown against the bark penetrates it and causes rot, which will eventually kill the tree. Remember this if you do not want to kill your trees.

The next number of Harper's Weekly published August 19th, will contain full-page portraits, with biographical sketches, of the late George Jones, of the New York Times, and of James Russell Lowell. The sketch of Mr. Lowell will be written by his life-long friend, George William Curtis.

Mrs. Mary Cole, whose home is at Petersburg, came to Tecumseh a few days ago to visit friends. While here she was taken sick and died last Friday. The funeral was held Sunday afternoon and on Monday the remains were taken to Sylvania for final interment, where the husband and son of the deceased are buried.

On Tuesday of last week Len Farnsworth was taken suddenly ill with an acute attack of congestion of the lungs. He continued to grow worse and died on Sunday afternoon, having been sick only five days. The funeral was held last Tuesday afternoon. He was 42 years of age, unmarried and lived with his mother, Mrs. Durling.

O. E. Clark, of Rollin, some years ago found a wild bush on his farm which contained white blackberries, and by careful propagation he has now about a dozen vines. They are beauties and the fruit is very delicious. Mr. Clark is a strong Prohib and has christened his vines the Prohibition blackberries—The Messenger.

Without doubt Michigan never raised so much wheat to the acre as this year. Reports of fabulous yields are coming in from all parts of the county. But the line should be drawn somewhere. It is reported that A. Easlick, of Lake Ridge, has produced 160 bushels of wheat from two acres of land this season. If the statement were to come direct from Mr. Easlick, the Press would not doubt him, but at the same time would desire to be fortified against the possibility of a misgiving by taking a look at his rod-pole.—Adrian Press.

Bob Hendershot is all right yet. An item from Detroit under date of Aug. 13, says:

"The controversy which was waged so warmly during the Army encampment in regard to the claims of Robert Henry Hendershot as being the original "drummer-boy of the Rappahannock," was unquestionably settled by the receipt of a letter from the chaplain of Hendershot's old regiment, sustaining his claims in every particular. Mr. Hendershot is also in possession of other documents which clearly verify his story.

There will be a Prohibition rally in Grange Hall, South Macon, on Monday evening, August 24th, 1891, initiatory to the holding of an Institute in the near future. Addresses will be given and music rendered. An interesting meeting is anticipated. All are cordially invited to be present and take part in the way they may deem appropriate. Ladies are especially invited as sharers and helpers in the cause of Reform, and thus subdue the saloon power in our land.

By order of the Committee.

J. W. BAKER, President.

The Detroit Exposition opens Aug. 25th and closes Sept. 4th. There will be trotting, pacing and running races every day for seven days; then grand band concerts each day; balloon ascensions and daring leaps from the clouds each day; a wonderful exhibition of strange machines and novel manufacturing in full operation; a big show of electrical inventions and manufactures; the largest horse, cattle, sheep, swine and poultry shows ever seen in the West; the splendid war drama and gorgeous military spectacle of "The Siege of Sebastopol," and magnificent fire works every evening, besides hourly special attractions of all sorts.

The District Lodge of the I. O. G. T., comprising Monroe and Lenawee counties, assembled in the W. C. T. U. hall last Tuesday. Delegates were present from Adrian, Dundee, Clinton and Fairfield. Sessions were held both forenoon and afternoon and much routine business was transacted. In the evening a public meeting was held in the same hall. A short literary program was given by home talent and then followed an address by O. W. Blain, Grand Chief Templar of Michigan. He spoke for over an hour and gave an eloquent talk on the general subject of temperance. Although the weather was fearfully torrid, there was a good audience present.

The Ohio politician is supremely happy now. Both sides claim positively that their ticket will be elected without a shadow of doubt.

Blaine and Alger is a ticket much talked of now by the Republican press. We doubt whether a stronger ticket could be named by a Republican convention.

The government at Washington is running itself these days. Most of the cabinet are away on extended trips. One day last week there was not a single cabinet officer in Washington.

The N. Y. World ventures the prophecy that the Ohio sheep are so mortified at the lower price of wool under the McKinley tariff, that they will decline to vote the Republican ticket this year.

The only sure and safe method of defeating John Sherman's re-election to the Senate is to choose a Democratic legislature. There will be no "slip twixt the cup and the lip," if the Ohio Alliance shall adopt this plan.

The Farmers' Alliance of Louisiana has done a good thing by entering into a fusion with the anti-lottery Democrats. It is hoped that this combination may be strong enough to defeat the lottery amendment to the constitution.

Detroit did herself proud during the Encampment, and she intends to keep the ball rolling during the Exposition. The triumphal arches will remain intact until after the Fair is over, so that all visitors to the Exposition can see them.

Senator Brice, now in Europe, is reported to favor Cleveland's nomination. This report should be taken with a good many grains of allowance. Whatever his personal preferences may be, it would be bad taste for a man, occupying his position, to express them.

If Ohio and Iowa go Democratic this fall, the West will possess an abundance of Presidential timber of her own next summer. Campbell, Dickinson, Gray, Palmer, Boies, Vilas. What a combination could be made with these six names to choose from!

In 1865, according to Secretary Foster's figures, the per capita circulation was $20.82. On the first of August, 1891, 26 years later, it was $23.37. These figures constitute the strongest possible argument in favor of free silver coinage. Although the volume of business must have more than doubled during that period, the per capita circulation is almost the same.

The following language quoted by a Washington paper as having been used by a man close to the management of the National Farmer's Alliance is timely as well as significant: "We are in the Ohio campaign to down John Sherman, and we are as certain of doing it as we were in the cases of Ingalls and Hampton. We are not caring very much about the gubernatorial contest; it is the Senatorship we are after."

The Nashville American moralizes thusly: "And so Hon. Bill McKinley has been East after 'soap' with which to grease his way into the Gubernatorial mansion. When a Republican wants office he immediately posts off to the headquarters of the tariff barons' bureau and fills his pockets with blocks of fives wherewith to get it. The poor Democrat has nothing to depend on for success but the efforts of himself and friends and the righteousness of his cause. This is a pointer worth considering by the honest and intelligent voter."

For sometime past there has been considerable talk about the amount of money in circulation per capita in the United States; therefore the tables prepared by the Treasury Department giving the exact figures may be said to fill a "long felt want." In 1860 the amount per capita in circulation was $13.85; in 1865 it was $20.82; in 1885 it was $23.02 and on the first of January of the present year it reached the highest amount in our history, $24.10. Since then it has been reduced by the heavy shipments of gold to foreign countries, and on the first of August it was $23.37, or nearly back to what it was in 1885.

WANT TO RETALIATE.

The spirit which has been called forth in Europe by our wild McKinleyism, may be understood from some recent remarks by Herr Von Siemens, a member of Germany's world's fair committee. It is proposed by Germany to have a world's fair in 1896. In speaking of this fair Herr Von Siemens says: "The European nations are becoming aware that they must consolidate commercially as against American aggression. America is not only shutting out many of our products by prohibitive tariffs, but she also threatens our trade with the South American republics and even with Africa and Asia. Your country is young, full of natural resources, and by your enterprise, no less than by your present policy, you threaten to deprive us of our foreign trade. Power naturally makes you aggressive, and Europe must take care of her interests or else she will be pushed to the wall."

Herr Von Siemens declared himself in favor of commercial war. "If you keep on as you are doing now," he said, we shall have to go to war. We will erect a big fence to keep out your grain, your cotton and your meat. We will retaliate. I am naturally a free trader, but I believe in meeting protection with protection."

Asked whether Europe could exist without American grain, he replied: "Of course she can. We can supply all our wants from Russia or India. * * * The day will come, and come soon, when we shall have to fight against your aggressions." He declared also that it seemed to him folly for Germany to exhibit at the Chicago world's fair, "in a country where people will not buy from us."

All this, of course, is but the expression of one man's opinion; but it indicates the hostile and retaliatory feeling which the McKinley law has awakened in Germany. There are those who assert that if it had not been for the passage of the McKinley law, Germany would by this time have removed her prohibition of American pork, and would also have lowered her duties on our grain.

The observant farmer will not fail to note that the foreign feeling for retaliation aroused by McKinley is directed against our farm products. McKinley gave the manufacturers higher protection than they ever had before. His law was shaped in the interests of the manufacturers, notwithstanding the bogus protection he threw to the farmers in the shape of increased duties on products which they export in enormous quantities every year. The manufacturers get the McKinley plums, but if there is to be retaliation abroad it will be the American farmer who will suffer.

AN OLD AMERICAN INDUSTRY.

The Pig Iron Industry Is a Hoary "Infant"—We Have Made Iron More Than Two Hundred Years—A Case of Excessive Protection.

At the recent meeting of the American institute of mining engineers at Cleveland, O., a paper was read on "The First Iron Blast Furnaces in America." The furnaces referred to were built by Gov. Spotswood in Virginia between the years 1714 and 1730.

This was about 175 years ago; but the making of iron by other methods dates from a much earlier period. Works for smelting and refining iron were started at Lynn and Braintree, Mass., soon after the settlement of that colony, and already in 1645 these works were reported as "very successful."

Before the revolutionary war we were exporting iron to England, and so successful had rolling and slitting mills become in Massachusetts that the British parliament passed an act to prohibit this form of manufacture in the colonies. Curiously enough this act was declared in its title to be an act to encourage the importation of American bar and pig iron. Up to that time England had collected a duty on American pig iron; but this duty was renewed at the same time when the act was passed forbidding rolling and slitting, under the belief that it would be advantageous to both countries to have the cruder forms of iron made here and the more highly finished forms in England.

For more than 200 years, then, we have been making iron; and the industry has grown to such proportions that last year, for the first time in our history, we produced more iron than any other country. Notwithstanding, however, the great age of our iron industry and our enormous production, the industry is still treated as an "infant industry," and a duty of $6.72 a ton is levied on all imported pig iron.

This protection is given under the pretense that it is to cover the difference of labor cost between Europe and this country. But the total labor cost of making a ton of pig iron in this country, as averaged from twelve establishments recently reported upon by United States Labor Commissioner Wright, is only $6.07. Yet we impose a duty of $6.72 to cover the mere difference of labor cost between this country and others! If this were true the iron makers of Europe must pay their employes 65 cents for the privilege of making a ton of iron.

—Imports of woolen goods have fallen off since the McKinley law was passed; and some of the cheap clap-trap organs have drawn from this the "proof" that we are manufacturing more woolen goods at home. But the protectionist Commercial Bulletin, of Boston, reports this fact: "The woolen mills have been shutting down during the last two weeks, partly for the sake of repairs, but chiefly for lack of orders on heavy weights."

—In the United States there are 6 acres of farming land and 9.8 acres of other wood land per capita of the entire population, while in Great Britain each person represents only 1.38 acres of farming land and .07 of forest (i. e., seven acres of forest for each 100 persons) This difference in the density of population is persistently ignored by protectionists, who can see no cause for higher wages with us except the tariff.

CANADA FOLLOWS SUIT.

That Country Puts Raw Sugar on the Free List—Our Example Was Too Strong—Another Case of "Export Discounts."

The example of the United States in removing the tax on sugar has proved too strong for Canada to resist. The fall of prices with us of two cents a pound made the Canadian mouth water for cheap sugar, too. So strong was this desire for cheap, untaxed sugar that an extensive smuggling business sprang up in April and May. Finally our lesson in saving the tax by removing the duty became so attractive to the Canadians that everywhere the demand arose that raw sugar be put on the free list; and this has recently been done.

The effect of this measure was instantaneous, just as with us; the price of extra granulated sugar falling to 4½ cents, or about two cents a pound below the tariff price. What the effect of this will be on consumption and on the consumer is thus pointed out by the Montreal Trade Bulletin:

"The consumption of sugar in the dominion from this out will show an enormous increase, as consumers will be able to indulge in this luxury to their heart's content. The extra consumption will of course come largely from the masses who will now be in a position to patronize sweet food as they have never done before in the history of the country."

On refined sugar Canada retains a duty of one cent a pound. The reason given for this should have a peculiar interest to those republican organs which were last year so indignantly denying that our manufacturers sell their products to foreigners at lower prices than in the home market. The Canadian Journal of Commerce explains the retention of the duty on refined sugar thus: "This was necessary to prevent the Spreckels refinery [of California], which was ready to sell its surplus sugar at 3⅝ cents for export in order to reduce its stock, from flooding the Pacific coast at cut rates."

Comparing Spreckels' export prices with prices in the home market we find that granulated sugar is now selling at wholesale in New York at 4¼ to 4⅜ cents. On the Pacific coast prices are higher. For some time after the duty was reduced there was no reduction at all in that part of the country, since Spreckels holds a monopoly there and he refused to reduce prices. Later refined sugar began to be imported from Hong Kong and the Phillippine islands, and he had to make a reduction. But the fact that he is offering his surplus sugar in the Canadian market about one cent a pound lower than at home shows that there was no need whatever for the duty of a half cent a pound which our McKinleyites left on refined sugar.

AT LONDON WOOL SALES.

What Americans Buy and Why They Must Pay High Prices—A Point For the American Wool Grower.

The protection papers have found what they suppose to be the reason of the fall in wool prices. They have found that the Australian wool clip was very large, and that in consequence the prices of Australian wool have declined in the European markets. This explanation is being passed along the line to the smaller protection organs, and the farmer who believes in protection to wool is doubtless glad to have some way of accounting for his lower prices without laying the blame on the McKinley law.

But this explanation of the Republican papers is all poppycock. Some kinds of Australian wool have of course gone down in the London market, but the kind which our manufacturers buy has not declined. Owing to our high wool tariff our manufacturers can buy only certain kinds of Australian wool which shrink very little.

In speaking of American purchases at the recent sales in London, Wade's Fiber and Fabric, a journal published at Boston in the interests of our woolen manufacturing industry, says: "All accounts that we have seen, including a number of private letters, agree that for such light shrinkage foreign wools as American buyers can afford to bid for at last sales figures, if not a slight advance, are fully sustained; but that for other heavy conditioned parcels, although equally good staple, prices are materially lower."

This is in harmony with our own market reports which show that our manufacturers are now actually paying two cents a pound more for scoured Australian wool than last year.

Fiber and Fabric adds the following words which are highly worthy of the attention of our wool growers: "With wool free to our manufacturers as to those of Europe, we should be able to make them pay as we do, and the consequence would be that our mills would work up a large portion of the wool that now is imported in the form of fabrics. In this form it certainly hurts our wool growers far more than it could if imported in the raw state.

Notwithstanding the assertions of Messrs. Delano, Lawrence, and others, who assert that this country can grow every quality of wool that is needed in this country, any manufacturer who understands the demands of the consumers of our fabrics knows that, except for the imports of Australian wools, a large number of the best mills in this country could not run without absolute loss and a complete ruin of the business they have been years in building up at great expense.

—Woolen hosiery and underwear costing thirty cents a pound started out 100 years ago with a protective duty of 5 per cent. These goods have gradually climbed up the protective ladder till now, McKinley having put on a duty of over 200 per cent. When do stockings cease to need protection? Is this a decent way for our stockings to celebrate a century of protection?

—The Pennsylvania manufacturers take all they can get. They are now buying Lake Superior ores $1.50 a ton less than last year, freights are less by 80 cents a ton, and wages are lower, yet the protected pig iron makers made no corresponding reduction in their prices.

An Instructive Table.

The Democratic voter and the Democratic farmer should keep this table pasted in his hat to show to his Republican neighbor whenever they meet. It is the final argument addressed to the wool manufacturers by the Protection leaders to show them why they should believe in Protection.

It is a mistaken idea with many manufacturers that foreign prices of wool are necessarily lower than home prices under Protection. They average higher. They would be much higher but for a large and certain domestic supply. The following table is instructive:

	Foreign average price of all wools at port of exportation without duty. Cts., lb.	Average price of all-American wools at the farm. Cts., lb.
1882	31 9-10	30
1883	34 2-5	29
1884	29 1-10	26
1885	32 1-10	23
1886	32 1-5	24
1887	29 1-10	21

It is "instructive" also to the Republican farmer. What does he think about it?—N. Y. World.

Where is the Difference?

Mr. Dana's heart bleeds for Mr. Blaine, whom conspirators are seeking to make a victim. He denounces the Guiteau assassins who are providing all sorts of swift and hopeless diseases for his destruction and would drive him into a premature grave.

There is agreement with Mr. Dana on this head, but one Democrat wants to know "about that other 'brutal conspiracy' which undoubtedly exists to drive into a lunatic asylum, if not into the grave, another distinguished American who occupies almost as conspicuous a position as the great secretary of state. His enemies are just as active, as unscrupulous, as fiendishly malicious as those who are assailing Mr. Blaine. In their persecution of him all the decencies of public and even private life have been violated. Coarse ribaldry, vile insinuation, personal abuse that would disgrace the denizen of the slums have been flung at him and his household in season and out of season with a ferocity that is paralleled only in the case of Mr. Blaine."

Mr. Dana knows something of this conspiracy against Grover Cleveland. But his heart does not seem to bleed for the distinguished New Yorker.

Dyspepsia

Few people have suffered more severely from dyspepsia than Mr. E. A. McMahon, a well known grocer of Staunton, Va. He says: "Before 1878 I was in excellent health, weighing over 200 pounds. In that year an ailment developed into acute dyspepsia, and soon I was reduced to 162 pounds, suffering burning sensations in the stomach, palpitation of the heart, nausea, and indigestion. I could not sleep, lost all heart in my work, had fits of melancholia, and for days at a time I would have welcomed death. I became morose, sullen and irritable, and for eight years life was a burden. I tried many physicians and many remedies. One day a workman employed by me suggested that I take Hood's Sarsaparilla, as it had cured his wife of dyspepsia. I did so, and before taking the whole of a bottle I began to feel like a new man. The terrible pains to which I had been subjected, ceased, the palpitation of the heart subsided, my stomach became easier, nausea disappeared, and my entire system began to tone up. With returning strength came activity of mind and body. Before the fifth bottle was taken I had regained my former weight and natural condition. I am today well and I ascribe it to taking Hood's Sarsaparilla."

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

FARMERS AND PERSONAL PROPERTY TAXES.

Taxes on personal property tend to discourage industry and enterprise, and thereby to restrict production. This is obvious to anyone who will really think on the subject; and, though history demonstrates the truth of the assertion, historical proof is not needed to convince men of a fact so perfectly apparent. It is useful, however, in showing another fact, which is, that no tax on personal property has ever been equitably assessed or collected. Neither ingenious oaths nor savage penalties have been sufficient to compel men possessed of concealable wealth to report its existence to the tax gatherer; while they have promoted lying and perjury to an extent that may some day, if the process be continued, so debauch the popular conscience that courts of justice will utterly fail in their primary purpose. Putting aside, then, the chief argument against the taxation of personal property, the utter failure of the system to accomplish the objects sought by its promoters and defenders is of itself sufficient to condemn it. In fact, this consideration is the one on which opposition to the taxation of personal property is usually based. It is unfortunate that this should be so, because it necessitates an appeal to historical knowledge, which few men possess, instead of to common sense, which most men possess—using the phrase as describing that sense which is common to all sane minds.

The line of debate can not, however, be suddenly changed, and hence, under existing circumstances, the opponents of taxing personal property run against an unreasoning conviction that the taxation of personal property is not only just but practicable. The people holding this idea have never studied the facts, but as Thomas G. Shearman puts it, they base their belief upon the simple assumption that "it must be so." Many of them go further and swear by all that is good or bad that it shall be so. This is notably true of farmers as a class. They feel keenly the burdens to which they are subjected by the existing system. They see the wealth of the country concentrating itself in cities, and they propose that those holding such wealth shall pay more taxes, in order that the farmer may pay less. The wealth held by these city men is largely what is called personal property, and the farmers believe that, somehow, it can be discovered and taxed, thus relieving land from the burden now laid upon it. They imagine that they are the only land owners, and they are utterly oblivious of the fact that the concentration of wealth in cities necessarily increases city land values, and that owing to this fact nearly the whole increase in land values that has come about in the older states during the past twenty years has been in city and town lots, while the value of farm land has stood still or fallen off. The assessors of New York state have demonstrated this fact, and it is apparent everywhere to those who will really consider the matter. Some of the illustrations of the fact are startling. In Sullivan county, in this state, unimproved, timberless land is to-day worth from $1 to $3 per acre. Within a year a lot of practically bare land (from which a building had at considerable cost to be removed) sold at the rate of fourteen million dollars an acre. Yet we presume that a serious proposal to make land values the sole basis of taxation in New York state would be denounced by Sullivan county farmers as a proposal to increase their burden of taxation.

The utter folly of the views on this subject commonly held by farmers was demonstrated by the address of Thomas G. Shearman before the joint committee on taxation of the Ohio legislature, in January, 1889. This address covers the whole question, and appeals not merely to conscience and common sense but to the historical proof of the failure of all attempts to tax personal property generally or equally. Mr. Shearman, as is his wont, studied the subject thoroughly and presented figures that produced a profound impression. One table showed that in the Ohio counties containing the cities of Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus and Toledo personal property value constituted but 26¼ per cent. of the whole assessment, whereas in the rural counties of Geauga, Noble, Carroll and Monroe such value made up 32¼ per cent of the whole. Comparing the city counties with the remainder of the state, he found the proportion substantially the same. Comparing Hamilton county (which contains Cincinnati) with Medina, a typical rural county, he found that in Hamilton county personal property was valued at 24¼ per cent. of the total assessment, whereas in Medina it was 37 1-2 per cent. Further tables were given showing that the assessment on moneys and credits, and even on watches and pleasure carriages, were proportionately higher in the rural counties; while the one thing in which the cities were invariably assessed proportionately higher than the rural districts, was real estate—that is, land and buildings. He further showed that if land alone were made the basis of assesment, the farmer would be still further relieved, since a farm house costing $1,300 usually stands on land that exclusive of improvements would not sell for $15, whereas in cities the land is usually worth half as much as the building, and frequently more. Mr. Shearman could safely have made this statement stronger if he had been speaking of New York. We doubt if there are twenty buildings in lower New York that are worth more than the land they actually cover, or five hundred that are worth half what the bare land under them would sell for at auction.

Mr. Shearman explained the surprising contrasts he found in Ohio very simply. A farmer's property is not easily concealed, and his affairs are pretty well known to his neighbors. Hence his personal property is discovered and to a considerable extent assessed. In the cities, where personal property is easily concealed and men know practically nothing of their neighbor's affairs, assessors can not test the accuracy of reports made to them, and shrewd men escape from a fair assessment, leaving widows and orphans, trustees and a few others, as the only ones actually caught. If these facts had been systematically put before the people of Ohio, the eyes of the farmers there might possibly have been opened, and any prejudice they have against the single tax would have speedily vanished. Now, when farmers are getting excited over politics might be a good time for calling their attention once more to this subject.—The Standard.

The Safest Investments.

The duke of Marlborough has been making a tour of inspection through our southern states, and in a long article in the New York Herald he recently gave his impression as to the opportunities the south offers to English investors. He deprecates investments by English capitalists in enterprises in South American countries that really have "no settled form of govenment." "In America, on the other hand," he says, "you have the most stable and conservative form of government in the world." The duke therefore advises Englishmen to invest in American enterprises, and particularly in those controlled by American stockholders. There are, however, great differences among such investments, the duke explains, and he says:

"Breweries and stock yards and elevators are very fine things, so long as you can get them managed by local American boards, who have a strong share interest in them, but do not let us blind ourselves to the fact that you are really only buying good will, a four-walled factory, and a lot of beer barrels. The real value of America is in real estate, and in real estate I include not only such property as Middlesborough, but also all American railways in which you can hold an effective block of stock which will control the management. It is in this real estate of one form and another that future unearned increment of value lies. Breweries will vanish, but coal regions and railways will remain.

"You have an Anglo-Saxon race of sixty millions of people who work like beavers, developing your property, and adding to its value every day if you own real estate investments, and this is far better property than Buenos Ayres water works and Argentine Great Western, or even Buenos Ayres and Rosario or Great Southern rails, where there is nothing in the way of population, except a few million slow-going Spaniards or Italians. This is simply a common sense view of investment generally, and it seems strange that our English public do not see the advantage that is to be derived from joint enterprise with American companies, managed and directed in New York, rather than in schemes that are run from London, and where the water that gets into the concern before it ever belongs to the English public is quite colossal."

This is surely frank, and it indicates that the duke has not only "seen the cat," but that he proposes to harness the animal for the use of himself and his friends. It is in real estate, he says, "that future unearned increment lies." "Breweries," he continues, "will vanish, but coal regions and railways will remain." Invest in those everlasting sources of "unearned increment," he says, in effect, and "an Anglo-Saxon race of sixty millions of people will work like beavers, developing your property and adding to its value every day." The duke is right. This is just what those Anglo-Saxon and other millions will do until they wake up to the folly of their performance. Then they will begin throwing on the ground the burdens they now carry, and the duke of Marlborough's friends will find that the hand of the tax-gatherer is beginning to take for the public these indirect results of individual labor. Thenceforth capital will have to concern itself with four-walled factories, beer barrels and other products of industry, or go without interest. That is to say, the monopoly of natural opportunities having ceased to offer chances for profit, capital must go to work and earn any thing it gets by performing its true function, the facilitation of the production of commodities by labor. For the present the duke's advice is sound. How long it will remain so, depends on the length of time required to enable a people to understand their own rights and interests, after the truth has once been made plain.

The Single Tax Will Do It!

(The Standard.)

A Belgian firm has completed negotiations with the city of Woonsocket, R. I., which will result in their putting up a factory in that city for the manufacture of fine woolen and worsted yarns, which are now being made by them in Liege, Belgium. The factory, when completed, will employ from five hundred to one thousand hands. The Woonsocket city government is composed of men who know a good thing when they see it. They know that the establishment of this factory, and the employment of five hundred to one thousand more "hands" in Woonsocket means adding to the wealth of that city; so they have arranged to furnish at a nominal price a site for the factory, and have agreed to exempt all improvements made by the factory owners on that site for a certain term of years. The Belgians have seen the advantage contained in this offer, and are acting on it, like the shrewd business men they are. If we of New York city could make the same kind of offer to manufacturers generally, every piece of vacant land on this island would have a factory on it in a short time. But until those who are now holding our lands are made to loose their hold, we will not be able to emulate the little Rhode Island town. What will make them loose their hold so that manufacturers will rush to this island and erect factories and give employment to tens of thousands of people? "The single tax will do it."

HE IS THE BREAD OF LIFE

LESSON VIII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 23.

Text of the Lesson, John vi, 26-40—Commit Verses, 33-35—Golden Text, John vi, 34—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

26. "Jesus answered them and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves and were filled."

He reads their hearts, He sees their blindness, and that their only thought is for food for the body. Were they not very like multitudes in our own day, and like very many who bear the name of Jesus, but yet are wholly given up to laboring merely for food and raiment?

27. "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of Man shall give unto you."

We are reminded of the question in Isa. lv, 2, "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? And your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto Me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness."

"For Him hath God the Father sealed."

This is given as the reason why the Son of Man is qualified to give the meat which endureth. By comparing Eph. i, 13; iv, 30, with Acts x, 38; John iii, 33, 34, it seems to refer to His being sent by the Father and filled with the Spirit. These are our qualifications also.

28. "Then said they unto Him, What shall we do that we might work the works of God?"

He spoke of giving them enduring meat as His gift. They talk of doing something, so blind were they and so blind are we to God's way. How much had they done in the matter of being fed a little while before on the other side of the sea?

29. "Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent."

They spoke of doing the works of God, He speaks of the work of God, for it is impossible for God to work through instruments which He does not control. To believe on Him is to receive Him (John i, 12).

30. "They said, therefore, unto Him, What sign showest Thou, then, that we may see and believe Thee? What dost Thou work?"

It does not seem possible that those who had so recently witnessed the multiplication of five loaves and two fishes to feed five thousand men could ask for a sign.

31. "Our fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat."

Reminding Him that in the wilderness the people were fed with manna every day, and doubtless saying in their hearts, "You fed us yesterday, it is true, but now feed us again today, as Moses did our fathers."

32. "Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Moses gave you not that bread from heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven."

He would direct their thoughts not to Moses, nor even to Himself, but to the Father in heaven. This he always did.

33. "For the bread of God is He which cometh down from heaven and giveth life unto the world."

Bread is mentioned in this chapter sixteen times, and at least ten times it refers to the True Bread. By considering verses 32, 33, 34, 35, 41, 48, 50, 51, 58, and their context, it will be seen that He is Himself the True Bread, and that we are to eat Him, or eat His flesh and drink His blood (verses 53-56), which, by comparing verses 54 and 47, will be seen to mean that we are to believe on Him, for there are not two ways of obtaining eternal life.

34. "Then said they unto Him, Lord, evermore give us this bread."

Like the woman at the well, who said, "Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw" (chapter iv, 15), she thought only of natural water, and they think only of natural bread.

35. "And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst."

Continuing the thoughts of the last verse that He is our forgiveness, our peace, our assurance, our salvation, read such words as Eph. i, 6, 7; ii, 14; II Tim i, 12; Isa. xii, 2, and do as the people did with the words of Hezekiah, rest yourself upon these words (II Chron. xxxii, 8) and you will know the meaning of this verse of our lesson. "Hunger and thirst" is a phrase embracing all individual needs and unsatisfied desires of man, in all their variety.

36. "But I said unto you, That ye also have seen me and believe not."

"There are some of you that believe not." "Ye will not come to me." "How often would I, and ye would not." "In returning and rest shall ye be saved, and ye would not." "They despised the pleasant land; they believed not His word." "They could not enter in because of unbelief" (verse 64; chapter v, 40; Matt. xxiii, 37; Isa. xxx, 15; Ps. cvi, 24; Heb. iii, 19). Such is the sad refrain all through Scripture, while the loving, tender heart of God is seen in such words as these, "Oh, that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways! * * * He should have fed them also with the finest of the wheat, and with honey out of the rock should I have satisfied thee" (Ps. lxxxi, 13-16).

37. "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me, and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."

The last part of this verse is familiar to all Bible readers and gospel hearers, and has given rest to many a soul which, having come to Christ, has gone on rejoicing and saying, "Thank God I am not cast out, I have His word for it; and if not cast out I am cast in, I am saved."

38. "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me."

He sought not His own will, but the will of God the Father, which He delighted to do (Ps. xl, 8). He sought not his own glory, but in all things glorified God (chapter viii, 50; xvii, 4).

39. "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which He hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day."

The elect will not enjoy perfected redemption till the resurrection of the just at the coming of Christ for His saints (Luke xiv, 14; I Thess. iv, 16-18).

40. "And this is the will of Him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son and believeth on Him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day."

The Lord is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance (II Pet. iii, 9). He has provided redemption for all in the gift of His Son, that whosoever believeth should not perish, but have everlasting life (John iii, 16).

LENAWEE PIONEERS.

A Rather Sultry Day, But a Good Attendance—A Lengthy and Very Interesting Program Presented—Fourteen New Members Enrolled—Official Report of the Day.

The annual session of the Lenawee County Pioneer Society was held at Palmyra, on Tuesday, Aug. 11th. The weather was very hot and sultry and there was a smart shower in the morning, but before noon a goodly number had assembled and a basket dinner was spread in the lower room of the Grange Hall, where the meeting was held. The hospitality of Palmyra's citizens was called into requisition and the guests were all provided with a bountiful dinner. Among the old members of the Society from a distance we noted Ex-President Francis A. Dewey and his wife, of Cambridge, J. L. Remington and wife, and Wm. H. Osborn, of Tecumseh, Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Baker, of Fairfield, Alex. Richards, A. G. Hall and Wm. E. Doty, of Raisin, D. D. Sinclair and Orsamus Lamb, of Adrian. Promptly at one o'clock the company assembled in the upper room of the Grange Hall, where a large gathering listened to the literary exercises of the day.

The meeting was called to order by the President with some very appropriate and eloquent remarks. He mentioned the fact that during the last year two hundred and five of Lenawee's pioneers had passed beyond the river. His remarks on the fact that the members of the society were rapidly passing away, that one had been buried that morning, were very impressive.

After Mr. Moore's remarks the following committee was named to present names of candidates for office: Hon. Minor T. Cole, Alex. Richards and J. L. Remington.

Next followed a prayer by Rev. Geo. Humphrey.

The Grange Choir, composed of Mrs. R. J. Clark, Mrs. Fanny Mitchell, Miss Hattie Cole, R. J. Clark and W. D. Archer, sang "America," after which Hon. Minor T. Cole delivered an address of welcome. My father was a pioneer. I was born near here and have always lived here. I have lived to see Palmyra grow to a prosperous farming township. The few remaining pioneers of Palmyra are rapidly passing away. Let us treat those who are left very kindly while they are with us.

A response to Mr. Cole's address was given by Alex. Richards. Mr. Richards remarked that he did not expect to be at Palmyra to-day, but circumstances were such that he just reached there. He spoke about the hearty welcome the pioneers always received at Palmyra, and the pioneers being honored as much as the soldier boys, and that the pioneers of Lenawee county deserved as much honor as they for the many hardships they went through and suffered. He also remarked about his coming to Michigan when a child. The wild forest, the log cabin, the happy evenings around the old fire-place, sleeping in the log house and waking in the morn to find a coverlet of snow upon the bed. Which ever way you turn you will see the work of their hands in these fertile fields. Mr. Richards' remarks were received with applause.

Next followed the reading of the minutes of the last meeting by S. C. Stacy, Secretary.

Next followed a paper entitled the "Women of Pioneer Days," by Mrs. Green Smith, which we give below.

MRS. SMITH'S PAPER.

Brave, noble men and women were they who left the comforts and pleasures of homes in the east to become the pioneers of this, the then far west; and the prophetic vision of the most enthusiastic and imaginative among them, could hardly have forseen what the year '91 reveals to us. They came into the forest, felled the trees, built their rude dwellings, planted their crops among the stumps to raise what was to satisfy the hunger of themselves and families; and with rude and scanty implements of labor, they toiled and endured all the vicissitudes incident to life in the woods. Year by year the trees and stumps disappeared, their crops multiplied, new settlers built their cabins around them, and little towns sprang up, and after long years of toil, sickness and privation, they beheld the fruits of their labors in the green and fertile fields, the orchards of fruit trees, their pleasant and comfortable dwellings, and a satisfied feeling that they were instrumental in bringing about this great change. Life with them was not quite all toil and privation; at least many joyous times mingled with their labors. They had their logging and other bees, where one neighbor was assisted by others for miles around and he, in turn, rendered them like assistance.

Was a log house or barn to be built, willing hands made the task a light one, and when the fields of corn yielded their golden ears the husking bee was one of the most enjoyable of their merry makings. Now, the puffing steam engine and noisy separator take the shocks from the field, and the husking and shelling is done at once, and no notice taken of the red ears.

Faithfully did woman perform her part in those days; the dinner pot swung on a crane in the rude fire place, and a bake kettle in the corner, comprised nearly all the utensils for cooking the food of the family, which was marked by little variety, but with appetites sharpened by hard work, and stomachs to which the dainties and luxuries of to day had not brought dyspepsia; their frugal meals were enjoyed with a zest and few regrets for the absence of delicacies.

Going to mill was an event of considerable magnitude, taking sometimes many days of travel over bad roads, or none at all. Now the sack of roller process flour, and even the loaf of bread and cake, are within the reach of even country folks. Often the women and children were left sole occupants of the home when these journeys were taken, and though anxious and fearful many times, yet their cares and arduous labors left little time for anxious foreboding. The clothing of the family must be prepared by them. No five cent calico or ready-made pants, coats and vests, came to their humble homes, and the hum of the sewing machine was far in the future, as was the mowing machine and self-binder. Yet mid all their toils, hope, that anchor of the soul, buoyed them up; they were cheered by pictures of future homes, filled with the comforts and luxuries of life, with music and literature of all kinds, and the society of near neighbors and friends, which in early times was only obtainable after a walk, a ride on horseback, or possibly in an ox cart, by marked trees, over logs and by fording streams. Many a pioneer mother has told us of these visits and of their hearty welcome in contrast with the greetings of to-day, and the gentle touch of dainty finger tips. Those afternoons, or days out, were as enjoyable to them as are the crowded excursions, by rail and boat, of to-day, or the rides over smooth roads in elegant phaetons or canopy tops. But thanks to their untiring efforts in the past, with the progress and improvements of intervening days, many of these same fathers and mothers have been permitted to enjoy the comfortable and elegant vehicles of to-day.

Those times of hard toil, of close economy, of untiring energy and perseverance, laid the foundation for much of the wonderful progress and marvelous inventions of these late years. As we contrast then and now, 'twould read almost like a fairy tale, but taking year by year, we mark the gradual growth and progress of educated thought, fostered and nurtured in pioneer fathers and mothers, and given as an inestimable inheritance to their descendants, and the homes of to-day with all their culture and with our many social and educational advantages, the phenominal growth of our country and all the astonishing inventions in mechanical and scientific lines, the speed of travel, the bustle and hurry of business through our land, all reflect the courage and perseverance of those early settlers who made all these things possible unto us. And the end is not yet. We can no more foresee what a few years will show us in new discoveries and inventions, in modes of rapid transit and in the many kinds of machinery for assisting manual labor, than could the first settlers of this, one of the finest counties of Michigan, foresee the condition of things to-day. But these pioneers are dropping away. They are leaving us. Weekly, almost, is the record of some death and "he or she was a pioneer," tells the story of their endurance. May we ever revere their memories, and though their numbers are growing small, long may these gatherings form pleasant mile-stones in their onward journey.

After which ten minutes were given for new members to join the Society. Fourteen new names were added to the list. Below is a list of their names and the date they settled in Michigan:

A few remarks were then made by the President.

The Hon. Minor T. Cole then read a paper entitled "The First Settlement of Palmyra," which we give in full below:

MR. COLE'S HISTORY.

Mr. President, and members of the Lenawee County Pioneer Society:

From various sources I have had to glean information relative to the early days of Palmyra. If a correct record had been kept of our little village it would read similar to the Arabian Knights. It is much to be regretted that many facts and sketches of earlier days are lost forever.

Ezra Goff and Henry J. Paddock were probably the first active settlers in 1826. The first marriage—Elisha Franklin to Miss Lucy Noyes—the notice of which was published in the first paper issued in the county. Lyman L. Goff, son of Judge T. B. Goff, was the first child born in the township, September 3d, 1829.

Palmyra township was organized in 1834. Previous to this it was a portion of Blissfield.

Mr. George L. Crane was the first supervisor of the new town, Mr. Rollin Robinson the first constable and collector. Mr. Robinson must have performed his duties faithfully, as he was afterwards promoted to the office of supervisor, which office he held several years. Mr. Robinson came to Palmyra in the fall of 1832 and engaged in chopping wood, etc. In 1836 and '37 he assisted in building the old historic grist mill known as the "Palmyra Mills." This mill was erected by Mr. Daniels at a cost of $60,000, which was a large fortune in those days. It did a large and flourishing business, shipping at one time 60,000 barrels of flour from the opening to the close of navigation. It was destroyed by fire in 1870.

The first resident pastor of Palmyra village was Rev. John Walker. The first church stood where the school house now stands. I think it is now doing service as a barn for P. C. DeGraff.

Mr. Alonzo Mitchell settled here in 1831, and is probably the veteran pioneer. Nathaniel Gleason is not far behind. Both are living on land purchased of the government.

Mrs. Gibbs, Mrs. A. J. Harrison, and Mrs. Barzillia Harvey, I think, are living on the farms entered by their husbands. Mrs. Harrison is 83 years old, and in very feeble health; will soon pass over the river of time. (Mrs. Harrison died Sunday night, that being since this paper was written, and the funeral was held Tuesday, the procession passing the hall while the pioneers were assembled there.)

Mr. Alonzo Mitchell is 88 years old and well remembers the early days of Palmyra. He has assisted in building corduroy roads, and, like most of us, knows all about riding over them. When he came here wild game was very plentiful—deer, turkeys, wolves, with occasionally a bear to relieve the monotony. A beautiful old elm, more than three feet in diameter, in front of his home, was planted by him. The farm now owned by Rollin Robinson was first purchased by Mr. Mitchell, also land occupied by the village. The first frame house was built by his father, William Mitchell, in 1832 or '33. It is now used as a tool house by his son, Arthur Mitchell.

Mr. George Crane, father of Calvin, George L. and Benjamin, settled on the hill where now stands the old brick house, in 1833. He was chief engineer of the Erie & Kalamazoo railroad. This was built from Toledo to Adrian in 1836-37. The first cars ran on wooden stringers and were drawn by horses. In a few months strap rails were nailed on. One round trip was daily made on this road, or rather two or three days each week.

About this time Palmyra village began to boom. Visions of the greatest city of the west filled the brains of its inhabitants. Its fame spread abroad, and many came here to seek their fortunes and grow up with the "magic city." "Right this way for the Webster House!" might be heard by the enterprising clerk of a large hotel just north (or west) of the school house. Two banks were started. Yes, Palmyra had two banks once—the Lenawee County bank and the Palmyra and Jacksonburgh. Money was issued in unknown quantities, the only cost of the same to the proprietors being the printing. It was fiat money in the extreme, and with nothing to redeem it soon became worthless. Two more "wild cats" were soon added to Michigan's long list of defunct banks.

A paper read by Mr. F. R. Stebbins, at a pioneer meeting in 1879, states that the first car shops west of the Hudson River were built in Palmyra. The pioneer car builder, Mr. Thomas Hill, built the first rear entrance car in Michigan. Mr. Stebbins had the honor of making the windows for said car. The lights were about five inches square and set in thin sash. The car was thirty feet long, and for a time ran wooden rails.

Hon. C. B. Stebbins built a furniture factory here some time previous to 1837. F. R. Stebbins, a lad of 18 years, worked in the factory from 1837 to 1841. The building is now owned by Mr. Linus Van Wey and used for a blacksmith shop.

In 1836 Mr. Volney Spaulding erected a saw mill, and did a flourishing business. This was a great boon to the new village and the neighboring farmers.

Mr. Shuman Lum, father of our fellow-townsman, Wm. S. Lum, was the proprietor of the first shoe store.

A. J. Harrison, now deceased, was collector before the new town was set apart from Blissfield. The amount collected for the Palmyra portion was about eighty dollars—not enough to pay the boys now for sparrow heads, to say nothing about moles and woodchucks.

Alexander R. Tiffany, or Judge Tiffany, as he is always called, was one of Palmyra's pioneers. He was one of nature's noblemen—a very able and noted jurist. (Judge Tiffany was the author of the famous Justice Guide and a work on Criminal Law.)

Geo. E. Pomeroy and his intelligent family added greatly to the society and development of the new township. Geo. Harvey, Geo. Colvin, Lester P. Clark and Edward Underwood were the right kind of men to aid in the prosperity of a pioneer country. Their names will be handed down with respect and honor, as men of sterling worth and integrity.

Let us drop a tear over the memories and graves of our brave pioneers, who endured hardships and privations to build for themselves a home; whose sturdy blows hewed away the giant forests and laid the foundation for a prosperous farming town. Society has been blessed by their having lived. Our pioneer mothers!—we love and honor them. No less credit is due them than their honest companions, who, with them, settled together to build for our comfort and enjoyment.

Oh, Palmyra! Palmyra! That once noted and prosperous village—the pioneer of railroads and car shops—where flourished wildcat banks that issued great sheets of flat money—the home of the great jurist, Tiffany—the foundation place for young men like F. R. Stebbins and Maj. R. B. Robbins, to get a sure start in life—how have the mighty fallen! The future great city of the west has long been buried in sackcloth and ashes.

Oh! Where are the land boomers of Muskegon, Saginaw and Adrian? Can they not lend a helping hand and redeem us from our fallen condition? We will cry mightily unto them, both by night and by day. We will furnish the land, gentlemen, but you must furnish the dollars.

"Home from the Poor House" was the title of a recitation which was finely rendered by Mrs. C. R. Keeber.

Alex. Richards then arose and said that Mr. Cole's paper speaking of the early industries called to his mind an old advertisement he had seen in an eastern paper at that time, saying that on such a date a boat would leave for Palmyra, Leroy and Charlestown, the head of navigation upon the River Raisin, and also notice of lots for sale at Palmyra, the head of the navigable Raisin.

The President then made an impromptu speech of which we give an outline:

I take a great interest in the pioneer life of Michigan. Michigan fifty-two years ago was almost a continuous forest, only a few log cabins here and there, of the many who had toiled and suffered and passed over the river. Michigan has reason to be proud of many things—foundation of cities and the great work to lay avenues of to-day, all done by the pioneers of this great State. A great work to carve from an unbroken forest such a county as Lenawee. The record of this county is unparalled, not only in Michigan, but in the United States. Citizens may be proud to have lived and been a worker in this. The great war, the patriotism of our boys, it is the pride of every heart. No State in the Union sent better men than those of Michigan. Fifty-nine boys went from this township at the first call; twenty-eight of them never returned. One of the first duties of the pioneer was to establish schools. At the Exposition at Melbourn, Australia, the prize for the best system of education was awarded to Michigan. The medal received is to-day in the office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction. Among the pilgrim fathers the first building to arise was a school house, and thus we have the intelligent people of to-day.

Ex-President Dewey then followed with a few remarks: "I have never missed but one meeting of State or County meeting of the pioneer society since it was organized. I settled in Tecumseh sixty-three years ago, was a soldier in the Black Hawk war. I have kept a list of pioneers who have died in this county since the society was organized. I am proud to have been a pioneer of Lenawee county."

Then followed short remarks by Mr. Lamb, Rev. Humphrey, Wm. H. Osborn, J. L. Remington, Mr. Shaw, Mrs. Jones and others.

The President told some stories about the early days: the grand hunting, a few snake stories, the Indians in early days, (Michigan was an Indian paradise); of the old minister that first preached in Lenawee county, Rev. Noah Wells, at Tecumseh in 1825. Several others had short stories to tell, and many amusing and spicy incidents were related.

The report of the Treasurer, Rufus Baker, was then read, and showed a balance of $3.99 on hand.

The committee on nomination of officers reported as follows:

President—Thos. F. Moore.
Vice-President—Rufus Baker.
Secretary—S. C. Stacy.
Treasurer—Horace Sayles.
Executive Com.—Orsamus Lamb, J. L. Remington, Edson Walker, Wm. E. Doty, Dan'l D. Sinclair.

On motion of Mr. Lamb the report of the committee was adopted.

A motion by S. C. Stacy that a vote of thanks be extended to the citizens of Palmyra for their hospitality was carried.

Music by the Choir, "Auld Lang Syne."

A motion by Mr. Sinclair that a vote of thanks be extended to the Choir was carried.

The Benediction was then pronounced by Rev. Geo. Humphrey, and President Moore declared the meeting adjourned.

The company again gathered around the tables in the lower room and partook of a collation of ice cream and cake, which terminated the day's program in a most acceptable manner. Although the attendance was not as large as on some former occasions, yet, taken altogether, it was one of the most interesting meetings that the Society has held in recent years.

The spaning exhibition at Armory hall Saturday evening drew a good crowd of spectators. Joe Nichols of Detroit and Jno. Cook of Tecumseh were the contestants. They did not spar for points, but gave a good exhibition and were quite evenly matched. As Nichols had the advantage of forty-five pounds weight, the fact that Cook held him level was a pretty good recommend for the Tecumseh champion. We predict that Cook will make his mark as an athlete.

They Cause Loss of Life in Several Localities.

A Residence Blown Down and a Boy Killed—Other Persons Lose Their Lives by Lightning—Antics of the Wind.

DEVASTATION IN INDIANA.

COLUMBUS, Ind., Aug. 17.—A terrible wind and electrical storm swept over this county about 3 o'clock Saturday morning. There was one continued flash of lightning. At Elizabethtown, this county, the elements assumed the shape of a cyclone, and the black clouds hung apparantly near the ground, and whirled and twisted in a fearful manner. There were dazzling flashes of lightning and loud and instant reports from the electrical bolts, two of which struck the frame residence of Horace Trent and burned it to the ground. The entire upper story of the fine brick schoolhouse was torn away and the building rendered of little value. The brick residence of Charles Sisco had one end and one side blown into the street. His wife, hearing the storm, had just stepped into a frame addition when the crash came, and escaped uninjured. The 16-year-old son, Ezra, was asleep in a bed near the wall that gave way, and was buried some 3 feet in the debris and was fatally hurt about the head and breast. The father was also hurt, but not fatally. From the Sisco dwelling a good-sized mirror was carried some distance, and when found was not damaged. The stables of Mrs. Carter and James Burns were blown down and two horses in the former's barn were killed. The large grain elevator belonging to Ed Springer, the barn of Daniel Burns, R. C. Newsom's flouring-mill and the Christian church building were badly damaged, and a large number of fruit and forest trees were completely torn to pieces. A horse belonging to Ed Springer and a mule owned by Daniel Borns were killed by lightning. The damage done by the cyclone in the town cannot be estimated. Some three hours later a very angry cloud appeared in the southwest and moved east very rapidly, with continual flashes of lightning and a continued roar of thunder. When first seen by parties in this city it was very low and rolling eastward, but gradually rose before reaching here. In the center of this city there wasn't enough wind to lift one's hat off, while some shade and fruit trees were badly damaged in both the extreme northern and southern parts of the city. In East Columbus the house of Charles McCalla was struck by lightning and Mr. McCalla was so badly shocked as to paralyze his left side. About 300 yards north of the McCalla residence a cow belonging to George Monroe was struck by an electric bolt and instantly killed. A young man by the name of Carson, who was sitting in a chair in the door of his father's residence, was so badly shocked that he became insensible, and his physician thinks his nervous system has been shattered and his mind injured.

VANDALIA, Ill., Aug. 17.—In Pope township during the progress of a storm a nephew of State Senator Farmer, of this city, together with a team of horses that he was driving, took shelter under a tree, when a bolt of lightning descended, killing the young man and both horses.

DENVER, Col., Aug. 17.—Electricity flashed around Denver Sunday night, and as a result John Cunning is dead and Dan Fitzpatrick, Dan Edwards, Mike Fennells and John Tuck are badly injured.

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 17.—In Severns county the three sons of Wallace Williams, all preachers, were fatally struck by lightning.

Montana Is Rich in Flocks and Herds.

HELENA, Mont., Aug. 14.—That last winter was a favorable one for stock is proved by the returns made by the sixteen counties of Montana to the state board of equalization. They show 640,000 cattle, 1,516,000 sheep, 161,000 horses and 6,060 hogs, valued as follows: Cattle, $9,500,000; sheep, $3,800,000; horses, $4,500,000, and hogs, $27,000.

Swindling Negroes.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15.—Officials of the general land office have received information that blacklegs are making pretended sales of homesteads in Oklahoma and that locality to colored men. The department has announced that all such pretended sales are fraudulent.

Heavy Loss by Fire at Detroit.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 14.—The factory of the Henry C. Hart Manufacturing Company was destroyed by fire Thursday evening. The loss is estimated at $120,000; insurance, $75,000. Three hundred and fifty men are thrown out of employment by the fire.

The Failure Record.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—The business failures occurring throughout the country during the last seven days number for the United States and Canada 227, as compared with a total of 231 last week. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 197.

Mutilated Postals Don't Go.

PUT TO DEATH

The Gallows Brought Into Use in Missouri and in India.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 14.—Henry Henson was hanged Thursday in the jail yard in this city. The drop fell at 7:11 o'clock a. m. and death was announced a minute later. The condemned man passed last night in chatting and joking with the guards and appeared indifferent to the fact that his last hours on earth were passing swiftly away.

[Henry Henson was convicted of the murder of his wife Ida. Henson had married a widow with one child. They lived unhappily together in a boarding house which they conducted at No. 405 South Second street, Henson being of an insanely jealous disposition. On the evening of February 2, 1889, Henson charged his wife with receiving the attentions of a crippled tailor who rented apartments in the house. A quarrel ensued and after some hot words Henson took a revolver from a table drawer and started toward the woman. The latter's 13-year-old son interfered and Henson left the room. A little later he returned, placed the muzzle of the weapon against the side of the unsuspecting woman's head and sent a ball crashing into her brain. As the stepson ran from the room a second ball grazed his form. At the trial the jury, after being out only thirty-three minutes, found Henson guilty.]

LEXINGTON, Mo., Aug. 14.—Christian Young was hanged in the jail yard here at 8:17 a. m. Thursday. The body fell 6 feet and his neck was broken.

[On the night of Saturday, December 10, 1888, Christian Young, who lived with his wife and one child at Corder, Lafayette county, gave a dance and invited the neighbors. Along about 10 o'clock the supply of beer gave out and Young and two companions, Henry Hoppe and Peter Fuchs, started to a saloon a few hundred yards away to replenish their stock. On the way back the party got into an altercation with a young man named George Hart. George Ferguson, proprietor of a saloon near the scene, approached the combatants and essayed to assist Hart when Young, who had a knife in his hand, struck Ferguson in the throat. The juglar vein was severed and the man fell dead to the ground. Young claims that he was so drunk at the time that he did not know anything about it.]

SIMLA, Aug. 14.—At Manipur yesterday two of the leaders of the massacre of British officials in March last were hanged. The principal victim was the senaputty, or commander in chief, of the Manipur army, and the other was the Tongal general.

HOKE'S FREEDOM WAS BRIEF.

JOLIET, Ill., Aug. 15.—J. Finley Hoke, the former cashier of the Merchants' national bank of Peoria, was released from the penitentiary Friday. He robbed the bank of $182,000 and escaped to Canada, but was captured and sent to the penitentiary for five years, of which he has served three years and four months. He has been bookkeeper for the prison, and by good behavior gained one year and eight months. As he was leaving the front door of the prison at 4:30 o'clock, having bidden the officers good-by, he was met by Deputy Sheriff Thomas P. Haughton, of Joliet, and Cyrus E. Berry, sheriff of Peoria, who arrested him on account of embezzlement. He was taken to Peoria on the midnight train over the Rock Island road. Hoke was seen in the county jail where he was waiting for the train. He was completely prostrated and wept continually. He says that this proceeding is a persecution, and as he has nineteen more indictments to answer, his chance to spend the remainder of his life behind the bars is good.

FRIGHTFUL FALLS.

A Young Lady Meets a Horrible Fate Near Cincinnati—A Man Fatally Hurt at Tacoma, Wash.—Other Like Disasters.

HER LIFE CRUSHED OUT.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 17.—Miss Anna Haukes, of Terre Haute, whose professional name is Leroy, made a balloon ascension Saturday afternoon at Coney Island, a resort 10 miles up the river. The balloon sailed about a mile westwestward, and when 500 feet high she cut loose with the parachute. The rope of the trapeze immediately broke. The woman descended like an arrow, striking the ground on her feet and was driven into the earth above her knees. When reached her lifeless body was found mashed almost out of shape.

TACOMA, Wash., Aug. 17.—Aeronauts Woodhall and Parker have been giving exhibitions here. Saturday afternoon Woodhall was ill and Parker made an ascent. He braced up before hand on whisky, and when several hundred feet up he began to do trapeze acts, when the balloon being unsteady, he should have remained quiet. Suddenly he lost his hold and fell like a shot to the earth. Parker cannot recover. He is imbedded in plaster casts at the hospital and is barely alive. Both legs have been amputated. His partner, Woodhull, made another ascension Sunday afternoon.

DENVER, Col., Aug. 17.—A balloon ascension at Manhattan Beach, a summea resort near here, Sunday afternoon came near resulting fatally for three persons. Several thousand people had assembled to witness the ascension of the mammoth airship, which was to carry, beside Prof. King, a couple to be married in the basket just before the rope was cut. The balloon shot up in the air and at a height of 8,000 feet it encountered a storm and burst. It fell over 1 mile like so much lead. Then fortunately for the occupants of the car the silk formed itself into a parachute, thus stopping the rapidity of the fall. The three lit in a cornfield about 7 miles from the city, but with such force that they were unconscious for several hours afterwards.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Aug. 17.—James Buckingham, aeronaut and parachutist, who made an ascension at Pleasant Beach on Onandaga lake, this city, Sunday met a horrible death in the water there about 6 o'clock. The ascent was made without difficulty, and when several hundred feet up in the air the professor loosened his hold on the balloon and dropped directly over the lake. The parachute inflated with air and the descent was made slowly, but when the water was reached the parachute completely covered Buckingham, and it was thought he was unable to extricate himself from its folds. About 7,000 people were present and witnessed the fall from the balloon and the subsequent drowning.

TELL ME SOMETHING KIND.

If thou canst tell me something kind
That has been thought of me,
If thou canst lift my spirit up
To moods of buoyancy,
Then speak the words, I pray thee, dear,
However light they seem,
Withhold not from me anything
That adds to life's sweet dream.

If thou canst tell me of some one
Whom I have chanced to aid,
If thou canst point to me some spot
That I have brighter made,
Then softly whisper unto me,
In accents fond and low.
The kind truth never hurts nor harms,
But sets the heart aglow.

So come with light and warmth and cheer
To meet me every day,
Reflect to me the world's bright smiles,
And hide its frowns away.
Oh! hast thou sorrows of thine own?
Have others injured thee?
Unburden as thou wilt, thou'lt feel
My tender sympathy.

But if some cruel, heedless tongue
Has uttered words of hate,
With justice or injustice cursed
My errors, hesitate
Before thou tell'st me what will bring
But shadows in my life.
God knows we all have need of love
To calm our secret strife!

If thou canst tell me something kind
That has been thought or spoken,
If thou canst lift a spirit up
Too oft by treachery broken,
Repeat it, dear, my faith inspire,
However vain it seems;
For I would fain be trustful still,
Nor wake from life's sweet dreams.

HER COUNTRY COUSIN.

How Nick Weybridge Got Out of a Bad Scrape.

You see, it all happened this way: Nick Weybridge had been waiting at the Grand Central depot for the arrival of the western express, by which was due his old chum, Reggie Bell. The express arrived up to time, but with no Reggie therein. At which collapse of plans Nick, mightily wroth, strode for the street, with hands shoved deep in his trousers' pockets and his chin stuck out squarely in front of him like the jaw of a surly bulldog, muttering strong words about "that Bell."

"What's that about Belle?" fluted forth a sudden sweet voice. Sulky Nick looked up and beheld two big velvety brown eyes smiling into his—eyes belonging to a face that Greuze would have loved to paint, with its dainty oval, its peach-bloom cheeks, and its hair whose silken net seemed to possess a magical attraction for gadding sunbeams. The owner of the eyes and voice was, to use the language of art, a study in black and white; to speak plainly, a young woman coquettishly arrayed in a widow's semi-mourning.

"What's that about Belle? Don't you blame me, sir! Why, it's all your own fault, you horrid, impatient boy! Here you are, calmly strolling off into the street instead of waiting where I could find you, and you look as sulky as a bear with a sore head, too!"

Nick's only answer to all this was a blank stare.

"Why, what's the matter?" she went on. "You don't seem to know your own cousin?" Then, with a charming pout: "I'm surely not grown so very old and hideous, Mort, that you can't recognize me!"

Here was evidently a big blunder. Deceived by some resemblance in feature, and misled by the chance remark about Bell which she had overheard and which she took as an allusion to herself, this charming stranger had mistaken Nick for some western cousin she had come to meet. Now, if the tempted one—for the girl was really uncommonly pretty—had been a straight-walking, sober-minded young man with a modicum of conscience he would have flouted the temptation and set the lady right with a polite bow and explanation; she would have apologized—as if there were any need for apology—bowed, blushed and fled; and Nick would have seen her face no more, which would have been a great pity. So he, who in nowise resembled the aforesaid strait-laced, sober-minded young man, having no conscience to speak of, and being endued with a forehead of bronze and the tongue of the old serpent, after the first shock deliberately up and spake:

"Well, my dear," as calmly as if he had known her from a child, "I waited and waited, and not seeing you, concluded you wasn't going to turn up. But I'm awful glad to see you." Which was true. "As for your changing, why, I never saw you look so pretty in all my life." And this statement also was, as Chadband has it, "terewth indeed."

"You were very impatient though, Mort—and stupid, too. So there! But I'll forgive you, dear. Where's your luggage?"

"Oh, that'll be sent on after."

"Well, come along then; the carriage is waiting."

"Whew!" whistled Nick, under his breath. "The carriage is waiting, eh? This is a high-flyer and no mistake. Wonder who the deuce she is—for that matter who am I, too? She's a thoroughbred, evidently; s'pose the 'dear defunct' was some bloated old bondholder who married her for the sake of her face. By Jove! a spanking turnout, too. Shall I back out here? May turn out another case of 'vaulting ambition,' etc. No; I'll hold on. She can't eat me, in any case; I could eat her, though—she's quite sweet enough. Well, my rubicon is this carriage-step, and here goes to cross it," and he followed the widow into the victoria. "Wonder who on earth I'm supposed to be, though? Mort, she called me. Mort? Hum! Stands for Mortimer, Morton, and Mortuus, too, for that matter. Egad! an omen. Perhaps I'll wish I were dead when she finds out the lay of the land."

"Oh, they're all right," answered the imposter, with a vagueness perfectly touching in its infinitude.

"I should so like to see the old place again. I must try and get up there next season. How long is it, Mort, since I was last there?"

No answer from the nonplussed one.

"All right, dear; I won't bother you now, as I see you want to look at the streets, you rustic old thing, you!"

"Ha! ha!" sniggered Nick in his sleeve. "I am evidently a hayseed. New York, I see, is the promised land to me. So be it, my newly-acquired coz."

And taking the hint the wily Nick began to examine the brownstone fronts of the avenue with an interest almost suspicious in its intensity. He particularly delighted his innocent victim by the sublime ingeniousness with which he inquired, as they caught a glimpse of Central park, what "that green place was." The delight she took in tutoring his simplicity averted awkward questions. Besides, it was infinitely diverting to an old rounder—old in experience—like Nick. At last the carriage stopped before a handsome brown-stone house.

"Poor, dear Edward's sister is stopping with me, you know, but she's out to-day, so we shall be all to ourselves to talk over old times. Won't it be jolly?"

Nick hardly seemed delighted by the thought of the prospective jollity; in fact he heartily wished himself out of the scrape. But there was no retreat now; he had burned his boats. So up he went to his dressing room, ostensibly to wash off the travel-stains of a journey he had never taken, really to throw himself on a couch and rack his brains for plausible myths about people and places he had never seen.

The way of the wicked man is hard. Nick found it extremely so, and he never enjoyed a good dinner less. The inevitable examination began. "I'll try murdering 'em," he thought. So whenever he got mixed on the genealogy or personal history of any harmless person or persons he ruthlessly slew them and buried them away far out of the reach of all questions. Whole families went at a swoop; when necessary he raised an epidemic—typhoid, cholera, grip—he didn't care what, as long as he got awkward customers out of the way. Samson's Biblical jawbone was an inefficient weapon for homicidal purposes compared to Nick's "jaw," and poor Belle was in an excess of grief and amazement at the recent loss of so many friends. Finally he struck on a snag in the shape of a young lady whom he had consigned to an untimely grave—from too much cigarette smoking, quoth he, irreverently. Unluckily the fair Belle had a message from the dead in a week-old letter. Then things got worse than ever for the culprit. He got inextricably entangled in the prickly branches of the family tree—hopelessly lost in the lanes and byways of the local topography. Still, with courage worthy of a better cause and a supernatural calmness born of despair, he lied on by the carload.

"Zozo?" dubitatively. "Wonder who the dickens Zozo can be? So silly to give anyone a name like that! S'pose it's a baby. I'll chance it, anyhow!" Then, aloud:

"Oh, Zozo! Zozo's all right."

"How can you say so, when you yourself wrote he was ill, poor dear!"

"Oh, yes, of course! How silly I am! He caught scarlet fever, but he's much better now."

"What do you mean, Mort? Scarlet fever! I never heard of a horse with scarlet fever."

"Great Scott!" groaned the pseudo Mort, "here's a how-de-do! Er—er—Oh, yes. Don't you know? E—Horses often get scarlet fever, my dear, but of course you couldn't be expected to know that. Why, that bay mare father bought only last year—"

Belle started up from the table with a shudder and stared at her visitor as though at a maniac.

"You must be mad, Mort. Poor uncle has been dead these ten years. I don't understand you at all." And her frame shook with excitement.

Nick nerved his flagging wings to still higher, more cerulean flights of imagination.

"I'm awful sorry, Belle, darling" (and the villain lingered over these words as over sweet morsels); "but didn't you hear of my terrific accident? I fell down an old quarry and hurt my head very badly. Why, at times, especially when I'm fagged a bit and bothered with questions, my mind becomes a perfect blank, and I make horrible hodge-podge of everything. My head feels as though it would burst at this very minute." This last with a groan of most ghastly dimensions.

The poor girl was completely hocused, and was amazed and indignant that she had not been told of the "terrific accident" before. Then she cooed: "Poor old boy, poor old head!" so soothingly that it sent a thrill of rapture down Nick's worthless frame. And she stroked that head, hard as the nether millstone, so lovingly with her soft, plump hand that the Machiavellian one patted himself on the back, all of which only hardened him in his sin. And when she refrained from asking any more awkward questions he gloried in his successful villainy, and laid himself out to kill. And as he looked well, and talked well, it was not long before the fair widow lay—metaphorically speaking, of course—at her fictitious cousin's feet in an excess of reverence and devotion. She could hardly conceive the great change that had taken place in him since she had seen him last.

"Mort," with a grim smile, thought to himself that the next two hours, perhaps, would see even a more awful development of himself and things in general.

He put the finishing touch to his work just as he was leaving. He would have been content with a hand-shake by way of adieu, but poor Belle, with a charming pout and a most provocative raising of her blossom of a mouth, delivered herself into the hands of the enemy by pathetically remarking: "You're very mean, Mort; you haven't kissed me once yet." Nick quailed; even he was touched by this absolute trust. He felt almost inclined to blurt out the whole truth and then run for his life, but that sunny, inviting smile would have melted an iceberg; at all events, it melted his scruples, and the caitiff glued his lips to hers in a most uncousinly way—that is, if cousins kiss as cousins should. The idea that something was wrong flashed for an inconceivable moment across her mind, but flashed away as quickly, and after giving him copious but more than needless instructions as to his way home bade him to lunch next day.

"I've made an infernal brute of myself—perhaps worse. But I really couldn't help it, she's such a dainty little thing. Why, hang it, I'm over head and ears in love with her already. She'll never forgive me that kiss, though. What on earth must I do? I can't deprive the poor little woman of her newly-acquired cousin without any explanation. Heigh, ho! I must make a clean breast of it to-morrow."

With which virtuous resolution he turned in. But alack a day! Nick was a bold, bad man, and at heart quite unregenerate; so next day, instead of pleading guilty and throwing himself on the mercy of the court, as he should have done, he lapsed into error and marched into my lady's bower with a cousinly swagger, which abated the moment he saw the inmate, for there was an ominous glitter in that little woman's eye that gave him a gooseflesh. The game was up, he saw at once.

"Good day, sir," said Nemesis in a morning gown. "Kindly explain this to me." And she handed him a telegram:

"MRS. BRATHWAITE: Sorry couldn't come. Mother ill. Coming next week.

"MORT WHITTAKER."

Not that Nick read all this. He felt so ashamed of his ignominious position that the letters swam before his eyes. All he could see was a cruel finger and a contemptuous eye directed toward the door, which enunciated "begone!" more pointedly than any words could do. Nick's first impulse was that of headlong flight. Then his forensic instincts came back to him—for he was a rising young lawyer—and he resolved to make a speech for the defense. So he came to grips with Mrs. Brathwaite without more ado.

"My dear Mrs.—er—er—er—Blank" (this in the most dryly comical way that made the widow, even in her anger, bite her lips to prevent a smile, and won a hearing for Nick). "My dear Mrs. Blank, I will offer no excuse for my abominable conduct and extraordinary tissue of lies, though I have one which ought to plead powerfully in my behalf." Here he made a motion as though to point out his client, and gestured at those silent jurymen—not more wooden than many live ones—the chairs. "That excuse, madam, is your own face. Yes, madam"—and he grew aptly alliterative—"your face was my fall and will ever be my fate." Sotto voce—"Sounds like a line of poetry, and ought to fetch her." As a fact, she did seem to be softening somewhat. Then our Choate in embryo went on just picking himself up in time from starting his peroration with a "Gentlemen of the jury." "Madam, speaking frankly, I regret to have to state that I am not one bit repentant—as far as my own sin is concerned—for what I have done. In such a cause, and for such a reward as a few words from those lips, though I may say I am naturally truthful, I would perjure myself any and every moment of the day. Any man would have committed the same fault, tried by the same temptation. No man could have helped himself. Simon Stylites himself"—and he rolled off the name in the most sonorous fashion—"would have shown his own appreciation of your charms in the same way as I did if you had come up to that ascetic old party and looked and talked as you did with me."

And so on, and so on, for half an hour, ending up with patching together Viola's two sentences: "Though I am not that I played, I am a gentleman," after which came his pedigree from the first generation thereof, so that he overwhelmed the poor little woman in a torrent of words. Then, too, she was half in love with him already, and secretly admired his consummate cheek. Finally he left his card, begging to be allowed to call, having obtained her assurance that she would think over the matter of a free pardon.

Less than a week after all this came a note for him:

"DEAR MR. WEYBRIDGE:—Out of my great mercy you are forgiven. I shall expect you to five o'clock tea. Yours, etc.

"BELLE BRATHWAITE."

Nick went to that five o'clock tea, and to many other five o'clock teas and other functions at the same address. The result of all these visits is that an argument has sprung up between them. Belle has been bitten by the sacred Egyptian bug that the Bernhardt brought over, and is mad to visit the pyramids and the Nile cataracts, while Nick says that the "doing" of Switzerland and Italy is the proper thing for a newly married couple.—A. H. Sterne, in Leslie's Newspaper.

A Friendly Call.

Talking of absent-minded people, there are not many who can surpass Mrs. B. She made a call on a family, living on a certain street, and was received with much cordiality. At supper she mentioned the fact to her husband.

"How did you find them?" he inquired.

"Why, easily; they live where they always did."

"Oh, no; they have moved into another part of the city, and the people living in their old house are strangers here."

"I never noticed any difference, and I don't believe they did," said Mrs. B., smartly, and Mr. B. let the matter drop without further comment. — Detroit Free Press.

The remains were interred in the Bridgewater cemetery.

A WONDERFUL EXHIBIT.

How Carpets Were Made 600 Years Ago.

At the coming Detroit International Fair and Exposition will be a complete representation of carpet making, from its earliest history. The first scene will be an Armenian weaving carpet as it was woven 600 years ago. The family are at camp on the Arabian Plain, and surrounding the weaver are the camels from which the carpet wool is obtained, and the Angora sheep that also furnish wool. All this in real life. In the back ground is the wall city, with its mosques and minarets. Another representation is in the days of 1776, where the New England home is represented, with the wool spinning wheel 150 years old in active operation. The old rag carpet loom and weaver, in process of producing the universal carpet of ye olden time, the old fire-place and tall clock, etc., etc., making a strikingly interesting picture. This total exhibit of Gamble & Partridge, the carpet house of Detroit, is 100 feet in length. Their exhibit of two years ago was acknowledged by all who visited the Exposition to be the most interesting in the main building, but their exhibit this year will be far more entertaining than that of two years ago, and it alone will more than pay any one to go a long way to see it. They will also present to visitors a work of art of 16 pages of illustrations in half tone.

—M. J. Tremaine has Hams, Shoulders, Bacon, Lard, Pork and Pickled Pigs Feet for sale at the Tecumseh Creamery. They are splendid—try them.

Last Friday we made a trip down through Raisin. We found Jerome Green happy as usual. Called to see Alex Richards but found him away from home. Wilbur West is flourishing and has a good wheat crop this year. J. P. Schwab is running the old farm now. He has already threshed out 400 bushels of wheat and expects to have fully 800 more. It is needless to say that he is pretty well satisfied. James Lane is running the old Edmund Hall farm and evidently enjoys life. Ben Kelly is laying in a big crop of honey this season, having quit the business of shipping cattle. The drive up the Ridge road from Holloway to Ridgeway, just after the shower, was a very pleasant one.

Farmers Will Smile.

The American Agriculturist in its annual crop review to be published in the September number estimates the corn crop of 1891 at 2,000,000,000 bushels, wheat 500,000,000 bushels and oats 622,000,000 bushels, against 1,500,000,000 of corn, 400,000,000 of wheat and 524,000,000 bushels of oats in 1890. This makes the total prospective crop of corn, wheat and oats 3,122,000,000 bushels, or 28.8 per cent. greater than last year, and 14.7 per cent. over the average of the preceding eleven years. The Agriculturist estimates that for these crops the farmers will receive a total of $1,750,000,000. This is $450,000,000 more than the value of these crops in 1890 and $625,000,000 more than the average value of these crops from 1880 to 1890.

I have been a great sufferer from catarrh for over ten years; had it very bad could hardly breathe. Some nights I could not sleep and had to walk the floor. I purchased Ely's Cream Balm and am using it freely, it is working a cure surely. I have advised several friends to use it, and with happy results in every case. It is the medicine above all others for catarrh, and it is worth its weight in gold. I thank God I have found a remedy I can use with safety and that does all that is claimed for it. It is curing my deafness.—R. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn.

DETROIT EXPOSITION.

The Greatest and Best of the Year—Don't Fail to Visit It.

The Detroit International Fair and Exposition will open its third annual exhibition August 25th, and close September 4th. Its buildings are the largest, and its grounds the most beautiful, of any fair in the world, and its great fairs of 1889 and 1890, were the best and most successful. This year its attractions are still greater. In addition to the great features of the previous years, will be a race meeting upon the elegant track in the Exposition Grounds, for which $10,000 in regular purses, and $2,500 in special purses has been appropriated. These races will include trotting, pacing, running and hurdle.

The immense main building will be largely devoted to displays of curious and ingenious machinery in operation, including the manufacture of art pottery, art stained glass, cigars, clothing, art embroidery, curious lathes turning all sorts of patterns and figures in wood and metal, glass blowing and cutting, piano and musical instrument making, carpet and rug weaving, making valises, traveling bags, etc., and many other interesting manufactures.

There will be a grand flower and fruit display; the largest show of horses, cattle, sheep, swine, fowls and birds in America; all sorts of engines and machines, electrical inventions, the electrical magic fountain that was the wonder of the World's fair in Paris, etc.

The grand war drama of "The Siege of Sebastopol," in an immense special theater, with a stage 400 feet long, an artificial lake, 250 trained actors, and a corps of the best jugglers, acrobats, swordsman, and other performers, will be given nightly, and $2,000 worth of fireworks will be burned at each performance. There will be grand free band concerts daily, by the best military brass band in the West. There will be sports, games, races, athletic contests, processions and parades, and other attractions hourly; double balloon ascensions, races to the clouds and return, each afternoon—in short ten days with every hour filled with some good popular delight. Excursion rates are offered by all railroads.

Snively: Is Mr. Scadds very wealthy? Snodgrass: Is he? Well, I hear he is going to put American tin on the roof of his new house.

More Evidence.

The aged mother of our worthy physician, D. W. Loree, spent a day with the family of William R. Wilson, last week, whose age was 79 years. During the day, as is our wont in one of those good old fashioned visits, we get out the patchwerk which reminds us of olden times when we pieced quilts and laid them aside for future use. This aged sister, during her visit pieced four blocks for a quilt, and might have pieced many more if she had made an effort. Who can beat it at that age? During the day the conversation drifted into christian experience, hers being one of the longest on record, having been a member of the M. E. church since she was 15 years of age, being 79 years old, which gives her a christian experience of 64 years. We wish there were more who could give such an experience.

FRANKLIN FACTS.

James Eddy has again arrived in Franklin.

Mrs. Edward Wisner is suffering from her annual attack of hay fever and asthma.

Aunt Ann Allen has been having chills for several days in succession. Chastina Allen is also very much indisposed.

Mr. and Mrs, Alvinza Whelan started for Detroit the 23d, she for a few days' visit with John, and he will probably go on to Mackinac.

We hear that Owen Wisner has become a full-fledged M. D., and has been practicing medicine the past six months in Nebraska; also that Mrs. Ernest Wisner's health has been much improved since her residence in that State.

A letter from Mrs. John H. Davis, of Milford, brings the welcome tidings that they are well, but busy and tired, they having put a lot of improvements on their place this season, including a new house and barn. They also raise cucumbers extensively for the pickle factory close by.

OVER THE CAMBRIDGE HILLS.

Last Thursday was a beautiful day for a drive through the country, and we improved it to good advantage. Taking the early train on the Mackinaw, we arrived at Onsted about ten a. m., and the first business on the carpet was to procure a horse and buggy. This was soon obtained of W. H. Smith, and we started out at once for a "day's journey" over the Cambridge hills.

Ben Laur is still running the old farm, where he has lived for so many years, and time seems to make but little impression upon him. He had thirty acres of wheat this year, which yielded a bounciful crop. One five-acre field turned out 41-1-4 bushels to the acre. His bees are giving him a good harvest this year also.

Turning westward we drove to Robert Wooden's farm, where we found the whole family at home and a gang of threshers also. Frank Darling is running the farm now, as he has been for several seasons past. Frank had twenty-eight acres of wheat this year and it was turning out finely. We took dinner with the threshers and laid in enough roasted chicken to last three days.

After a nice shower, which laid the dust, we proceeded northward, and our next halt was at E. Newton's, on the old Allis farm. Mr. Newton has run this farm, consisting of 160 acres, for the past fifteen years. He had 750 bushels of wheat this year from thirty acres. He has a fine young peach orchard of 400 trees, which came into bearing this year, and will yield at least 100 bushels of fruit.

Proceeding on northerly, we drove around Dewey Lake and halted at Albert F. Dewey's place. He has one of the finest farms in Lenawee county. He owns 160 acres of land north of Dewey Lake, his original farm, 156 acres adjoining on the old Dewey homestead, and 106 acres of wood and pasture land in a separate parcel. He thus manages 422 acres of land in Cambridge. He has a fine collection of farm buildings, and if he doesn't enjoy life it is his own fault.

We then drove on to the Junction and halted at C. H. Dewey's store. Found him at home and well. He feels his recent affliction very seriously, but is attending to his business avocations as usual. The Junction store seems to be thriving under his management.

A short call at F. A. Dewey's found him at home also. The latch string is always out at his house and he always has a welcome for the pioneers. We hope he may retain his health and activity for many years to come.

We then drove back to Onsted, arriving there just in time to dodge another shower. Smith's pony and road cart did good service that day. Mr. Smith himself is selling agricultural implements this year as usual. He also owns a thresher in company with Henry Marr. This machine is turning out a heavy business this fall, and was the machine in use on Frank Darling's farm. Mr. Marr still runs the old farm east of the Junction but gives his time to threshing each fall.

J. W. Russell still runs the wagon shop at Onsted, and seems to be one of the fixtures in that town. He was just completing the work on a two story peach wagon for Robert Sherrard to use in taking his peach crop to market. Mr, Sherrard has one of the best peach orchards in town, which is bearing an immense crop this year. A lack of time alone prevented our visiting his farm.

M. P. Wemple is still buying grain at Onsted. With the big crops in that vicinity this fall, he anticipates a good season's trade in his line, and there is't much danger of his being disappointed.

Fred Desermia still runs the hotel and he understands his business too. Everything about the house is as neat as wax work, and the landlady sets an excellent table. It is no flattery to say that it is one of the best kept village hotels in this section of the State.

J. E. Gibbs runs the north side store and is evidently leading the trade at present. He has a good stock of groceries and notions, and the post office islocated in his store. The latter is in a separate room and yet connected with the store proper. This is a very convenient arrangement, both for himself and the patrons of the office.

We took the evening train for home, and arrived safe and sound, well pleased with the day's trip.

I have been a great sufferer from catarrh for over ten years; had it very bad could hardly breathe. Some nights I could not sleep and had to walk the floor. I purchased Ely's Cream Balm and am using it freely, it is working a cure surely. I have advised several friends to use it, and with happy results in every case. It is the medicine above all others for catarrh, and it is worth its weight in gold. I thank God I have found a remedy I can use with safety and that does all that is claimed for it. It is curing my deafness.—R W Sperry, Hartford, Conn.

The late bulge in the price of wheat was caused in great measure by speculation. But the farmers can endure this kind of speculation with complacency.

What the farmers need most of all is lighter taxes, and the only sure method of obtaining this relief is by reducing the tariff and reducing government expenditures.

Sugar certificates advanced seven points last week. It was caused by a report that Claus Spreckels has finally come down and consented to join the sugar trust.

The Pennsylvania Republicans, in state convention last week, gave President Harrison a very black eye. The way Quay's convention whooped it up for Blaine was a caution.

The politicians are still of the opinion that the Alliance movement isn't going to be much of a shower, after all. But the Alliance keeps right along increasing its membership, just the same.

If Major McKinley would raise his campaign fund down in Ohio by assessing the new tin plate mills that have grown up under the fostering care of the McKinley act, no one could reasonably complain.

There are two things which the farmers are seeking more light upon: The drop in the price of wool and the rise in the price of woolen clothing since the McKinley bill became a law. Will Major McKinley please enlighten them on this point?

That is a pretty story which comes from New York of how "the little tots, all the way from five to ten," who gather for play on the doorsteps of Mr. Cleveland's Madison avenue home, now closed, have a nick-name for the ex-President, "Mr. Tariff." Even the babes of America have a vague idea of who is the mightiest foe to America's greatest evil.

If the charges in the partisan press be true, the Ohio campaign, which the world was recently assured was to be conducted on high-toned principles, bids fair to degenerate into a vulgar struggle for "boodle." The "boodle," according to the aforesaid partisan press, to be contributed to one side by the New York importers and to the other by the "protected manufacturers."

Concerning the proceedings of himself and his party in the late Congress ex-Speaker Reed says gleefully: "No, sir, we never lost a trick in the whole game. Not a trick." Very true, but Czar Reed stacked the cards. Wait till the next session of Congress, when Reed will be compelled to play a square game, and then see how many tricks he will take.

Roger Q. Mills, in his great speech at Iowa City, said: "Exportation demands reciprocity, and it must be a rule. The wheat shipments are falling off because our importations are falling off. Foreign countries only buy as they can pay in goods. It is folly to talk of selling to foreign nations, receiving their gold and silver and keeping it here, for in six and a half years, at the present rate of shipments, we could possess the world's entire stock of gold and silver." True as gospel, every word. There can be no extended trade without reciprocity, and reciprocity is simply balancing exports with imports.

Mrs. James K. Polk was quietly buried by the side of her husband in the lawn of the Polk Place residence at Nashville. By the terms of the ex-President's will the Polk home passes into the custody of the State of Tennessee, to be held in trust to be occupied from time to time by his kinsmen bearing the name of Polk, who shall be designated by the Legislature as most worthy. The following clause in the ex-President's will is exceedingly interesting at this time and shows what a wonderful social revolution has taken place within the last forty years: "Should I survive her (Mrs. Polk) unless influenced by circumstances which I do not now foresee, it is my intention to emancipate all my slaves, and I have full confidence that, if at her death she shall deem it proper, she will emancipate them."

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

"THE ONLY SOLUTION."

The Detroit Evening News is probably the most outspoken advocate of the single tax to be found among daily papers. It understands the theory perfectly, and advocates it without apology or qualification. Under the head, "The Only Solution," the following editorial appeared in its issue of May 7:

A free agent can always make a better bargain than can one under constraint. The wage-worker, who has only one occupation in which he is proficient, is less independent than he who can turn his hand to a variety of trades. The artisan owning his own homestead, free from debt, especially when the area is sufficient to give him employment during the gardening season, need submit to no such rate of wages as he who must provide for the periodic call of the landlord. In a word, the laborer who is so situated that he can employ himself, and from his toil reap the full benefits, is on such an equality with the employing class that he is enabled to make a satisfactory bargain, both as to wages and hours.

The power to employ one's self rests in the power to get on the land. The occupation of the farmer is the only one in the world that can occupy all the people at one time and provide sufficient to sustain life. Given a piece of fertile land, no one need starve. From its bosom can be obtained every element that conserves the happiness and prosperity of the human family.

The very first element, then, necessary to the complete emancipation of the wage-receiving classes from their economic bondage, is freedom to employ themselves. The opportunity must always be open to exert themselves for their individual benefit, free from rules or regulations made by others. Without this they can never be free. They must submit to such terms as the owners of land and the owners of wealth employed productively choose to make.

As taxation as enforced to-day, combined with the legal monopoly of natural opportunities to labor, cause the exploitation of labor, so changes in the system of taxation may be made the channel for labor's redemption. Socialists and nationalists have created elaborate schemes of governmentalism wherein the state will be the parent and the wealth producer the child, to be dealt with as the parent conceives best; whereas all that is necessary to make a laborer independent is to leave him alone, free to employ himself, free to exchange his products, free from the exactions of the tax gatherer.

Whenever a successful labor-saving machine is first invented one must be prepared to see a complicated mechanism. There are wheels, and cogs, and cams and springs, all seemingly inextricably mixed. But apply the power, and lo! the result is surprising. The machine almost seems to think. It is a success. Go back and look at that machine in a decade. Its capacity has been doubled, but instead of a multitude of frightfully complicated arms, bolts, cogs, belts, wheels and cams, there are seen a few pieces of steel, brass and iron with direct and positive motions. It is not so pretty a machine, but it is a much better one. Simplicity has brought greater efficiency.

The labor world has for years been constructing complicated machinery for its industrial ills. Sometimes the machines have seemingly worked well for a time; again they have been a burden instead of a benefit. And these manchines for the emancipation of labor, unlike the successful ones, are being all the time more complicated, until now, when they get out of order, such distress follows as to put the whole commercial world into convulsions. The tendency has been away from simplicity in dealing with the distresses engendered by the concentration of great masses of humanity into our commercial centers where, huddled together in ill ventilated and disease-breeding tenements, they evolve a miasma and a gangrene perilous alike to all classes.

To enable labor to come by its own, to enable the wealth producer to enjoy the fruits of his labor, to enable enterprise to reap its full reward, it is only necessary to relieve the people of their burdens by freeing trade, and by relieving every species of property the result of human exertion from the visits of the assessor and tax gatherer, collecting all the revenue necessary for those functions that should properly be exercised by that social organism called government, by a tax on land values only.

A tax on land values is the chief cure for low wages and long hours. But it is despised by the masses because of its simplicity. They cling to their complicated schemes for social regulation and reject that which is the very essence of justice and equity. For a tax on land values will not take one minute's worth of labor from the laborer that is his by right. It will only take for community uses the values the community itself as a whole has brought into existence.

Why is land on the corner of Woodward and Michigan avenues valued at $2,500 a foot front? It is not because of anything the present owner has done to it. Why is land all along Woodward avenue from the river front to Grand Circus park, worth on an average at least $1,500 a front foot? Not because of anything the owners have done to it. This great value is due wholly and solely to the fact that the avenue is more convenient for trade than any other street in Detroit. It is nearest to the largest number of people, and more bargaining is carried on there at a less expense than it can be carried on elsewhere. Therefore a smaller percentage can be added to the cost of manufacturing in making the selling price, and yet the total gain be larger than where there is less trade. So this availability of position registers the value of the land. Take the people away and it will fall. Increase the number surrounding it and it will rise.

To take this land value for the expense of government, and to relieve industry of every other burden, is the key to the industrial situation. That will make land easy to get. When a good thing is easy to get it is more largely used. When land is used productively it increases the wealth of the community. And when wealth is being produced under freedom of state and freedom of contract, the portion going to labor is the full reward of labor. That is labor's millenium. It can get no more. There is no more to get.

A Single Tax Congressman.

Hon. John DeWitt Warner, congressman-elect from New York city, in an article for the Statesman on "How will the Single Tax Affect the Farm," said:

"It is proposed to assess all lands at their unimproved value, and not otherwise. That amounts to this: that all improved lands are to be relieved somewhat of present taxation, and all unimproved lands are to be somewhat more heavily taxed; that all more improved lands are to be less taxed in comparison with all less improved lands—generally speaking that all extensive estates, the worth of whose broad acres, irrespective of their improvements, is greater in comparison with such improvements, will pay more, and small farms, a greater part of whose worth is made up of buildings and improvements, will pay less. Which are the more numerous? Which would the single tax tend to make more and more numerous? Which is it good policy for the government most to encourage? To ask these questions is to answer them, and to demonstrate that in its comparative incidence upon improved and unimproved rural property respectively, the single tax is at once more just and politic than our present system.

"But any general system of taxation involves questions of general as well as local proportion. What share of taxes would rural communities, as a whole, pay under the single tax, as compared with what they now pay, or as compared with that paid by urban communities? Let us see. It will be admitted that "unearned increment"—increase in the value of land, due not to improvement of the land itself, but to improvement of lands about it—as in the case of city lots, is a more important factor in the city than in the country. It will be admitted that in a state where there are no cities or villages, no cause for unearned increment in special localities, it will be perfectly fair to assess all lands at their present value for use equally except as present productiveness or availability of each tract may differ. Now as the state, as a whole, increases in productiveness and wealth its lands become more and more valuable for use in two general ways—first by actual improvement of the land itself and the buildings placed thereon; second by increased availability for use of certain parcels in or near villages and cities—which will aggregate themselves about certain natural or artificial vantage points. This increase in availability, this so-called "unearned increment," is so intensified in cities, and so minimized in strictly rural districts that it may be considered a factor of land values in cities and villages alone; and when it is considered that the worth of a city lot—unlike even half cultivated land—is scarcely affected by whether it is fenced or ditched, cultivated or not; and how enormously out of all proportion to the value of farm land is the value of city land as such, without reference to any improvements whatever on the particular parcel, it will be seen how hard it is even to imagine a village, much less a city, where the value of land, without reference to the improvements, does not bear a greater proportion to the value of all real estate there, including improvements, than does the land in any rural district, considered as wild or unimproved land, bear to the actual value of the real estate of such rural district, including all buildings, fences, ditches and improvements of every kind that have made it more fertile and more valuable. And it is impossible to imagine a state, including growing cities, where the comparison in question will not be more conclusive in the same direction as the proportion of urban to rural development increases.

"To sum up: Not merely is the single tax, as compared with our present system of taxation, the more just and politic as between the several members of a rural community; but, if put into operation, it would decrease the proportion of taxes which the farming community would have to pay as compared with our cities; and would increase, faster than would our present system, the proportion of taxes which the cities would have to pay."

Security of Possession All That is Needed.

It is not the magic of property, as Arthur Young said, that has turned Flemish sands into fruitful fields. It is the magic of security to labor. This can be secured in other ways than making land private property, just as the heat necessary to roast a pig can be secured in other ways than by burning down houses. The mere pledge of an Irish landlord that for twenty years he would not claim in rent any share in their cultivation induced Irish peasants to turn a barren mountain into gardens; on the mere security of a fixed ground rent for a term of years the most costly buildings of such cities as London and New York are erected on leased ground. If we give improvers such security, we may safely abolish private property in land.

It is the ownership of the soil that everywhere gives the ownership of the men that live upon it. It is slavery of this kind to which the enduring pyramids and the collossal monuments of Egypt yet bear witness, and of the institution of which we have, perhaps, a vague tradition in, the biblical story of the famine during which the Pharaoh purchased up the lands of the people.—Progress and Poverty.

THERE have existed men who had the power to hold or to give exclusive possession of portions of the earth's surface, but when and where did there exist the human being who had the right?

Our Precious Tariff.

The Canadian newspaper Hardware, published at Toronto, has an editorial article, under date July 18, discussing the reasons why American pig lead is sold in Montreal at $3 60 to $3 75 per cwt., while the price of the same article in New York is $4 40 to $4 45. It relates the experience of a Canadian buyer in New York, who asked the price of pig lead of a firm of metal dealers, and received the answer, $4 40. The Montrealer replied, "I will sell you American lead in Montreal at $3 75 as an outside figure," and he added, "You could have knocked them down with a feather." The reason why American lead is sold to foreigners cheaper than to Americans is that we have a precious tariff for the protection of home industry which puts a duty of two cents per pound on pig lead. This enables the producers to charge the American consumer more for it, than they could otherwise get. So of course they can affore to sell to Canadians for less. It is all very simple. The same thing is done with hundreds of other articles.—New York Evening Post.

Decidedly Amusing

The most amusing thing these days is to see a wool growing farmer trying to argue the benefits derived from the new higher tariff on wool section in that outrageous monstrosity called the McKinley bill. The farmers are beginning to get their eyes opened to the fact that if American manufacturers are oblized to pay higher tariff upon foreign wool they are compelled to have to work in with home-grown wool, that they are at a disadvantage as compared with English manufacturers who pay no duty, unless they take this difference out of home wool growers by buying American grown wool at prices low enough to make up the difference for the high tariff they are forced to pay on the foreign article. And that is about what they have been doing this season, and what they will certainly continue to do until this robbing tariff is repealed, and don't forget to remember what we are saying to you. In the interest of the farmer and laboring man this thieving tariff should be blotted out.—Hall's Hudson Grocer.

Hotter the Weather Bigger the Proof.

As the weather grows warm, the sale of James Pyle's Pearline Washing Compound rapidly increases. This proves that many women recognize the fact that PEARLINE makes washing and cleaning very much easier than when done with the ordinary means. Proves also that summer clothing, being of delicate texture and color, will not stand the rough usage necessary when washed with soap, and establishes the fact that PEARLINE, in doing away with the rubbing, lessens the wear and tear and fills a very important place. Delightful for bathing in fresh or salt water. Its ingredients render it harmless to the most delicate skin. Especially during the hot weather it is to your advantage to use PEARLINE, and only humane to supply your servants with it, and thus lighten their labors; besides you insure much better results. Beware of imitations. JAMES PYLE, New York.

WAR REMINISCENCES.

THE FIRST BATTLE.

An Old Soldier Describes the Varying Emotions of a Raw Recruit.

If you were to ask a dozen or more old soldiers to tell you how they felt when going into their first battle, perhaps no two would have precisely the same impressions to relate. To most men going for the first time into the fire of an enemy's guns on the field of battle, it is certainly a trying ordeal, an occasion attended with the most thrilling sensations, feelings full of dread and fear. No other experience in life can fitly compare with it.

A volunteer army is composed of varied classes of men, and in the variety, dangers do not always develop the same feelings or results. Men who confront death on a battle field from a sense of duty are affected differently from those who under the mere thrill of excitement rush, like the unthinking horse, into peril heedless of cause or result. Then there is another class of soldiery, men who are—they know not why—utterly indifferent to fate, men who are unconsciously devoid of the sense of danger, even if they do not possess that sublime trait of character called valor. Bravery does not always consist of the power or capacity to meet and defy danger, and men are often cowards when there is really no danger to face and overcome. Such people are like children who are reluctant to go into the dark room even though they are confidently assured there is no enemy there. Shadows frighten many people as well as chickens.

Among soldiers there is—as observed in our late war—still another class but little different from those just referred to, men who may be put under the head of "don't cares"—young men who go into battle with about the same feeling with which they would go into a foot race or swim in deep water.

Then there are the men with the pure lofty courage, the valiant and true, who go out coolly and steadily under the fire, even though there is the restrained dread in the innermost heart, even though there may be seen the slight pallor on their cheeks, the unconscious restlessness in the eye and the evident subtle emotion that moves the lip and the limb. Woe to the enemy who stands or cowers under the steel of such a foe.

The most trying ordeal in the first battle—and in all battles, for that matter—is in the start; in the getting ready when the hour has come to move on the foe; in the movements preparatory to the action; in the moments of prelude, and before the enemy is in sight; when the drum first beats the loud alarm; when the bugle blast fiercely trills the sudden summons, Boots and Saddles! and the cry spreads like an electric flash through the startled camp the foe is in front, and that the hour of battle is now at hand.

Oh! then it is that the heart and the brain of the soldier are pierced with the wild woe of war. Then it is that the courage spirit waxes or wanes. Then it is that valor begins to totter if the sure props are not there. Then it is that the soldier begins to think; and when he begins to think, he often begins to dread; and when he begins to dread, fear soon follows.

In the moments between the first bugle blast or drum beat and the vision of the enemy in front, the soldier has time for reflection; and thought has always been a prolific source of fear or reluctance to go into danger. Many tragedies have been the result of men not thinking or reflecting upon consequences. And with the soldier—when there comes the vision of home and wife or child or other loved ones, when the vision of these come and remain between a man and prospective death—he always lingers over the images upon the heart mirrors; and he shrinks from the separation of the grave, even if he does not exhibit cowardice.

It is not merely a conscience that makes cowards of us all; but in the workings of the brain otherwise, when men have the time to think, they turn away from the dangers that are in front to the loved that are behind them; and then comes, as I have said, the dread of that something hereafter so keenly felt and acknowledged by Hamlet.

But as soon as the soldier gets up under the enemy's fire; as soon as he finds he is being shot at, and the opportunity is given him to return the fire; as soon as he sees the real enemy in his front, and the battle is upon him—then it is that all the trouble and all the dread of battle are over with that soldier who has any of the elements of manhood in him. Then the man naturally wants to return the fire; then comes the bending of the energies for the assault upon the foe; then the yearning for the fire and the advance. Once in the din and flame and roar of the conflict there is no time to think of consequences—no time for thoughts of the loved ones far away in the embrace of home; the only consuming passion then is how to get at the enemy and punish him—and hence the rush and the shout, the incarnation of resolve, that always characterizes the charge, the on to victory or death.

Once in the fire and tumult of the struggle, with the battle spirit filling and thrilling every sense; when the soldier hears and sees and feels and smells, tasting even the sulphurous struggle—then it is that he knows no dread, no fear. The mind and heart full of that battle spirit, there is no room for other feelings. The man thus wrought upon has no concern about death, except it is the death of the enemy; to destroy him, to punish that foe, every impulse and energy and other faculty of the whole nature are bent in one supreme, unreasoning, terrific struggle.

If you can once get a weak man into the fight, he is no longer a coward. The white liver that quails and carries its possessor from the field before the enemy is in sight changes into that of the lion when the man is face to face with the foe in the struggle for life and victory under his flag. And it is the truly brave man at times who can turn and flee when he sees there is no longer virtue or honor in battling the unconquerable odds before him.—Detroit Free Press.

HARD HIT ON THE FIELD.

The Mingled Sensations of a Wounded Soldier.

We had been held in reserve for five long hours while cannon thundered and musketa cracked spitefully all along the front a mile away. A procession of dead and wounded had filed past us until we were sick with horror. Shot and shell and bullet had fallen upon us behind the woods until the dry dead grass bore many a stain of blood.

"Attention! Forward—guide right—march!"

Our brigade was going in at last, and there was a look of relief on the face of every officer and man as we got the word.

"Guide right—front—forward march!"

As we swung clear of the woods a gust of wind raised the smoke for a minute, and I saw the plain in our front blue with dead and wounded. Away beyond them was a line of earthworks, and I had one swift glimpse of a thin blue line kneeling behind the cover.

"Steady!" Right dress! Double quick—march!"

The air is alive with the ping of bullets and the whizz and shriek of shot and shell. We bend our heads as if breasting a fierce gale laden with icy pellets. There is a wild cry—a shriek—a groan as men are struck and fall to the earth, but no one heeds them—no one hesitates. It is a hurricane of death, but we feel a wild exultation in breasting it. Men shout, curse, sing, swing their hats and cheer.

We are driving through the smoke-cloud when there is a flash of fire in front. I seem to rise into the air and float hither and thither and the sensation is so dreamy and so full of rest that I wish it could last forever. It is suddenly broken by the sound of my own voice. Is it my voice? It sounds strange and afar off to me. Why should I cheer and curse by turns? What has happened?

Ah! now I come back to earth again! Above and around me is the smoke—the earth trembles under the artillery—men are lying about and beside me. Where is the brigade? Why did I drop out? I am lying on my back, and I struggle to sit up and look around. I rise to my knees—wave this and that—topple over and struggle up again. There is red, fresh blood on the grass—on my hands—on my face. I taste it on my lips as my parched tongue thrusts itself out in search of moisture.

Who is groaning? Who is shrieking? Who is cheering? And why should I laugh and exult? Have we held the line against a grand charge? Did we scatter and decimate the legions hurled against us? Have we won a great victory to be flashed over the country and cause the bells to ring with gladness? Let me think. Give me time to remember how it all happened. Strange that my thoughts should be so confused, and the desire to sleep be so strong upon me when I should be up and doing. I will shake it off. I will spring up and follow after the brigade. Here—

* * * * *

"How do you feel?"

My eyes are wide open and I am lying on a cot in a large room. I see people walking about—other people lying on cots like my own.

"I fell all right. Why?"

"You were hard hit in the fight four days ago, my boy."

"So there was a battle?"

"Yes."

"And I was wounded?"

"Had your left arm shattered by a piece of shell and we had to amputate it."—Grand Army Advocate.

CUSTER'S VICTORY.

How the Dashing Soldier First Won Renown.

When Gen. Sheridan made his famous raid from Winchester to City Point in the early part of 1865 he had the assistance of three very able officers. Of these Gen. Wesley Merritt was at that time probably the best known, but Gen. Geo. A. Custer, who commanded the 3d division, subsequently acquired the greatest renown. In fact, it was on this very raid that he won one of his first and most brilliant victories. It happened in this way: Gen. Early, who perhaps was as often and as soundly thrashed as any officer in the war, had been compelled to evacuate Staunton March 1 and fall back towards Waynesborough, thirteen miles away. At Fisherville, eight miles from Staunton, he tried to make a stand the next day, but Gen. Custer and his men, who were in advance, soon drove him back the remaining five miles to Waynesborough. Here Early resolved to give his tireless pursuer battle, and took up what he thought was a good position on some ridges along South river. He had five field guns. Custer, coming up, made a careful reconnaissance and then prepared to carry the enemy's position by storm. He placed Gen. Pennington's brigade on the right and Wells' on the left with that of Capehart acting as a reserve. The two forward regiments were deployed as skirmishers and ordered to fire briskly. Almost at the first volley the whole line of the enemy broke and ran. Custer's troops rushed in upon them and captured eighty-seven officers, 1,165 men, thirteen flags, more than one hundred mules, nearly one hundred wagons and ambulances and the five cannon. Gen. Early himself just managed to escape with the loss of all his baggage. On this day Gen. Custer and his men marched thirteen miles in a heavy downpour of rain and fought two battles, one of them resulting in the complete rout of the enemy. It was because he had officers and soldiers of such energy and bravery under his command that Gen. Sheridan was able to accomplish such wonderful things.—Chicago News.

CHRIST AT THE FEAST.

LESSON IX, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 30.

Text of the Lesson, John vii, 31-44. Commit Verses, 31-33—Golden Text, John vii, 37—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

31. "And many of the people believed on Him, and said, When Christ cometh, will He do more miracles than these which this man hath done?"

The lessons of the fifth chapter were based upon the incidents connected with one of the feasts of the Jews; those in the sixth chapter were associated with the manna and the passover feast; these are in connection with the feast of tabernacles (verse 2), which points us forward to the coming kingdom of Israel and the time of blessing upon all nations (Zech. xiv, 16, 17).

32. "The Pharisees heard that the people murmured such things concerning Him; and the Pharisees and the chief priests sent officers to take Him."

Always hating Him, and always seeking to kill Him, but unable to touch Him till His work was done (chapter viii, 20; xiii, 1). Professing to be children of God and the true seed of Abraham, they made it manifest by their conduct that they were not truly of God nor of Abraham, but rather of their father, the devil (chapter viii, 42-44).

33. "Then said Jesus unto them, Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto Him that sent me."

Over thirty times in this gospel He speaks of the Father sending Him.

34. "Ye shall seek me and shall not find me. And where I am, thither ye cannot come."

Now, He had before said that "He that seeketh findeth" (Math. vi, 8), but there is no contradiction. We must only take His sayings in the light of all his other sayings, "Ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart" (Jer. xxix, 13). T[illegible] seeking never fails.

35. "Then said the Jew[illegible] themselves, Whither will He g[illegible] shall not find Him? Will He g[illegible] the dispersed among the Gentiles, and teach the Gentiles?"

Of the earth earthy, they understood not heavenly things. That He came down from heaven they did not believe, and therefore His going to Him that sent Him they could not understand. That many Jews were scattered abroad among the nations is evident from the Acts of the Apostles.

36. "What manner of saying is this that He said, Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me. And where I am, thither ye cannot come?"

If He could find His way to any part of the earth, why could not they follow Him if they saw fit? Such seems to have been their thoughts. Anything beyond the earth they neither knew nor thought much about. Talk of heavenly things, even now, to many church members and they have nothing to say, they know not the language; but let business, politics, pleasure or fashion be the theme, and they have no lack of words nor of interest.

37. "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink."

For seven days was the feast continued, and many sacrifices were offered every day, but the eighth day, the last day of the feast, was a special day (Lev. xxviii, 36; Num. xxix, 35-38). Although the special sacrifices offered on this day were less than on any other day of the feast, being only ten as compared with thirty on the first day (Num. xxix, 12-16, 35-38), yet it was in importance the great day, the most solemn and holy of all the days (Neh. viii, 18).

38. "He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water."

To the woman at the well He said, "The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life" (iv, 14); but this is even in advance of that, for here He speaks of rivers of living water going forth from the inmost being of the believer.

39. "But this spake He of the Spirit, which they that believeth on Him should receive."

From beginning to end of Scripture, and from the Garden of Eden to the new heavens and earth, the spirit is the mighty worker, or, as some one has said, "the Executive of the Godhead." To see the difference between an ordinary believer and one filled with the spirit we have only to consider Peter before and after Pentecost.

"For the Holy Ghost was not yet, because that Jesus was not yet glorified."

The Holy Spirit, while in all ages the great worker, had up to this time not been given as He was at Pentecost, and the reason is mentioned in this verse. He had testified through the prophets of a coming Messiah and kingdom. He now testifies to a Messiah who came, was rejected and crucified, rose from the dead and is now glorified at the right hand of God. As Peter by the Spirit testified, "God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ" (Acts ii, 36).

40. "Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, Of a truth this is the prophet."

Just as after the feeding of the five thousand the people said, "This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the world" (John vi, 14). When John the Baptist said that he was not the Christ nor Elijah, they then asked if he was "that prophet" (chap. i, 20, 21). The passage which they had in mind was probably Deut. xviii, 18, "I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, and will put my words in His mouth, and He shall speak unto them all that I shall command Him."

41. "Others said, This is the Christ. But some said, Shall Christ come out of Galilee?"

They now think it possible that He may be the King of Israel, the Son of David, as foretold in II Sam. vii, 12, 13; Isa. ix, 6, 7. That the Christ or Messiah was understood to be the King of the Jews, and so looked for, is evident from Math. ii, 2, 4; Mark xv, 32, etc. But they could not think that He should come from Galilee, or, as Nathanael put it, "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth" (chapter i, 46)? They evidently did not think of Isa. ix, 1, 2, and of the light that was to shine in Galilee.

42. "Hath not the Scripture said that Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem where David was."

Yes, truly, this was all plainly written in Ps. cxxxii, 11; Mic. v, 2, and other passages, but not any more plainly than the statements concerning Galilee and Egypt in the passages referred to in the previous verse. Their difficulty was just the difficulty of as many today; they take such Scriptures as seem to suit that which they wish to believe, but they will not take any interest in that which seems to conflict with their ideas.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

IN THE FATHERLAND.

We are permitted to make use of a portion of the last letter sent by Miss Mabel Hayden to friends at home. It gives a description of a brief trip she made from Dresden to Baireuth and a visit to the Opera at the latter place. The letter is dated at Dresden, July 25th, and after a few words of family interest only, it proceeds as follows:

Having straightened out my accounts I will finish my visit with loved home ones. Frau Geneis and family went out to supper in a music garden. They asked me to go, but I declined, saying I wanted to talk to you. She said: "Tell your mother not to worry or be anxious, for I will care for her little girl, and please give her my regards."

I have had a nice little supper all by myself in my room, and was not lonely, although Frau Geneis regretted leaving me alone. Carrie wrote how kind they had been to them up to their departure and she was so glad I was coming back. I feel sure now, too, that they are just what they seem to be—impulsive, big-hearted Germans—and when you find added to this taste and refinement, you have found very agreeable people to stay with. I have found such kind-hearted people everywhere, and I thoroughly admire the Germans of the higher classes and can see much more real merit in those of the lower classes than is to be seen in our lower classes.

I promised to write about little Frau Herwig, of Baireuth, whom I shall never forget. Monday evening, you know, I was alone in Baireuth, and at 3 p. m., when on the way to the Opera, I came up to a brisk little body, perhaps mamma's age, but about the size of Mrs. Spofford and the expression of Annie Hayden, of Jackson, but with gray hair. She was neatly dressed and seemed to know everybody. Well, I knew she would befriend me if she could. I asked if she was going to the Opera and if I might accompany her. She said yes, but first had to stop at the telegraph office, but if I did not mind waiting she would be glad to have company. Then she showed me where to go to find my seat (ushers are not known here), met me outside after both acts, divided her biscuits with me, and showed me Frau Wagner (formerly Von Bulow's wife), Frau Materna (the Vienna singer), A. Herzog and family, from Wittenberg, and others; took me home, or rather to Mrs. Rauh's, where I had a room. On the way she bought a basket of cherries, so I would remember her by the basket, and asked me to call the next morning. This I did, and she at once brought out a dainty little service, with strawberries and cake; then put on her bonnet and went with me to see the sights. We went into the city opera house; visited Walmfried, the place of Cosima Wagner, given by the people of Baireuth; visited Wagner's grave, back of the house, enclosed by an iron railing and covered with an immense slab—I should say ten by fifteen feet—and surrounded by ivy; a beautiful spot—the most inviting final resting place I have ever seen. A huge maple overhangs it and Frau Herwig picked a leaf for me. Then we went to the cemetery and visited Liszt's mausoleum, over the door of which are these words: "Ich weiss dass mein Eloser lebt"—"I know that my Redeemer liveth." The mausoleum is ten by twelve feet and literally covered with laurel wreaths—the walls and the floor. I saw the house where he died and also the house and grave of Jean Paul Richter, and the dwelling where Materna stays during the Fest. Monday night I saw Frau Schoepffer and daughter, Mrs. Ritchie, of Boston, who had taken her mother to Baireuth for a week's stay. Frau looked so fresh and happy and I was glad to see her.

To continue from Tuesday morning.—We then went to a choc-fabrique and there there the dear little Frau finished up by giving me a package of bon bons to take on the cars, saying that if I had time she wished that I would come to see her Thursday. I did so. She had been looking for me; again gave me strawberries; went a little way with me, and after the first act came way out to the Opera House, which is on a hill in the outskirts of the town, to bring me some fresh biscuits—so I would not have to pay fancy prices and get stale bread—and to say good-bye. I must write her of my safe return; must also write to Frau Kohlhagen, of Heidelberg. I told them I would write to you about all they had done, for you would appreciate it even more than I could. So you must send some message to them both. In Nuremberg a lady spoke to me at the table the second day and asked if I was an American—she thought I was German the first day—and said she was going to Baireuth, and asked for information, etc. Was I important for once, having been Monday in Baireuth? Well, she said she was disappointed in meeting friends from Vienna, who were to go with her, but she should not wait, for she did not wish to lose the Opera. When I arrived in Baireuth and was chatting with the Smiths and Mr. Charles Dudley Warner, I espied my acquaintance of the morning, and found Madame Cecerini, of Rome (she told me she had lived sixteen years in Rome—met her husband in New York) with Mrs. Warner. A coincidence! We did not mention the names of the friends we were to be with and that is the way it turned out. Then, since Mr. Cole disposed of his seat, I had a stranger by my side. The Madame sat back. After the first act she asked the man to change seats and, as he said, he did so "with all his heart," so that was real nice, wasn't it, that I had someone to sit beside whom I knew? She insisted on my resting on her lounge until the 2 a. m. train, but I declined, thinking it better to go with the crowd to the depot and wait there till 2 a. m. I will not write of my ridiculous experience of going to Neumarket and back to Baireuth. You can read it in my journal, where I will have it written up in as glowing colors as black ink will emit. It was laughable—very!

OBITUARY.

Died, at Tecumseh, Mich., on Friday night, August 14th, 1891, Walter V. Wimple, aged 81 years.

Mr. Wimple was born in Richmond, Ontario county, N. Y., April 7th, 1810. On the 19th of September, 1835, he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Mc. Cartney. The young couple at once set out to try pioneer life in the west and settled down in the township of Tecumseh, Michigan. For 32 years they lived upon a farm, tasting the mingled hardships and enjoyments of a life in a new country, a family of daughters growing up about them. Mr. Wimple led the choir of the Congregational church at Clinton during this time and was never absent, nor the members of his family, from the services which he assisted as musical director to conduct. About 23 years ago he moved with his family to the town of Tecumseh and engaged in the shoe business, in which he continued until 1889, when the infirmities of advancing years made it necessary for him to retire from business life. He did so with an unblemished reputation for integrity.

Mr. and Mrs. Wimple celebrated their golden wedding in September, 1885, a large number of friends and relatives joining in the pleasant celebration. Since their removal from farm to town they and their children have been valued members of the Presbyterian church. Seldom, if ever, has the Wimple pew been vacant at any service, and seldom, if ever, has there been a service in which there has not been aid given by some one of the family in the service of sacred song.

The last sickness of Mr. Wimple was protracted and painful. Through it all he manifested a spirit of patience and even of cheerfulness, which awakened the admiration of all who saw it. His natural disposition was a cheerful one, but it was only the power of a firm Christian faith that kept him from sinking under the load of suffering which it was appointed him to bear. Looking forward to a state of freedom from pain and of glorious rest remaining after death for the children of God, he was heard frequently to say: "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." With this language of triumph on his lips and in his heart he sank away and entered into rest.

The funeral services were held on Sunday afternoon, August 16th, at the family residence, the Pastor of the Presbyterian church, Rev. Wm. H. Babbitt officiating. The hymns sung were of Mr. Wimple's selection and in the remarks offered a text of his selection was also dwelt upon, which revealed the cheerful character of his religion—"Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord, his God."—Ps. 146:5. In the death of Mr. Wimple society has sustained a loss. The family also feel themselves bereaved of one who caused himself to be loved and leaned upon. But when they think of his release from suffering and of the gain that death has brought him they are comforted. W. H. B.

Death of John K. Boies.

Hon. John K. Boies of Hudson died at Washington on the 22d inst. He was taking a course of treatment of Dr. W. A. Hammond for nervous prostration. His death will be a great loss to Hudson and to Lenawee County as well.

Mr. Boies was for 30 years one of the most conspicuous and influential Republicans in southern Michigan. He was born in Blandford, Mass., December 6, 1828. He settled at Hudson in 1845, and engaged in merchandising and banking. He was soon in local and general politics, was president of the village 1863 and '67; representative in the legislature 1865-7, and senator 1869-70 and '75-6; candidate for congress in 1882, but defeated by Col. Eldridge, of Adrian, and often in the canvasses for Republican candidates for governor, United States senator and other important offices. He was on the state board of control of railroads 1871-4 and '78-86, and often on other boards, holding at the time of his death a federal position of this kind. From 1881 to 1886 he was on the United States board of Indian commissioners, by appointment of President Garfield. Mr. Boies presided over the state Republican convention in 1870 and on several other occasions. He has left the record of an upright, clean, useful and in every way an honorable man.

The funeral obsequies were held at Hudson yesterday afternoon at one o'clock and were very largely attended.

DELAYS ARE DANGEROUS.

There are those who are morbidly anxious about their health, watching every symptom and dosing themselves on the slightest provocation. There are others who never give the matter a thought, but permit real symptoms to lapse into the certainties of disease. Between these two extremes the wise man steers—never unduly anxious, and yet not permitting genuine symptoms to develop. He knows that delays are dangerous, and he knows, moreover, that the medicine most likely to be effective is that which goes straight to the seats of disease, and tones up the digestive organs, strengthens the system and purifies the blood. He takes a few doses of S. S. S., and soon finds that all the symptoms have disappeared, and that he is in a better condition than ever. The great vegetable remedy has no rival.

The minister who prepares the poorest sermon is generally the best composer.

A FATAL ACCIDENT.

Verily no man knoweth what a day or an hour may bring forth. Last evening a runaway occurred on Chicago street in this village, by which Miss Beatrice Travis, a most estimable young lady, lost her life. The circumstances of the sad affair, briefly stated, are these:

Miss Travis, whose home is at Defiance, Ohio, has been for the past six weeks a guest of Miss Olive Blymyer. During her brief stay here she had become a great favorite in society and had formed many acquaintances among our young people. Last evening after supper she received and accepted an invitation from Mr. Lelma Stewart for a drive about the village. Near eight o'clock they came down Ottawa street to Spayde's corner and turned west on Chicago street. The band was giving a street concert on that corner and there were several teams on the street. From some unforeseen cause the horse took fright and started on a run. Opposite Satterthwaite's hardware he ran into N. M. Sutton's farm wagon and threw Mr. Stewart out. The horse took a lunge to the left, and Miss Travis was thrown out. She struck on the crosswalk upon the right side of her head. The sidewalks were lined with spectators, but the affair was so shockingly sudden that no one could lift a hand to prevent it. Miss Travis was picked up, in an insensible condition, and carried into Marks' drug store, where medical aid was promptly rendered by Doctors Woodward and Tefft. The latter happened to be an eye witness of the accident and assisted in conveying the poor girl into the store. But human aid was of no avail. She never uttered a word after the fall and the spark of life left her shattered body within thirty minutes afterwards. The remains were conveyed to Mr. Blymyer's residence on Union street where they were taken in charge by an undertaker, and her parents were summoned by telegraph.

Mr. Stewart was much bruised and shocked, but escaped serious injury. The wonder is that he was not maimed or killed. The buggy was badly demolished. The horse cleared itself and ran directly up the street to Dr. Stewart's house and to the stable. This was Dr. Stewart's first intimation of the accident. No blame can be attached to any one. The horse was a spirited animal, but entirely kind and gentle. Mr. Stewart is considered a skillful horseman. He has been among horses from early boyhood and this was his first runaway experience. It was one of those awful, fearful accidents that sometimes happen, and which no human power can foresee or prevent.

The awful accident sent a shock of horror through the village, and the whole town was on the streets for two hours after. Mr. and Mrs. Blymyer and daughter were prostrated with grief. They could scarcely take it more to heart had their own daughter been the victim; and Mr. Stewart laments the sad affair most keenly. Neighbors with kindly hands and hearts have been rendering every possible assistance to the family last night and to-day, until the parents of the dead girl arrive. Mr. Travis is in the employ of the Standard Oil Company at Chicago, but his family home is at Defiance, Ohio. A father and mother, one sister and two brothers will bemoan the sudden death of a beautiful and accomplished daughter. The light of that family has been blotted out.

Mr. and Mrs. Blymyer desire to return their heartfelt thanks to neighbors and friends for the numberless acts of kindness bestowed upon them in this awful visitation. Words alone, however kind, afford but feeble consolation in such a trial. We can only commend them to Him, who is a very present help in time of trouble, for that Divine consolation which alone can heal the wounded heart.

Mrs. Travis and a brother-in-law, J. H. Wilson, arrived at noon via the Lake Shore road, and they took their departure, with the precious remains, on the afternoon train for their home in Defiance, Mr. Lelma Stewart and Miss Olive Blymyer accompanying the party. And thus ended the Tecumseh act of this sad and mournful tragedy.

The State Fair represents in its management much that is creditable to those who have and are conducting its affairs. There is but one paid official and a great deal of hard work is performed and onerous responsibility accepted by the members of the Society without any reward except what may come from duties well performed. The State Society has been especially favored in the class of men who have been associated with its management since its organization. Men distinguished for business ability, good judgment and public spirit, have annually given a good deal of valuable time and hard work to its affairs, and by their efforts have kept the Michigan State Fair in the very first rank of such institutions. No other State Fair brings together a finer lot of exhibits, or a more intelligent crowd of visitors to admire them. A great deal of the best side of human nature is to be seen at a State Fair, and its influences have always been enlisted on the side of enlightenment and progress.

Mrs. Braggs: Life in your case seems to be one long vacation. Weary Watkins: Quite right, you are ma'am. I guess that's one reason why I am allers so tired.

The K. T. Encampment.

On the 20th inst., Adrian Commandery No. 4, K. T., pitched their tents in Pleasant Grove, Devils Lake, for a four days encampment. In point of numbers, there being only about forty swords, the encampment was a failure, but for a real "down right" good time the Commandery never enjoyed a better one. Signal guns were fired at sun rise and sun set, awkward squad drills and dress parade were indulged in. Invitations were sent to the Adrian Light Guards and Company C of Tecumseh, to participate with the Commandery in divine service and dress parade on the Sabbath. An idea struck the Light Guards to capture the camp at five o'clock Sunday morning. The company left Adrian at 12 o'clock in wagons and when six miles from camp the boys "climbed out" and "footed" it the rest of the way. This was done that they might reach the encampment at five o'clock. Upon reaching the camp the boys opened fire with blank cartridges and for ten minutes they made things lively. Major Howell, Captain General of the Commandery, sprang from his tent and with sword in hand very gallantly surrendered the camp to the boys. Major Howell is also captain of the Light Guards, and the boys were bent on giving their captain a surprise. Company C, with Capt. Hayden in command, arrived about 10:30 A. M., accompanied by the Tecumseh Kid Band. Upon the arrival of the company, the Commandery formed around a temporary altar when the impressive Ascension Day service was said. After which the Rev. Prelate G. B. McElroy delivered a masterly sermon. The subject was: "Mysteries—Natural and Necessary." The military companies participated in the services and apparently enjoyed themselves. Owing to a rain storm the grand dress parade set for the afternoon was abandoned. The City Band, of Tecumseh, furnished the music for the encampment. The Commandery broke camp Monday morning, when the boys returned to their homes, having spent a few days long to be remembered.

A Useful Invention.

Dr. B. F. Snyder has been experimenting for some time on a new method of generating gasoline gas to produce heat to use in his dental work. Dr. E. Hause, who has had about twenty years experience in dentistry, has been assisting in these experiments and the two have evolved a new method of making gas, which bids fair to be a very successful one. We will not describe the whole process in detail but the main features of it are these—generating a burning gas from gasoline and regulating the flame by a current of air, which is also used to produce the gas. It forms a heating apparatus, which can be used by dentists and jewelers, far superior to anything hitherto in use and also a lighting apparatus which will light offices and dwellings to good advantage. The heat is very quickly made and can be used for vulcanizing, soldering, etc. Besides, the method is a very economical one. It produces a beautiful white illuminating gas of about 25 candle power. The inventors have decided to apply for letters patent at once and manufacture machines as quickly as possible in order to meet the demand of Dentists, as orders are already coming in.

They were a jolly party indeed, and enjoyed their novel outing to the utmost. A CENTURY OLD.

Vermont Has Been a State One Hundred Years.

VERMONT'S BIG DAY.

BENNINGTON, Vt., Aug. 20.—The apprehensions of rain entertained Tuesday night proved groundless and Bennington's great day dawned clear and beautiful, and at an early hour all was bustle and stir with the arrival of many thousands of visitors to join the thousands already here, the martial music of marching bodies and the hurry of preparation for the parade.

Col. W. Seward Webb, accompanied by a mounted grand army post, escorted President Harrison from Gen. McCullough's house to the soldiers' home, where Gov. Page and all the living ex-governors of the state were waiting to greet him. The president alighted from his carriage and was escorted into the house, where he remained a short time while he was introduced to the distinguished guests. He then resumed his place in the carriage which with the other vehicles took their places in the line.

At 9 o'clock the guns of Fuller's battery boomed the signal for the formation of divisions and at 10:30 o'clock the procession moved with the Putnam Phalanx of Hartford in the position of honor as escort to the president, with a score of carriages following containing the distinguished guests. The camp grounds where the soldiers' home is situated and where the Vermont National guard has been in camp for several days was filled with people when the procession moved. The president doffed his hat in salute to every manifestation of applause. The procession as it passed through the streets to the monument grounds was viewed by thousands of people, the president and many features of the pageant receiving great applause.

The president left the line at the reviewing stand and the column passed before him. The procession continued its march to the massive and lofty pillar which will tell generations yet unborn of the patriotism of the Green Mountain boys of 1777. Here the first division, except batteries, was massed on the west side of the monument; the second and third divisions, except carriages on the east side. The batteries then took positions and fired a national salute of twenty-one guns. Meantime the president and party, the orator of the day, Hon. Edward J. Phelps, Gov. Page and other distinguished speakers and guests, with the representatives of the press, about forty people in all, had taken their positions on the platform at the base of the monument. Around and about the open spaces were black with the multitude gathered from many states to witness the ceremony of the dedication.

Hon. Wheelock G. Veazey called the meeting to order, and prayer was offered by Rev. Charles Parkhurst, D. D., of Boston, editor of Zion's Herald, after which Gov. Page made a brief speech of welcome. Ex-Gov. B. F. Prescott, of New Hampshire, in a brief speech, then transferred the monument to the state from the Bennington Battle Monument association, Gov. Page accepting. The oration of the day was delivered by Hon. E. J. Phelps, formerly minister to England. In the course of his address Mr. Phelps said:

"Vermont consecrates to-day her first historic monument, but not hers alone. New Hampshire and Massachusetts, who fought with her, have joined in erecting this memorial of our common history, and they are here by splendid representations to share in the triumph of its completion. The public spirit and persistent efforts of years have found their reward in the structure that stands before us. The destiny of the memorial erected here will be to teach the history of those early struggles. In silence it will tell the story not only of Stark and Warner and Chittenden, but also of that multitude of heroes who followed their lead and who pledged their lives in devotion to Vermont. The children of the future will learn from these stones the first instincts of patriotism, and the dwellers upon this soil in future ages, even though they do not speak our tongue, will be admonished of what manner of man an American should be."

The oration was received in the most appreciative manner, and applause greeted the finish as the beginning, which was renewed with increased intensity as President Harrison was introduced and spoke of his gratification at being present. It was late in the afternoon when the president finished, and the literary exercises, long to be remembered in the annals of the Green Mountain state, were brought to a close with music and the benediction. The divisions then re-formed in proper order, with the carriages of each division in its rear, and marched through Monument avenue, Main and North streets to Camp Vermont, where the troops and other organizations were dismissed. The escorts and carriages proceeded to the large tent near the soldiers' home, where the banquet was served, over 3,000 people sitting down to the table.

Speeches were made at the banquet by President Harrison, Gov. Russell, of Massachusetts; Gov. Tuttle, of New Hampshire; Gen. Howard, of New York; Gen. Alger, of Michigan, and Secretary Proctor.

WOE IN MARTINIQUE.

Fuller Details of the Terrible Work of the Recent Hurricane.

PARIS, Aug. 22.—Additional details received here from St. Pierre, capital of the island of Martinique, which was visited by a terrible hurricane on Tuesday night last, show that the facts already published are not only in no way exaggerated, but that they did not tell the full story of the disaster. The number of dead was originally estimated at sixty, with hundreds of injured. The latest dispatches received here announce that 218 people are found to have been killed in the coast towns alone, the towns in the interior not having been heard from as yet. There is no doubt that the loss of life in the interior towns may have been as great if not greater than in the coast towns, so it is impossible at present to even make an estimate of the number of people who lost their lives through the cyclonic disturbance which brought so much ruin and desolation to the unfortunate island.

The difficulty experienced in forming a correct estimate as to the number of people who lost their lives on Tuesday night at Martinique is greatly due to the fact that the roads leading into and from the interior of the island have been rendered absolutely impassable. These roads are blocked in some cases for several miles by fallen trees and displaced earth and rocks. Several days may elapse before the governor of Martinique is able to give the home government a detailed account of the disaster which has fallen upon the inhabitants of that island. It is known, however, that houses, crops and trees from one end of Martinique to the other have been demolished or flattened down beyond hope of recovery. The loss to the coffee and sugar planters will be very great.

The death list by towns, as forwarded by Gov. Casse up to date, is as follows: St. Pierre, 34; Morne Rouge, 28; Fond St. Denis, 7; Precheurs, 6; Carbet, 4; St. Joseph, 20; Marin, 8; Vauchin, 10; Lamentin, 26; Francois, 22; Robert, 28; Riviere Pilote, 7; miscellaneous, 18. But these numbers do not include the deaths in isolated places, interior towns or upon plantations, with which no communication can be had at present. Perhaps a rough estimate of 300 killed and 1,000 injured will about cover the ground.

A GOTHAM HORROR.

Big Buildings in New York City Suddenly Collapse.

Fire Adds to the Calamity—Scores of Toilers Buried in the Ruins—The Death List Will Reach Eighty or More.

LIVES CRUSHED OUT.

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—In the twinkling of an eye without warning, without hope or chance of escape, probably eighty persons were swept to their deaths in a rotten old building in Park place at noon Saturday. It was Taylor's building at Nos. 68, 70, 72 and 74 Park place. It was occupied by lithographers, bookbinders, a monthly journal called the South, and on the ground floor were a drug store, restaurant, a paint and plumbing shop. It was a structure so ancient and so frail that the fire department had marked it as unsafe and insurance companies would hardly issue policies upon it. It collapsed like a piece of burnt paper and crushed down on the people in it. Then came fire and added its horror to the rest. How many poor creatures instantly perished under the falling mass, how many were penned in by it and died after horrible agonies in the fire, how many were saved from these dreadful fates to be drowned in the floods of water that were poured upon the wreck after hours of heroic work by the firemen no one could tell. But by midnight Sunday there had been taken from the ruins seventeen crushed, burned and mangled bodies. Sixty-seven persons are reported missing, and there is little doubt but their remains are covered by the debris. At least fifty persons were injured.

There is a considerable difference of opinion as to the cause of the disaster. People in the wrecked building who escaped say that there was no explosion, but those who were on the street near the scene say that they heard the report of an explosion. It seems probable that the weight of the printing presses which were located on the top floors, together with the vibration of their motion, proved too much for the building and caused the collapse.

The official report of the fire department ascribes the accident to an explosion of chemicals, but the mortar and brick, the heavy presses on the upper floors, and the veritable accounts of the trembling of the walls under their use tell the true cause of the disaster. No ordinary explosion in a druggist's store could have so wrecked and torn a building that had any right to stand.

Inspector Williams, who has been at the scene of the disaster almost from the first moment, said in regard to the probable cause of the fearful accident: "There was no explosion in that building, because there was nothing to explode. The accident was the result of a weak structure and the incessant vibration of the heavy presses." Many of the witnesses who saw the crash say that the building slowly bulged out in the middle until it had formed a noticeable curve from the roof to the ground and then it fell.

At 2 o'clock the fire was under control. Half of the Greenwich street building had been burned, while the Taylor building was a complete wreck. The losses were computed at $150,000 for the Taylor building and contents and $40,000 for the Greenwich street building.

The next few hours after the disaster were a series of sad and shocking scenes—parents crying in the streets over the bodies of their children, wives running to and fro asking for their husbands and half mad with fear, mothers looking for sons and sisters for sisters, weeping crowds in hospitals and at many homes, and at times the dreadful sight of a limp and lifeless form dragged out of the heaps of debris that lay half across the street. There were scenes of heroism, too, brave policemen rushing into the burning building and cutting out ways of safety for some of the imprisoned; policemen and firemen bringing the terrified and fainting down the fire escapes, and for hours hundreds of willing hands digging at the smoking rubbish that covered the dead and living, for all that fell in the unlucky building were not killed.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

"An almost fatal attack of La Grippe last winter left me with nasal Catarrh and such susceptibility to bronchial irritation that the slightest exposure would develop it, and a very little effort in public speaking would result in a distressing hoarseness so that I had serious fears of permanent disability. Besides, I suffered with dyspeptic troubles—notably what is popularly known as 'heartburn,' from which I found it difficult to obtain relief. I was induced by a friend to try KING'S ROYAL GERMETUER, and it gives me great pleasure to say that its effect has been as magical as 'Koch's Lymph' is reputed to be, which is also a 'germ destroyer,' though taken in a different way.

"Catarrh, bronchial irritation, and dyspepsia have all disappeared before one bottle of the GERMETUER has been used.

AT ALL TIMES.

April time, sweet promise time,
When youth and hope are in their prime—
When opening buds toss back the showers,
And all the land is starred with flowers—
Love comes down the byways green,
And gives each leaf a tender sheen,
And wakes anew each bluebell chime,
In April time.

Oh, days of June—bright days of June!
Whose lengthened light yet dies so soon,
When summer keeps her Sabbath-tide
In green luxuriance satisfied.
Love meets us in the woodlands now,
With more than summer on her brow,
With speech more sweet than skylark's tune,
In days of June.

Oh, autumn hours—rich, mellow hours!
When cornfields glow with poppy flowers—
When all the woods are in their best,
And Nature dreams her dream of rest;
Amid the first slow-falling leaves
Love binds for us the fairest sheaves,
And at our feet all fullness pours,
In autumn hours.

Oh, winter drear! Oh, woodlands sere!
Chill testing time of all the year;
When tempests blot the heavens from view,
Where shall we now find comrade true?
Love waits for us amid the cold,
And turns its sullen gloom to gold,
And fills each pause with hopeful cheer,
In winter drear.

April time, sweet days that climb
By flowery steps to summer's prime!
Oh, autumn hours, whose failing powers,
The earth with gorgeous treasure dowers.
Oh, winter drear, that brings so near
The gift that makes all seasons dear;
Whatever comes, whatever goes,
The heart of love no variance knows.
Though month by month may see decay,
And down the unreturning way,
The year itself may speed away,
True love will stay!

OUT OF A TRUNK.

The Good Fortune That Befell a Needy Individual.

It was a slightly cynical but fairly good-humored crowd that had gathered before a warehouse on Long wharf in San Francisco one afternoon in the summer of '51. Although the occasion was an auction, the bidder's chances more than usually hazardous, and the season and locality famous for reckless speculation, there was scarcely any excitement among the bystanders, and a lazy, half-humorous curiosity seemed to have taken the place of any zeal for gain.

It was an auction of unclaimed trunks and boxes—the personal luggage of early immigrants—which had been left on storage in hulk or warehouse at San Francisco while the owner was seeking his fortune in the mines.

The difficulty and expense of transport, often obliging the gold-seeker to make part of his journey on foot, restricted him to the smallest impedimenta, and that of a kind not often found in the luggage of ordinary civilization. As a consequence, during the emigration of '49 he was apt on landing to avail himself of the invitation usually displayed on some of the doors of the rude hostelries on the shore: "Rest for the Weary and Storage for Trunks." In a majority of cases he never returned to claim his stored property. Enforced absence, protracted equally by good or evil fortune, accumulated the high storage charges until they usually far exceeded the actual value of the goods; sickness, further emigration, or death also reduced the number of possible claimants, and that more wonderful human frailty—absolute forgetfulness of deposited possessions—combined together to leave the bulk of the property in the custodian's hands. Under an understood agreement they were always sold at public auction after a given time. Although the contents of some of the trunks were exposed, it was found more in keeping with the public sentiment to sell the trunks locked and unopened. The element of curiosity was kept up from time to time by the incautious disclosures of the lucky or unlucky purchaser, and general bidding thus encouraged—except when the speculator, with the true gambling instinct, gave no indication in his face of what was drawn in this lottery. Generally, however, some suggestion in the exterior of the trunk—label or initials—some conjectural knowledge of its former owner, or the idea that he might be secretly present in the hope of getting his property back for less than the accumulated dues, kept up the bidding and interest.

A modest-looking, well-worn portmanteau had just been put up at a small opening bid, when Harry Flint joined the crowd. The young man had arrived a week before at San Francisco friendless and penniless, and had been forced to part with his own effects to procure necessary food and lodging while looking for an employment. In the irony of fate that morning the proprietor of a dry goods store, struck with his good looks and manners, had offered him a situation if he could make himself more presentable to his fair clients. Harry Flint was gazing half abstractedly, half hopelessly, at the portmanteau without noticing the auctioneer's persuasive challenge.

In his abstraction he was not aware that the auctioneer's assistant was also looking at him curiously, and that possibly his dejected and half-clad appearance had excited the attention of one of the cynical bystanders, who was exchanging a few words with the assistant. He was, however, recalled to himself a moment later when the portmanteau was knocked down at fifteen dollars, and considerably startled when the assistant placed it at his feet with a grim smile. "That's your property, Fowler, and I reckon you look as if you wanted it back bad."

"No, but Tom Flynn did for you. You see, I spotted you from the first and told Flynn I reckoned you were one of those chaps who came back from the mines dead broke. And he up and bought your things for you—like a square man. That's Flynn's style, if he is a gambler."

"But," persisted Flint, "this never was my property. My name isn't Fowler, and I never left anything here."

The assistant looked at him with a grim, half-credulous, half-scornful smile. "Have it your own way," he said, "but I oughter tell ye, old man, that I'm the warehouse clerk and I remember you. I'm here for that purpose. But, as that thar valise is bought and paid for by somebody else and given to you it's nothing more to me. Take or leave it."

The ridiculousness of quarreling over the mere form of his good fortune here struck Flint, and, as his abrupt benefactor had as abruptly disappeared, he hurried off with his prize. Reaching his cheap lodging house he examined its contents. As he had surmised, it contained a full suit of clothing of the better sort and suitable to his urban needs. There were a few articles of jewelry, which he put religiously aside. There were some letters which seemed to be of a purely business character. There were a few daguerreotypes of pretty faces, one of which was singularly fascinating to him. But there was another of a young man, which startled him with its marvelous resemblance to himself. In a flash of intelligence he understood it all now. It was the likeness of the former owner of the trunk, for whom the assistant had actually mistaken him. He glanced hurriedly at the envelopes of the letters. They were addressed to Shelby Fowler, the name by which the assistant had just called him. The mystery was plain now. And for the present he could fairly accept his good luck and trust to later fortune to justify himself.

Transformed in his new garb he left his lodgings to present himself once more to his possible employer. His way led past one of the large gambling saloons. It was yet too early to find the dry goods dealer disengaged; perhaps the consciousness of more decent civilized garb emboldened him to mingle more freely with strangers and he entered the saloon. He was scarcely abreast of one of the faro tables when a man suddenly leaped up with an oath and discharged a revolver full in his face. The shot missed. Before his unknown assailant could fire again the astonished Flint had closed with him and instinctively clutched the weapon.

A brief but violent struggle ensued. Flint felt his strength failing him, when suddenly a look of astonishment came into the furious eyes of his adversary, and the man's grasp mechanically relaxed. The half-freed pistol, thrown upward by this movement, was accidentally discharged point-blank into his temple and he fell dead. No one in the crowd had stirred or interfered.

"You've done for French Pete this time, Mr. Fowler," said a voice at his elbow. He turned gaspingly and recognized his strange benefactor, Flynn. "I call you all to witness, gentlemen," continued the gambler, turning dictatorily to the crowd, "that this man was first attacked and was unarmed." He lifted Flint's limp and empty hands and then pointed to the dead man who was still grasping the weapon. "Come!" He caught the half-paralyzed arm of Flint and dragged him into the street.

"But," stammered the horrified Flint as he was borne along, "what does it all mean? What made that man attack me?"

"I reckon it was a case of shooting on sight, Mr. Fowler; but he missed it by not waiting to see if you were armed. It wasn't the square thing, and you're all right with the crowd now, whatever he might have had agin you."

"But," protested the unhappy Flint, "I never laid eyes on the man before, and my name isn't Fowler."

Flynn halted and dragged him in a doorway. "Who the dickens are you?" he asked, roughly.

Briefly, passionately, almost hysterically, Flint told him his scant story. An odd expression came over the gambler's face.

"Look here," he said, abruptly, "I have passed the word to the crowd yonder that you are a dead-broke miner called Fowler. I allowed that you might have had some row with that Sydney duck, Australian Pete, in the mines. That satisfied them. If I go back now and say it's a lie, that your name ain't Fowler, and you never knew who Pete was, they'll just pass you over to the police to deal with you and wash their hands of it altogether. You may prove to the police who you are and how that clerk mistook you, but it will give you trouble. And who are there here who knows who you really are?"

"No one," said Flint, with sudden hopelessness.

"And you say you're an orphan and ain't got any relation livin' that you're beholden to?"

"No one."

"Then take my advice and be Fowler, and stick to it. Be Fowler until Fowler turns up and thanks you for it; for you've saved Fowler's life, as Pete would never have funked and lost his grit over Fowler as he did with you; and you've a right to his name."

He stopped, and the same odd, superstitious look came into his dark eyes.

"Don't you see what all that means? Well I'll tell you. You're in the biggest streak of luck a man ever had. You've got the cards in your own hands. They spell 'Fowler.' Play Fowler first, last and all the time. Good night and good luck, Mr. Fowler."

The next morning's journal contained an account of the justifiable killing of the notorious desperado and ex-convict, Australian Pete, by a courageous young miner by the name of Fowler. "An act of firmness and daring," said the Pioneer, "which will go far to counteract the terrorism produced by those lawless ruffians."

In his new suit of clothes and with this paper in his hand Flint sought the dry-goods proprietor. The latter was satisfied and convinced. That morning Harry Flint began his career as salesman and as "Shelby Fowler."

From that day Shelby Fowler's career was one of uninterrupted prosperity. Within the year he became a partner. The same miraculous fortune followed other ventures later. He was mill-owner, mine-owner, bank director—a millionaire. He was popular; the reputation of his brief achievement over the desperado kept him secure from the attack of envy and rivalry. He never was confronted by the real Fowler. There was no danger of exposure by others; the one custodian of his secret, Tom Flynn, died in Nevada the year following. He had quite forgotten his youthful past, and even the more recent lucky portmanteau; remembered nothing, perhaps, but the pretty face of the daguerreotype that had fascinated him. There seemed to be no reason why he should not live and die as Shelby Fowler.

His business a year later took him to Europe. He was entering a train at one of the great railway stations of London, when the porter, who had just deposited his portmanteau in a compartment, reappeared at the window, followed by a young lady in mourning.

"Beg pardon, sir, but I handed you the wrong portmanteau. That belongs to this young lady. This is yours."

Flint glanced at the portmanteau on the seat before him. It certainly was not his, although it bore the initials "S. F." He was mechanically handing it back to the porter, when his eyes fell on the young lady's face. For an instant he stood petrified. It was the face of the daguerreotype. "I beg pardon," he stammered, "but are these your initials?" She hesitated; perhaps it was the abruptness of the question, but he saw she was confused. "No. A friend's." She disappeared into another carriage, but from that moment Harry Flint knew that he had no other aim in life than to follow this clew and the beautiful girl who had dropped it. He bribed the guard at the next station, and discovered that she was going to York. On their arrival he was ready on the platform to respectfully assist her. A few words disclosed the fact that she was a fellow countrywoman, although residing in England, and at present on her way to join some friends at Harrogate. Her name was West. At the mention of his he again fancied she looked disturbed.

They met again and again; the informality of his introduction was overlooked by her friends, and his assumed name was already respectably and responsibly known beyond California. He thought no more of his future. He was in love. He even dared to think it might be returned; but he felt he had no right to seek that knowledge until he had told her his real name and how he came to assume another's. He did so alone—scarcely a month after their first meeting. To his alarm she burst into a flood of tears and showed an agitation that seemed far beyond any apparent cause. When she had partly recovered she said, in a low, frightened voice:

"You are bearing my brother's name. But it was a name that the unhappy boy had so shamefully disgraced in Australia that he abandoned it, and, as he lay upon his deathbed, the last act of his wasted life was to write an imploring letter begging me to change mine, too. For the infamous companion of his crime, who had first tempted, then betrayed him, had possession of all his papers and letters, many of them from me, and was threatening to bring them to our Virginia home and expose him to our neighbors. Maddened by desperation, the miserable boy twice attempted the life of the scoundrel and might have added that blood-guiltiness to his other sins had he lived. I did change my name to my mother's maiden one, left the country and have lived here to escape the revelations of that desperado should he fulfill his threat."

In a flash of recollection Flint remembered the startled look that had come into his assailant's eye after they had clinched. It was the same man who had too late realized that his antagonist was not Fowler. "Thank God! you are forever safe from any exposure from that man," he said, gravely, "and the name of Fowler has never been known in San Francisco save in all respect and honor. It is for you to take back—fearlessly and alone."

Feeling His Way.

"Nellie," he said, with a kind of experimental, immature, early homegrown smile on his anxious face, "I—I may count on you as—as a friend, may I not?"

"Certainly, Alfred," she replied.

"As—as a good friend?"

"To be sure."

"You have no objection to looking on me as—as a distant relative, perhaps?"

"No, I have no objection to that."

"Second cousin, as it were?"

"I am willing to be your second cousin."

"Or first cousin once removed?" he persisted, mopping his forehead with a trembling handkerchief.

"Well, I have no objection to that either."

"And I might as well be a first cousin, mightn't I?"

"Yes, I suppose so."

"Do you feel, Nellie," he went on, hastily swallowing something large and buoyant, "as if you could be a—be a—a sister to me?"

"No, Alfred."

Not His First Visit.

A man with a package in his hand rang the bell at the door of the Peterby mansion in a Texas town.

"I've got something that every housekeeper ought to have," he said.

"What is it?" asked Mrs. Peterby.

"It is a new kind of baking powder."

"None for me, if you please. I slipped on some baking powder not long ago. It was of no account in the world."

"Is that so? Is it possible that I have been here before?"—Texas Siftings.

The musical part was also very much enjoyed. William Gadd was appointed to the position of President for the ensuing year by a unanimous vote. May the society live long and prosper.

Students of the Sixties.

On Wednesday afternoon of last week occurred the fifth quinquennial reunion of the one-time students of Raisin Valley Seminary, or more properly those who were there in the "sixties," during the teaching of Daniel Satterthwaite. The exercises were opened with reading of the 12th chapter of Romans, by Prof. Kelley, followed by prayer and a song.

Mr. Arthur P. Crane acted as president of the day, and a number responded to the roll call, yet many were absent whose faces would have been gladly welcomed.

The regular programme was badly shattered by the absence of the orator, poet and historian appointed for the occasion.

Mrs. Delora Colvin-Baker, of Addison, as alternate poet, gave a finely appreciated original poem, and short talks of reminiscences by others of the old students made the time a very enjoyable one to all present.

We were very glad of the presence of one of our former teachers, Mrs. Mary Harkness-Wood, as also of our former Superintendent and old friend, Enoch Strang, who has lived to forget and forgive the many pranks played upon him in the olden time.

Among those present from away were Arthur P. Crane, of Toledo, O.; Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Bogue and daughter, of Vandalia, Mich.; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Baker, and Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Cole, of Addison, Mich.

Superintendent Hill and family contributed largely to the material comfort by the spread of a fine repast.

Some good words from Prof. Kelley, as to the present and future of the Seminary, its ability, its hopes and aspirations, gave us all a proud feeling that the good work begun so long ago is still continued in the halls of our alma mater.

President—T. I. Sutton, Sutton.
Vice President—C. C. VanDoren, Adrian.
Recording Secretary—Miss May Taylor.
Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. Jennie Liscomb-Leonard, Morenci.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

LIBERAL REWARD.

The Little Son of George W. Owen Missing from His Home in Owosso.

Frankie D. Owen, son of George W. Owen, of Owosso, was terribly frightened at school, by his teacher, for taking a worthless old revolver to school. The teacher told him it was a state's prison offense, and that she would leave the matter with the superintendent to attend to. Frankie, fearing arrest, left home on Monday afternoon, June 1, 1891, and went to St. Johns, where he was seen on June 1 and 2, but no further trace of him has yet been obtained. His parents did not know he had been frightened until after he went away.

He is nearly 12 years old, 4 feet 7 or 8 inches tall, brown hair, blue-gray eyes, and when he left home wore a light straw hat, dark coat and white waist, brown knee pants, black stockings and high tennis shoes. He had a scar across just under his chin. A liberal reward will be paid for his return or for information that will lead to his return home.

In addition to this, the state board of equalization has practically decided to add to the total valuation as equalized five years ago the sum of $60,000,000 to cover the material advancement of the state during the last half decade. This will make a total increase in valuation of $150,000,000, and bring the total valuation up to $1,500,000,000.

I have gone to the Farmers' Picnic
With no umbrella to keep dry!

How often! Oh, how often!

THE SECRET OF CELERY GROWING.

A New and Valuable Book Upon the Subject, Which Every Celery Grower Should Read.

Dr H. L. Stewart of this village has recently put through the press a new book, entitled "Celery Growing and marketing a Success."

From a cursory examination of its contents, we should pronounce it a most excellent work on that subject. In fact, it is the only book worth mentioning that has ever been published on celery growing. It will be an invaluable assistant to every person who either grows celery or contemplates embarking in that business. It gives the author's own practical experience in growing and marketing celery. H. L. Stewart is the pioneer celery raiser of Tecumseh, Michigan, and by his efforts an extended industry has been developed in this vicinity. Tecumseh celery is now known in the market as the best article grown in this country.

Dr. Stewart was born and reared in Michigan and has been a resident of this County from boyhood. He is one of our most prominent citzens and is universally respected wherever known. He is in the prime of life, in the vigor of perfect health, capable of hard physical work and mental investigation. If any new venture can be worked to a business success he is just the man to accomplish it. He began raising celery eight years ago on a small scale and within that time he has revolutionized the methods of celery growing. The book therefore comes from a trustworthy source. His wonderful success in the business is a convincing proof that his mode of cultivation is a new departure of great merit. The author was induced to write the book from the fact that he has been overwhelmed with letters of inquiry, soliciting information about raising celery, from all sections of the United States and Canada.

The book begins with a brief history of celery; then treats of the best kind of soils and how to best prepare them; the kinds of celery to grow for family use and for the general market; how to make a hot-bed or hot-house; how and where to procure the seed and how and when to sow it; how to fit the ground for the young plants; how to care for the plants before setting; how and when to set them and how to care for them after being set; how to blanch them; how to gather, wash, bunch, tie and box; howto market, get the full worth of your celery and collect your pay; how to find buyers who want celery and how to keep them; how to build a storehouse for winter use, and when to gather it in the different latitudes. The book also gives a list of the necessary tools, utensils and appliances to be used in cultivating the crop and to facilitate the handling and proper care of it, with thirteen illustrations showing how to make and use them. Most of the tools mentioned cannot as yet be purchased ready make. In raising celery for home use many of these appliances may be dispensed with, but in growing it for the general market, with any prospect of success, the person who embarks in this business must be prepared, in both knowledge and equipments, to measure swords with the best growers in the field.

It does not contain a single paragraph that was written by any other person upon this important branch of horticulture. As above analyzed, it gives the entire process of celery growing in detail, from seed time to harvest, wrought out in the author's personal experience during the past eight years, and which has culminated in such a phenomenal success. The book contains 150 pages, bound in cloth, embossed. It has thirteen illustrated plates, showing tools and implements of his own invention and design, which are valuable aids in caring for the crop. It contains valuable hints also in regard to the best methods of marketing the crop, which every celery grower should know. It lifts the whole industry of celery growing out of the old ruts and places it in an advanced position abreast with the present progressive age. It shows how land, heretofore considered worthless, may be increased in value an hundred fold. But we cannot copy the entire contents of the book. Buy it, and see for yourself, what it contains. It will be sent to any address in the United State or Canada, postage prepaid, for $2.00. Address all communications to

The late rains have been very agreeable to those who have had plowing to do, but it is nearly finished now and sowing will begin next week.

Those in the vicinity who attended the Farmers' Picnic this year for the first time, although it was rather moist above and slippery below, think it a good place to renew acquaintances and chat with friends.

The Valley people had quite a gathering at the lake this year. About one hundred spent the day there. Superintendent Hill had a large load of the younger ones who had no other way to go, so all were provided for.

Prof. Kelley has been working this vacation in the interest of the Seminary and he thinks the prospects good. They have a new boarder at their house but Mrs. Kelley thinks she will have it stay at home this year ('tis a girl.)

IMPORTANT TESTIMONY.

I have had sciatic rheumatism for eighteen years. The pains in my limbs and back were unbearable, and I could not use my left limb. I was confined to my bed weeks at a time with tormenting pains. Four bottles of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup entirly cured me. C. L. Dunham, Druggist, Avoca, Iowa

TECUMSEH ENTERTAINMENT COURSE.

A Splendid List of Attractions for the Coming Season.

It is with great satisfaction that we are able to announce that Tecumseh will have a course of concerts and lectures the coming season which will in every way equal the course of last year, and in some respects surpass it. The success of last year's course encouraged the committee to secure a high grade of attractions for 1891-2 and they have been actuated in their negotiations by the desire of furnishing such a course as would be a benefit as well as pleasure to the community.

The course will be as follows:—

The DeVere-Campanini Company, Nov. 5.
Leland T. Powers, Nov. 21.
Musin Concert Co., Dec. 5.
Robert Nourse, Dec. 28.
Major Henry C. Dane, Feb. 5.
Lotus Glee Club, Feb. 22.

The De-Vere-Campanini Concert with which the course will open, will undoubtedly be the greatest musical event in the history of our village. This superb company is one of the finest ever brought together and it was only by good luck that the committee had a chance to secure them. Mlle. DeVere is a soprano singer of national reputation and Signor Campanini's fame as a tenor singer is world-renowned. The rest of the company are artists of ability and it will be a high honor to this community to have them give one of their concerts here. Owing to the high price which it was necessary to pay this company the price of single admission will be one dollar. Single admissions to the other entertainments will be the same as last year, 50 cents.

Leland T. Powers is a dramatic impersonator of such popularity that he had but two or three dates left when our committee secured him.

Of the Musin Concert it is unnecessary to speak at this time. Tecumseh people have reason to know that they are artists of ability, and the same may be said of the Lotus Glee Club.

Notwithstanding the expensive concert with which the course will open, the committee have decided to place the price of season tickets at only $1.50, the same as last year. The number of season tickets will be limited to 700 and they will be placed on sale as soon as the printers can get them out.

Reserved seats, which were such a bone of of contention last year, will be managed differently this year. Ten cents extra will be charged for reserved seats for each entertainment These seats will be placed on sale three days in advance. It is believed this arrangement will work satisfactorily.

More details as to the course will be given at a later date.

The Lenawee Veterans

The annual reunion of the Lenawee G. A. R. Association was held at Adrian on Tuesday. It was a beautiful day, the attendence was large and the exercises were very interesting.

It was 10:30 when President John D. Shull called the meeting to order. This was followed by music from the Fairfield drum corps.

Rev. Lemon Barnes, invoked the divine blessing, and Mayor Hoch delivered an address of welcome.

This was responded to by President Shull, who thanked the Mayor for his cordial greeting, and in a facetious vein recited some of the incidents of the late unpleasantness.

Secretary D. H. Warren read the minutes of the last year's meeting, and a committee of one from each post was appointed to select candidates for officers for the ensuing year.

The picnic dinner followed, and about two hundred settled themselves to the enjoyment of the feast.

After dinner the following officers were elected.

President—John Underwood, Addison
Vice President—Mrs. Rollin Carpenter, Blissfield.
Secretary—A. P. Coddington, Tecumseh.
Treasurer—S. M. Hamilton, Adrian.

Reports by post commanders.
Reports by Presidents W. R. C.
Reports by captains of camps, S. of V.
Address—Hon. M. T. Cole.
Vocal solo—Miss Alma Fry.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT. 3, 1891.

The "Campbells are coming" in Ohio, as Major McKinley will find out to his sorrow before election day is over.

The talk of "opening the campaign" down in Ohio is somewhat of a misnomer. The campaign for free trade and lower taxes was opened the day after the McKinley bill became a law.

If free sugar is a good thing, why not put a few more raw materials on the free list? At all events, the people would be willing to try the experiment if the politicians would let them.

It is said that there are one million men idle in the United States to-day, who are able and willing to work. And yet the monopolists are still boasting about the immeasurable benefits of the McKinley tariff law.

One single Louisiana sugar plantation will receive $250,000 out of the sugar bounty, and another will receive $200,000. Who pays this tax? The dear people, of course, for the privilege of having free sugar.

August, the month of picnics and festivals, now gives way to September, the month of fairs and expositions. A person so disposed could attend a fair nearly every day in September, without going far from home either.

The opening of the Grand Trunk tunnel at Port Huron will take place on the 19th of September with imposing ceremonies. John Bull and Uncle Sam will shake hands with fraternal concord and drink a health to Commerce.

It is rumored that President Harrison will call Gen. Alger into the Cabinet to fill the place to be vacated by Secretary Proctor. This selection would be "good politics" on the part of the President, that is true, but it is exceedingly doubtful whether Gen. Alger would accept the appointment.

The collapse of a four story brick building at Park Place, New York, by which nearly one hundred persons were hurled to instant death, is calling public attention to similar death traps, to be found in all large cities, and to the necessity of more stringent laws for the inspection of buildings.

The Republican leaders of Ohio have decided to make the silver question the main issue of the present campaign in that State. So they throw up the sponge on the McKinley tariff law at the very opening of the battle. And they will be side-tracked on the silver question before the battle closes.

Wheat took a tumble last Saturday, owing to the increased purchases at $1.00 per bushel. But it will probably go up again as sales fall off. It is doubtful whether the price will go above one dollar before January next, but it will undoubtedly touch that figure occasionally during the next three or four months.

When free sugar and reciprocity were thrust into the tariff bill it was a death blow to the entire system. The sugar clause is a conclusive demonstration that the tariff is a tax and that the consumer pays it. The benefits of reciprocity, although meager, show what enormous benefits would be derived from unlimited free trade with all nations.

The Geological Congress, in session last week at Washington, started yesterday for a grand tour across the continent. It is composed of sixty foreigners and twenty Americans. The route planned is over 6,000 miles in length and traverses 39 degrees of longitude. It crosses twenty states and territories and a province of Canada. It will be the most complete geological excursion the world has ever seen.

The New York World says: "The little spasms of retrenchment in the Republican party are entertaining to all except their victims. The billion dollar Congress knocked out the surplus and mortgaged the revenues under increased war taxes for twenty years, and yet Tom Platt's collector at this port 'fears' that the clerks at the custom house must be deprived of their yearly vacation in the interest of economy! Is it not a grand old party?"

THE TARIFF OF 1789.

Luxuries Taxed at Highest Rates—Necessities Bore Low Duties—The Tariff as a Tax Fully Established.

Legislation regarding trade and industry during the colonial period of our history followed closely the example set by the mother country. At various times down to the formation of the national government in 1789 the colonies resorted to bounties upon exports, imports and production, duties upon exports and imports and often to the prohibition of exportation and importation.

The breaking out of the revolution, though closely uniting the colonies for political purposes, did not affect in the slightest their trade relations. To be sure non-importation of English goods was agreed upon, but not fully carried out. Even after the war was over and peace declared the same discriminations prevailing before the war were resorted to. Thus Connecticut passed a tariff laying a duty of five per cent. on all goods from the neighboring states. Its effect was a prohibition of trade with New York and Massachusetts. New York, on the other hand, found that the farmers of New Jersey controlled the vegetable and fruit trade of its chief city, and that Connecticut supplied her with fire wood and other daily necessaries. Accordingly, the legislators at Albany decided to stop this trade entirely, so that the Dutch farmers along the Hudson might have a monopoly of it. Accordingly, she levied heavy duties upon the boats in which the farmers of the neighboring states sent their products to market. New Jersey retaliated by taxing at heavy rates the island in the bay on which New York had built a lighthouse.

While New York, New Jersey and Connecticut were fighting in this way, Maryland and Pennsylvania reopened the strife along their boundaries. Pennsylvania levied heavy duties upon the products of Maryland, and the latter state resorted to smuggling to avoid the payment of them. Pitched battles were often fought between the smugglers and the officials.

While the states were thus quarreling over trade the congress of the confederacy found itself impotent. Burdened by the heavy debt resulting from the war, and unable to collect funds to pay it, for the states had refused the recommendations of congress for the imposts of 1781 and 1783, the confederacy passed out of existence, the convention of 1787 was called and the new nation was formed.

The adoption of the constitution settled one of the perplexing problems. It abolished forever the control of the separate states over internal trade. The most important problem, however, was still unsolved, how to raise revenues to pay the debts. This question was, therefore, the first to receive the attention of congress in April, 1789.

Accordingly, on April 9, Madison, then a representative from Virginia, rose in his seat in the committee of the whole and said: "The deficiency in our treasury has been too notorious to make it necessary for me to animadvert upon that subject. Let us content ourselves with endeavoring to remedy the evil. To do this a national revenue must be obtained, but the system must be such a one that, while it secures the object of revenue, it shall not be oppressive to our constituents. Happy it is for us that a system is within our power, for I apprehend that both these objects may be obtained from an impost on articles imported into the United States. In pursuing this measure I know that two points occur for our consideration. The first respects the general regulation of commerce, which, in my opinion, ought to be as free as the policies of nations will permit. The second relates to revenue alone: and this is the point I mean to bring more particularly to the view of the committee." Madison then suggested an impost bill which consisted of three classes of articles. The first consisted of enumerated articles, on which specific or ad valorem duties were to be levied. The second class embraced the free list. The third class embraced other articles on which a uniform ad valorem rate was to be fixed. He also suggested the articles to be enumerated in the impost being the first class, but left blanks for the duties to be filled out by the committee.

Boudinot, of New Jersey, suggested that the blanks be filled up with the rates recommended by congress in 1783. On the other hand Fitzsimons, of Pennsylvania, thought that the country had so changed since 1783 that it would be inadvisable to adopt Boudinot's suggestion. He then added to Madison's list as follows: "Beer, ale and porter; beef, pork, butter, candles, cheese, soap, cider, boots, steel, cables, cordage, twine or packthread, malt, nails, spikes, tacks or brads, salt, tobacco, snuff, blank books, writing, printing and wrapping paper, pasteboard, cabinet ware, buttons, saddles, gloves, hats, millinery, castings of iron, slit or rolled iron, leather, shoes, slippers and goloshoes, coaches, chariots and other four-wheeled carriages, chaises, solos or other two-wheeled carriages, nutmegs, cinamon, cloves, raisins, figs, currants and almonds," and then added, "Among these are some calculated to encourage the productions of our country and to protect our infant manufactures, besides others tending to operate as sumptuary restrictions upon articles which are often termed those of luxury."

In reply, Madison said: "I beg leave to state the grounds on which my opinion with respect to the matter under consideration is founded, namely, whether our present system should be a temporary or a permanent one? In the first place, I own myself the friend to a very free system of commerce, and hold it as a truth that commercial shackles are generally unjust, oppressive and impolitic. It is also a truth that if industry and labor are left to take their own course they would generally be directed to those objects which are the most productive, and this in a more certain and direct manner than the wisdom of a most enlightened legislature could point out. Nor do I think that the national interest is more promoted by such restrictions than that the interest of individuals would be promoted by legislative interference directing the particular application of its industry; for example, we should find no advantage in saying that every man should be obliged to furnish himself by his own labor with those accommodations which depend on the mechanic arts, instead of employing his neighbor who could do it for him on better terms. It would be of no advantage to the shoemaker to make his own clothes to save the expense of the tailor's bill, nor of the tailor to make his own shoes to save the expense of procuring them from the shoemaker. It would be better policy to suffer each of them to employ his tale in his own way. The case is the same in the exercise of arts and agriculture, between the city and the country, and between city and town; each capable of making particular articles in abundance to supply the other, thus all are benefited by exchange, and the less this exchange is cramped by government, the greater the proportions of benefit to each. The same argument holds good between nation and nation and between parts of the same nation." Such were Madison's general principles. He, however, admitted the following exceptions: First, other nations discriminated against foreign vessels; to protect our commerce we must do the same. Second, such industries as have already been established in the various states, and as bid fair to become self-supporting, should receive encouragement. Third, he favored embargoes in time of war. Fourth, he acknowledged that there was some merit, though not so much as claimed, in the encouragement of such industries as would provide means of defense in times of war. Fifth, his chief exception to entire freedom of commerce was the imposition of import duties to provide for a revenue.

Such were the main points offered by the leaders in the four days of general debate which preceded the debate upon the particular and enumerated articles brought forward by Madison and Fitzsimons.

It has been claimed by the advocates of a high protective duty that the congress which passed the first tariff law had for its main purpose the protection of our infant manufacturing industries, and that revenue, though it was an important consideration, was not the leading one. This idea cannot be borne out by the facts. To be sure, men like Fitzsimons and Hartley, of Pennsylvania, during the general debate, argued for protective duties, and some of the remarks would seem to imply that protection to manufactures was to be the chief consideration. Their whole course, however, during the debate on the separate articles, shows different results. In one respect all who took part in the debate agreed, namely, that the impost was to be a tax and was to be paid by the consumer. In view of this, the second point on which they agreed was a natural one, that articles of necessity should bear a low rate and that articles of luxury should bear a maximum rate which should bring the highest revenue without encouraging smuggling.

These cardinal principles were carried out to the letter in fixing the duties on various articles. Thus spirits, wine malt liquors bore the highest rates, ranging from 5 cents per gallon on beer to 18 cents per gallon on wines. The next highest rate was 15 per cent. and was levied upon carriages, etc., except ordinary farm vehicles, which paid only 5 per cent. The duties of 10 cents per bushel on salt, 1 to 3 cents per pound on sugar and 2½ cents per gallon on molasses were distinctly revenue duties.

In advocating a duty on salt, Lawrence said: "Taxes, to be just, must affect all and equally affect them, and not be left to fall partially upon a few. This is more the case with salt than any other article which has yet been taxed, and, I believe, is the only tax which will get at the pockets of those to whom it is said to be obnoxious."

The southern and middle states used sugar, New England consumed molasses, and so duties were levied on both articles to equalize the tax.

Millinery, gloves and paper bore 7½ per cent. duties, and on all non-enumerated articles the tax was fixed at 5 per cent. of the value at the time and place of importation.

It has been claimed by the advocates of high duties that the tariff of 1789 was a protective measure. On the contrary, the speeches of the members of congress, both in general debate and in fixing the rates of duty, show that the attainment of a revenue to pay the debts was its purpose. These same advocates of high duties call the tariff of 1846 and 1857 revenue tariffs and yet the rates fixed by them were 200 to 300 per cent. higher than the low rate of 5 per cent. in 1789.

—Forgetting the character of the day, the Cleveland Leader said in its Sunday issue: "The truth is tin plate has already been reduced from 50 cents to $1.50 a box. Mills are being erected and great reductions will follow." To ascertain how much truth there was in this astounding statement inquiry was made yesterday at one of the best known tin working establishments in this city. The reply was that for the quality of tin plate used for roofing, spouting and general tinning work the Cleveland concern had paid $11 a box before the passage of the McKinley bill. An invoice of eight boxes of the same quality received last week was billed at $17.50 a box. Instead of the price being "reduced from 50 cents to $1.50 a box" it had been increased $6.50 a box, or over 59 per cent.

—Henry Carey, who wrote the greatest book in favor of protection thus far produced in this country, said: "Protective duties are temporary in their character—the necessity for them tending gradually to pass away, leaving commerce free." Our McKinleyites swear by Carey and then go on piling up protective duties higher than ever, many of them more than tenfold higher than they were a century ago. When do McKinley duties come down from their lofty height 'up above the world so high' and leave commerce free?"

Purify The importance of keeping the blood in a pure condition is universally known, and yet there are very few people who have perfectly pure blood. The taint of scrofula, salt rheum, or other foul humor is heredited and transmitted for generations, causing untold suffering, and we also accumulate poison and germs of disease from the air we breathe, the food we eat, or the water we drink. There is nothing more conclusively proven than the positive power of Hood's Sarsaparilla over all diseases of the blood. This medicine, when fairly tried, does expel every trace of scrofula or salt rheum, removes the taint which causes catarrh, neutralizes the acidity and cures rheumatism, drives out the germs of malaria, blood poisoning, etc. It also vitalizes and enriches the blood, thus overcoming that tired feeling, and building up the whole system. Thousands testify to the superiority of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a blood purifier. Full information and statements of cures sent free.

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

THE RIGHT TO THE USE OF THE EARTH.

By Herbert Spencer.

(Reprint of Chapter IX. of "Social Statics.")

1. Given a race of human beings having like claims to pursue the objects of their desires—given a world adapted to the gratification of those desires—a world into which such beings are similarly born, and it unavoidably follows that they have equal rights to the use of this world. For if each of them "has freedom to do all that he wills, provided that he infringes not the equal freedom of any other," then each of them is free to use the earth for the satisfaction of his wants, provided he allows all others the same liberty. And conversely, it is manifest that no one, or part of them, may use the earth in such a way as to prevent the rest from similarly using it; seeing that to do this is to assume greater freedom than the rest, and consequently to break the law.

2. Equity, therefore, does not permit property in land. For if one portion of the earth's surface may justly become the possession of an individual, and may be held by him for his sole use and benefit, as a thing to which he has an exclusive right, then other portions of the earth's surface may be so held; and eventually the whole of the earth's surface may be so held; and our planet may thus lapse altogether into private hands. Observe now the dilemma to which this leads. Supposing the entire habitable globe to be so inclosed, it follows that if the land owners have a valid right to its surface, all who are not land owners have no right at all to its surface. Hence, such can exist on the earth by sufferance only. They are all trespassers. Save by the permission of the lords of the soil, they can have no room for the soles of their feet. Nay, should the others think fit to deny them a resting place, these landless men might equitably be expelled from the earth altogether. If, then, the assumption that land can be held as property, involves that the whole globe may become the private domain of a part of its inhabitants; and if, by consequence, the rest of its inhabitants can then exercise their faculties—can then exist even—only by consent of the land owners; it is manifest that an exclusive possession of the soil necessitates an infringement of the law of equal freedom. For men who can not "live and move and have their being" without the leave of others, can not be equally free with those others.

3. Passing from the consideration of the possible to that of the actual, we find yet further reason to deny the rectitude of property in land. It can never be pretended that the existing titles to such property are legitimate. Should any one think so, let him look in the chronicles. Violence, fraud, the prerogative of force, the claims of superior cunning—these are the sources to which those titles may be traced. The original deeds were written with the sword rather than with the pen; not lawyers, but soldiers, were the conveyancers; blows were the current coin given in payment; and for seals, blood was used in preference to wax. Could valid claims be thus constituted? Hardly. And if not, what becomes of the pretensions of all subsequent holders of estates thus obtained? Does sale or bequest generate a right where it did not previously exist? Would the original claimants be non-suited at the bar of reason, because the thing stolen from them had changed hands? Certainly not. And if one act of transfer can give no title, can many? No. Though nothing be multiplied forever it will not produce one. Even the law recognizes this principle. An existing holder must, if called upon, substantiate the claims of those from whom he purchased or inherited his property; and any flaw in the original parchment, even though the property should have had a score of intermediate owners, quashes his right.

"But time," say some, "is a great legalizer. Immemorial possession must be taken to constitute a legitimate claim. That which has been held from age to age as private property, and has been bought and sold as such, must now be considered as irrevocably belonging to individuals." To which proposition a willing assent shall be given when its propounders can assign it a definite meaning. To do this, however, they must find satisfactory answers to such questions as: How long does it take for what was originally wrong to grow into a right? At what rate per annum do invalid claims become valid? If a title gets perfect in a thousand years, how much more than perfect in a thousand years, how much more than perfect will it be in two thousand years—and so forth. For the solution of which they will require a new calculus.

Whether it be expedient to admit claims of a certain standing, is not the point. We have here nothing to do with considerations of conventional privilege or legislative convenience, we have simply to inquire what is the verdict given by pure equity in the matter. And this verdict enjoins a protest against every existing pretension to the individual possession of the soil; and dictates the assertion, that the right of mankind at large to the earth's surface is still valid; all deeds, customs and laws notwsthstanding.

4. Not only have present land tenures an indefensible origin, but it is impossible to discover any mode by which land can become private property. Cultivation is commonly considered to give a legitimate title. He who has reclaimed a tract of ground from its primitive wildness is supposed to have thereby made it his own. But if his right is disputed, by what system of logic can he vindicate it? Let us listen a moment to his pleadings.

"Hallo, you, sir," cries the cosmopolite to some backwoodsman smoking at the door of his shanty, "by what authority do you take possession of these acres that you have cleared, round which you have put up a snake fence and on which you have built this log house?"

"By what authority? I squatted here because there was no one to say nay—because I was as much at liberty to do so as any other man. Besides, now that I have cut down the wood, and plowed and cropped the ground, this farm is more mine than yours, or anybody's; and I mean to keep it."

"Ay, so you all say. But I do not see how you have substantiated your claim. When you came here you found the land producing trees,—sugar maples, perhaps; or may be it was covered with prairie grass and wild strawberries. Well, instead of these you made it yield wheat, or maize, or tobacco. Now I want to understand how, by exterminating one set of plants and making the soil bear another set in their place, you have constituted yourself lord of this soil for all succeeding time.

"Oh, those natural products which I destroyed were of little or no use; whereas I caused the earth to bring forth things good for food—things that help to give life and happiness."

"Still, you have not shown why such a process makes the portion of earth you have so modified yours. What is it that you have done? You have turned over the soil to a few inches in depth with a spade or a plow; you have scattered over this prepared surface a few seeds; and you have gathered the fruits which the sun, rain and air helped the soil to produce. Just tell me, if you please, by what magic have these acts made you sole owner of that vast mass of matter, having for its base the surface of your estate, and for its apex the center of the globe, all of which, it appears, you would monopolize to yourself and your descendants forever."

"Well, if it isn't mine, whose is it? I have dispossessed nobody. When I crossed the Mississippi yonder, I found nothing but the silent woods. If some one else had settled here and made this clearing he would have had as good a right to the location as I have. I have done nothing but what any other person was at liberty to do had he come before me. While they were unreclaimed, these lands belonged to all men—as much to one as to another—and they are now mine simply because I was the first to discover and improve them."

"You say truly, when you say that 'while they were unreclaimed these lands belonged to all men.' And it is my duty to tell you that they belong to all men still; and that your 'improvements,' as you call them, can not vitiate the claim of all men. You may plow and harrow, and sow and reap; you may turn over the soil as often as you like; but all your manipulations will fail to make that soil yours, which was not yours to begin with. Let me put a case. Suppose now that in the course of your wanderings you come upon an empty house, which in spite of its dilapidated state takes your fancy; suppose that with the intention of making it your abode you expend much time and trouble in repairing it—that you paint and paper and whitewash, and at considerable cost bring it into a habitable state. Suppose, further, that on some fatal day a stranger is announced, who turns out to be the heir to whom this house has been bequeathed, and that this professed heir is prepared with all the necessary proofs of his identity; what becomes of your improvements? Do they give you a valid title to the house? Do they quash the title of the original claimant?"

"No."

"Neither then do your pioneering operations give you a valid title to this land. Neither do they quash the title of its original claimants—the human race. The world is God's bequest to mankind. All men are joint heirs to it; you among the number. And because you have taken up your residence on a certain part of it, and have subdued, cultivated, beautified that part—improved it as you say—you are not, therefore, warranted in appropriating it as entirely private property. At least, if you do so, you may at any moment be justly expelled by the lawful owner—Society."

"Well, but surely you would not eject me without making some recompense for the great additional value I have given to this tract, by reducing what was a wilderness into fertile fields. You would not turn me adrift and deprive me of all the benefits of those years of toil it has cost me to bring this spot into its present state."

"Of course not; just as in the case of the house, you would have an equitable title to compensation from the proprietor for repairs and new fittings, so the community can not justly take possession of this estate, without paying for all that you have done to it. This extra worth which your labor has imparted to it is fairly yours; and although you have, without leave, busied yourself in bettering what belongs to the community, yet no doubt the community will duly discharge your claim. But admitting this is quite a different thing from recognizing your right to the land itself. It may be true that you are entitled to compensation for the improvements this inclosure has received at your hands; and at the same time it may be equally true that no act, form, proceeding or ceremony can make this inclosure your private property."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

THE great fortune of the Duke of Westminster, the richest of the rich men of England, is purely the result of appropriation. It no more springs from the earnings of the present duke of Westminster or any of his ancestors than did the great fortunes bestowed by Russian monarchs on their favorites when they gave them thousands of the Russian people as their serfs. An English king, long since dead, gave to an ancestor of the present duke of Westminster a piece of land over which the city of London has now extended—that is to say, he gave him the privilege, still recognized by the stupid English people, which enables the present duke to appropriate so much of the earnings of so many thousands of the present generation of Englishmen.—Social Problems.

WHOEVER, laying aside prejudice and self-interest, will honestly and carefully make up his own mind as to the causes and the cure of the social evils that are so apparent, does, in that, the most important thing in his power toward their removal.—Social Problems.

FELL NINETY FEET.

Forty Lives Said to Have Been Lost—Twenty Bodies Taken from the Ruins—A Great Many Other Passengers Are Injured.

AN AWFUL PLUNGE.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 28.—The Times-Democrat's Charlotte (N. C.) special says: The most dreadful railroad disaster in the history of the state is to be recorded; the story of the total destruction of the entire passenger train on the Western North Carolina road, an accident in which engineer, fireman, all the brakemen and probably forty passengers were dashed to instant death—a wreck from the debris of which only one man, the conductor, emerged able to walk back to the nearest station and give news of the disaster.

It met its fearful doom at the high bridge over Third creek, 2 miles west of Statesville. The bridge was built years ago of solid masonry. It is 90 feet high and is arched for the passage of wagons on the roadway beneath as well as for the waters of the creek. It is as safe as a bridge could be—in fact, a track on solid ground could be made no safer. Trains, therefore, do not slack speed upon approaching it. In the center of the bridge there was a gap in the gleaming line of rails. The engine struck the gap, gave a great bound and fell down into the space. Along with it went every car in the train, one after the other, with their human loads, crashing upon the hard ground 90 feet below. Every car was smashed into kindling wood and the wreckage was heaped in a confused and disordered pile. Down under were the torn and mangled bodies of the grew and unfortunate passengers.

In the fall the Pullman car had leaped over all the others, whirling through the air and striking the ground with terrible effect away in front of where the engine lay. It was mashed as one would crush an egg by throwing it against a stone wall.

From the debris of the passenger cars people were brought out, mangled in all sorts of ways, only two or three bodies being brought out intact. Three ladies in the first-class car were killed and every passenger in the sleeping car met death—not a living soul escaping. The deaths may reach forty, as it is not believed that all the bodies have yet been taken out.

The night was dismal, and to add to the horror of the situation the water in the creek was high. It was only through the most heroic efforts of those who had hurried to the scene of the wreck that the injured were not drowned. Twenty bodies are now lying in a warehouse at Statesville. The injured are having the best of care at private residences and hotels in that city. It is believed by some that malicious persons spread the rails so that the train would leave the track and dash into the viaduct. An east-bound train had passed over the viaduct only an hour and a half previously.

In one car was a company of firemen from Asheville who were returning from a firemen's tournament at Durham. Col. Cameron, who is among the injured, is state inspector general of small arms practice. He saved Auditor Sanderlin's life.

William H. Houston, of Greensboro, who was killed, was a leading merchant of his city. Mr. and Mrs. Link, of Lexington, who are among the injured, were married Wednesday night and had just began their wedding tour. Rev. J. M. Sikes, who was killed, was a graduate of the Southwestern Presbyterian university of Clarksville, Tenn. Dr. Sikes had been assigned to missionary work in China and was to have left for that country September 26. He was married. Mrs. Poole was drowned before aid could reach her. Three bodies have not been identified. One of these is an old lady; another is a lady with a ticket in her pocket which reads: "Mrs. George McCormick and mother, Elmwood, N. C., to Alexander, N. C." The third is also a lady. Upon her finger is a ring engraved T. H. W. to M. R. R. It is thought that all bodies have not been taken out of the debris which is piled up so high that it is impossible to make thorough examination. Not a soul who was in the sleeping car is alive. Miss Ophelia Moore, of Helena, Ark., died after being taken out of the wreck. The Western North Carolina railroad extends from Salisbury to Point Rock and is owned and operated by the Richmond & Danville.

STATESVILLE, N. C., Aug. 29.—The total killed by the railway wreck at Third Creek Thursday foots up twenty-two, and the injured number twenty-six.

Fell From a Balloon.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 31.—"Jack" Hogan, brother of Aeronaut Ed Hogan, of Jackson, Mich., who lost his life two years ago in experimenting with an airship on Long Island, fell 2,500 feet from a balloon Saturday afternoon at the Detroit exposition grounds and was instantly killed.

Judge Dillon Honored.

BOSTON, Aug. 29.—Judge John F. Dillon, of New York, has been elected president of the American Bar association. A resolution was adopted recommending the passage by each state of an act for the promotion of uniform state laws.

Tramp Burned to Death.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., Aug. 28.—A barn on the lot of Abner Moorehead at Crestline, O., was burned to the ground Thursday. The charred remains of a man and a pipe were found in the ashes. Supposed to have been a tramp.

Damaged by Frost.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Aug. 28.—Frosts in the northwest have greatly damaged wheat and other crops. In portions of Minnesota and the Dakotas ice formed, the thermometer marking four degrees below the freezing point.

THE FARMERS' PICNIC.

A Large Crowd at the Annual Gathering at Devils Lake Last Thursday.

When the regular train on the C. J. & M. pulled into the depot last Thursday morning it consisted of eight coaches well filled with picnicers bound for the Farmers' Picnic at Devils Lake. When the train pulled out of the station, standing room was at a premium, and by the time they reached Onsted every available place was filled by the happy crowd. As the train pulled out of Onsted, the rain, which had been threatening all the morning, began to descend and when the train reached Allen's Landing it had settled down to a drizzle. A large part of the crowd got off the train and took the boats across the Lake to Beardsell's Landing. Those that remained upon the train were carried to Addison, and after waiting about half an hour, were backed down to Manitou Beach and arrived at Beardsell's Landing in time to greet the first boat load that arrived from the north end. The rain ceased and for a short time the sun attempted to show his face through the clouds but did not make a very good success.

About half past eleven the farmers assembled in the grove west of the hotel and spread their dinners upon the tables and proceeded to get the best of them.

At two o'clock the crowd that had assembled to hear the programme was called to order by President I. N. Hathaway, of Addison.

A selection by the Wheatland Band then followed. After which the Waldron Glee Club sang a song which was very nicely rendered.

Rev. Frank Arnold, of Tecumseh, then made a prayer.

Marion Hathaway read the minutes of the last meeting and the treasurer's report, which showed that there had been received during the last year the sum of $386.82 and had been expended the sum of $240.75, leaving a balance on hand of $146.07. A motion was then made that the report of the secretary and treasurer be accepted, which was carried.

The Waldron Glee Club then favored the audience with another song. After which the President gave an address of welcome which we give below:

Friends from Old Lenawee and Hillsdale—and from the rest of the world, greeting! Another year, and its recreations, its joys and sorrows, its profits and losses, its pleasures and disappointments, has come and gone, and again we meet on the bank of this beautiful lake, beneath the shade of forest trees, to renew our friendships and form new acquaintances, greet our old friends, and make new ones, at this, our Annual Harvest Picnic.

For nineteen successive seasons has this reunion been observed until its recurrence is looked foward to by old and young, with as much interest and satisfaction, and with a more general observance, on the part of the citizens of this part of the state, than either of the stated legal holidays of the year. From the meager beginning, with a few hundred, it has grown to thousands, and from an association then bounded by school district lines, it has now embraced within its limits a territory larger than some of the old German Principalities. ▫ And as our newspaper friends would say, "it fills a long felt want," and how well that want is supplied is fully attested by the many thousand happy faces I see before me here to-day.

The bountiful harvest just closed, the present and prospective remunerative prices at which it will be marketed, the general good health and prosperity of the community, contrasted as it is, with desolation and distress in some portions of Europe and Asia, makes us glad that our lot is cast in America, and above all, in Southern Michigan, a portion of the country, that none can be found to excel and few to equal. Our climate, our soil, the diversity of products, the beautiful farms and happy homes, our public schools, the intelligence and thrift of our people, all combine to make it such that few of us would be willing to exchange; and from these homes we are gathered here to enjoy the day in feasting and some in social converse and pleasant reunions.

In the name of the Association, I extend to you, one and all, a cordial and hearty welcome.

A poem by Retta Kempton entitled, "The Fourth of July Celebration at Jonesville," by Josiah Allen's wife, was rendered in fine style and brought down the crowd.

Then followed another song by the Waldron Glee Club.

"I very much enjoy meeting and addressing the farmers of Lenawee here to-day. I am not going to instruct you in the art of farming because I am afraid I would be a poor instructor, although I can remember when, within a radius of ten miles of where I now stand, I earned my living by the sweat of my brow as a farmer's hired man, and my experience taught me that I was not suited for the profession. Neither will I attempt to make lawyers of you, although I have had thirteen years experience in the profession. I believe the less the people have to do with law and lawyers, the better off they are, and most of the differences between man and man might better be left to the chance casting of a die, than to the opinion of the court. But the law and lawyers will never trouble you if you do not seek them in their laire. I believe the world is fast approaching an ideal living place for man, and Columbia is the compeer of its best representatives, and the world's reform will be better accomplished by evolution than revolution. The question is not what we are, but what we should be. I want you to look long and deeply into the questions of the day, and when you find you are right then act in unison."

The Wheatland Band then rendered a selection, after which a song was given by the Waldron Glee Club.

Then followed the election of officers for the ensuing year, with the following result: President, Calvin H. Crane, Madison; Vice President, F. Hart Smith, Somerset; Secretary, Wm. Penn Hathaway, Rollin; Treasurer, William H. Wiggins, Adrian; Directors—Adams, Norman Sharp; Adrian, C. G. Wilcox; Cambridge, E. A. Blackmar; Dover, David Pontius; Hudson, I. S. Phelps; Jefferson, Chas. Klingensmith; Madison, Wm. Crane; Medina, Chas. F. Morse; Moscow, D. B. Pierce; Palmyra, Wm. McDowell; Pittsford, Jas. B. Patterson; Ransom, Geo. Burt; Rollin, S. C. Lombard; Rome, Silas Raymond; Seneca, A. Manchester; Somerset, David Mercer; Tecumseh, D. T. Hall; Wheatland, Geo. Wheeler; Woodstock, A. C. Osborn; Wright, Isaac Gibbs. It was announced that the directors would meet at the Comstock House in Hudson, on Saturday of last week at 1 o'clock P. M. to audit all bills and settle accounts.

During the programme it commenced to rain and when it was over with the ground was soaked and every available place that would or could afford a shelter from the rain was utilized. A person found it almost impossibly to get onto the porch at the hotel, and if he were one of the lucky ones he soon wished he was out of it. It was one mass of people from end to end, but it was a good natured crowd.

There were between five and six thousand people on the ground.

There were no accidents of any kind during the day.

It seemed as if half the city of Hudson were there, or at least it took two trains to carry away the people from the south. The city girls and the country cousins with their best girls were out in full force.

Taken all around it was a very disagreeable day on account of the rain, but every one seemed to be trying to make the most of it and enjoy themselves.

About five o'clock the crowd began to assemble around the depot, and about twenty-five people were able to get within its sheltering walls. The remainder of the crowd (there must have been two thousand) enjoyed themselves by standing around, holding umbrellas over themselves and friends, and trying to see how much water they could drop down their neighbor's coat collar. About five o'clock the first train appeared and took part of the Hudson people and those from the south. Then the Allegan delegation departed. Then the southern people got aboard their train and were taken to Addison, and then brought back through Manitou. Then the Toledo train appeared, and visions of warm suppers and a warm fireside began to flit through the minds of a great many, but they were doomed to disappointment. The train pulled as far as Addison Junction where they were obliged to wait until about seven o'clock for the regular train east, which was detained by an accident at Homer. After a great many stops between stations to repair breaks and the like, about ten o'clock the train pulled into Tecumseh. But it seemed as if even the railroad took an extra enjoyment in detaining the crowd, for instead of stopping at the depot platform so the passengers could alight with ease they pulled half way to the bridge and the tired picnicers were obliged to tramp through the long damp grass as best they might to reach the platform. And thus ended one of the most unpleasant days the farmer's picnic has ever enjoyed.

Cheap Farming Lands.

Do you want to buy or rent a farm? If so, southern Nebraska and northern Kansas offer you great inducements. Yield per acre this year: wheat 15 to 30 bushels, oats 40 to 75 bu., rye 25 to 45 bu., corn will yield 45 to 75 bu. Taxes are low, climate fine, plenty of timber and good water. Good markets, land cheap and terms of payment favorable. All inquiries answered promptly. Come via "Burlington Route" and you will be met at station and shown the country whether you buy or not.

A GERMAN OPERA.

We continue this week the letter of Miss Mabel Hayden, in which she gives a description of the Opera at Baireuth.

Now, I wish I could have power to give you some faint idea of the beauties of "Parsifal." "Tristan and Isolde" is a beautiful opera also—exquisite, but more worldly. Parsifal is glorious! grand! pathetic! I will make a feeble endeavor. Then, when I come home, I will show you the beautiful photos of Parsifal. I treated myself because I knew you would enjoy them too.

The first act opens with a priest of the Grail (the cup containing the blood of Christ, caught from the spear wound; and this cup was guarded by the priests and knights of the "Holy Grail." Tennyson, in his "Knights of the Round Table," I think, writes of these Knights of the Holy Grail—men who must be pure and strong to resist temptations) and two boys of the order. While they talk Kundry rushes in,—a wild creature who is forced as punishment for her great wickedness to wander tearless through the world, and to continue sinning, though remorseful. She is repulsed by the priest, who, with the boys, turn away in disgust. Amfortas, the chief knight of the Grail, is next brought in on a couch, where he must lie, suffering from a spear wound inflicted by the spear that represents that which pierced the Saviour. This is possessed by Klingsor, a knight of the Evil One, and the one who exercises power over Kundry. Klingsor wounded Amfortas when he yielded to temptation, and the wound could only be healed by this same sword, but in the hands of a pure man. Amfortas despairs of anyone being found who will not be weak, for he had been good so many years, and then, while a knight, sinned. He longs for death to release him from his mental and physical sufferings. When he is borne off the stage Parsifal, a wild boy of Nature's rearing, shoots a swan, the emblematic bird of the Holy Grail (the dove is, also). (Willie will remember, in "Lohengrin," that the knight was brought to Elsa by a swan). Parsifal is forgiven because he has shot the bird in ignorance of its sacredness, and because he is so horrified at his act on being told that he breaks his bow at once, and then is taken into the temple to witness the feast. The scenic change is marvellous here. As the priest and Parsifal slowly walk to the right, the forest moves to the left, to the grandest orchestral strains, and after perhaps eight or ten minutes of this—powerful in its wordless, majestic marching—the audience is looking into a magnificent temple, where the tables are spread for the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Think of the effect! The speechless monarchs of the forest marching in stately grandeur to music solemnly divine, sounding from beneath the stage,—the opera house itself dark,—and then to see at last the interior of a magnificent temple, and the music changes from the march of the forest to a march of the knights, who come in to take their seats, and Parsifal is permitted to see the cup uncovered. It is illuminated at the proper time and sheds a beautiful glow over the table and the face of the knight Amfortas, who begs for relief by death or a sinless man. Parsifal feels it his mission but does not tell anyone. Then, after the service, the scene changes again to the forest and there Parsifal is tempted by the flower maidens.

But I must go back a little. Kundry recognizes in Parsifal, from the first, his mission, and after the temple scene Klingsor calls her from below and bids her to tempt Parsifal. She is enveloped in gauze and smoke and her cries are pitiful when she says she will not tempt Parsifal. Klingsor commands, and then in front is dropped down from the flies of the stage festoons of roses and the flower girls dance onto the scene and all about Parsifal, who is strong enough to resist all temptations. Angered, they leave; then a bank of flowers slides back and there is seated Kundry, transformed into a most beautiful woman (Mailac, of Carlsruhe), and she does all in her power to fascinate; finally uses his mother's name to bring him to her, and then kisses him for his mother; but he realizes by this kiss that she is beguiling him and he breaks away from her and is true to himself, his Father, and his mission. Kundry then begs him to save her and confesses what she was trying to do and who rules her. Then Klingsor appears and hurls his sword at Parsifal, but it is suspended in the air over Parsifal's head and he, unharmed, obtains the sword and Klingsor is enraged but helpless.

After many years Kundry is brought onto the stage, fainting from weariness in her crazy wanderings, and is only just brought to when a mailed knight appears and Kundry recognizes him as Parsifal, who has come to heal the wounded king Amfortas, who seeks death by begging his comrades to put him to death. At this crisis Parsifal appears, touches the wounded king with the spear, the tip of which glows with magical effect, and then is proclaimed king of the Grail, because he was found sinless. The choir from above, the orchestral strains from beneath the stage, the solemn devoutness with which all is carried out, the darkness of the audience chamber, the drawing in the middle of the drop curtain, all enhance the sublimity, and some of the tableaux are so like the biblical scenes the old masters have made us acquainted with on their canvases, that it was a very solemn opera. When Parsifal, clothed in white, sits by a spring, and the ragged, dishevelled Kundry washes his feet, then dries them with her hair, Van Dye (Parsifal) is so beautiful and so pure looking—the old priest behind him with his red mantle on, Kundry at Parsifal's feet in brown—that all is very suggestive of biblical scenes. One does not feel it sacrilege, all is so beautiful and so pure—the music and the acting. This is the way I feel.

Too apt are we to think of Christ as on a crucifix, on canvas, or on the page of some biblical story; or else we have our own mental conception of Him. This makes one more fully appreciate how he was "tempted like as we are," and it makes one feel they can go to Him in the slightest difficulty and he will appreciate and help, because he sympathizes, not pities. I could not keep back the tears, it is so affecting and holy. I only hope you can all hear it. I want to hear it again. It did me much good mentally and musically.

Dresden's pet, Herr Schaedeman,—who was "Amfortas,"—sang and acted very well indeed.

On my way to the Opera Thursday, before I joined the Smiths, a little boy caught up to me and asked if I was going to hear Parsifal, and told me he was to be one of the angel choir. He was so proud and told me it is the third year he has sung in it and he gets "25 marks, too!" He was a bigger little man—bless his heart!—than Van Dye could possibly have felt. Well, it is over with. I enjoyed it way beyond all expectations; something unusual to say in this world, where the greatest pleasure is in anticipation usually.

A RELIABLE ASSISTANT.

The poet and the almanac maker agree that all seasons have their signs, but those of spring are most active and insistent. It is then that nature throws off the lethargy of winter and prepares to renew her bounties. It is then, also, that nature attempts to throw off the impurities that have lain dormant in the human system. This effort manifests itself in various ways—in the increased activity of old affections, in the appearance of boils, carbuncles and other eruptions, and in the various symptoms so familiar to those who have suffered. It is at this period that nature finds an active and a trustworthy assistant in S. S. S., which, in the work of purifying the blood and strengthening the system, has proved to be the most perfect spring . dicine ever offered the public.

W. T. Eccles has a new scheme on the tapis which possesses large possibilities. He has a fine spring brook on his farm, and is building a dam to form a pond, which he will stock with brook trot. He can easily make a pond that will cover three or four acres of marsh land and is quite sanguine that he can make the raising of trout a profitable business. Let him push his scheme. He can rely on our custom.

The front-page cartoon in Puck of September 2d illustrates in a capital manner the absurdities of the McKinley Tariff. It is entitled, "An Awful Unequal Race." Uncle Sam, on his old-fashioned Bicycle, stands no show against John Bull on his modern "Safety." The tariff question is bound to be a potent factor in the next Presidential campaign, and Puck may be relied upon to place it before the public in its proper light.

Last Sunday night or very early Monday morning an explosion took place in Palmyra which roused the neighbors from their slumbers. With the dawn of day it was discovered that the old hotel building had been shattered by a charge of dynamite. The floor was riddled, one end of the wing blown away and every window of the building broken. The house was being repaired to be occupied as a hotel with a saloon attachment. There has been a strong opposition to the starting of a saloon in town and it is charged that some over-zealous prohib is responsible for the blow up.

On Sunday, Aug. 23, 1891, occurred at 10:30 a. m., the usual hour for the morning service at the Presbyterian church, of Raisin, the funeral of Erskine Wilson. The pastor, Rev. J. DeHaan preached to a full house from this text, "And as it is appointed unto men once to die; but after this the judgment." The discourse was so well delivered that many who were in attendance have openly expressed their admiration for the ability displayed by the pastor in handling the text. Mr. DeHaan is rapidly gaining the respect and admiration of the people by the talent displayed in his sermons and his hearty hand shake after services. He deserves a full house at all times.

Another runaway took place last Saturday evening which might have led to very serious results. As Mr. E. C. Coryell was driving down Union street, near Chicago, he met Miss Lute Avery riding a bicycle. The horse took fright at the wheel, turned suddenly, threw Mr. Coryell from the carriage, knocked Miss Avery from her wheel, passing over her and then ran down Chicago street at a break-neck speed and on home. Both were quite severely bruised but neither received serious injury. It seems almost a miracle that Miss Avery was not mained or killed for the horse and carriage ran directly over her. It was a lucky and marvellous escape.

Isaac Allen, of the Allen Bros., of Cambridge, told a Jackson Patriot man that they were still breeding good horses, although they did not follow the track at present. Many a good one has been produced and nourished upon their farm. In years when the pigeons flew in dense and myriad flocks, this farm was a great resort for the birds. One day's trapping netted 1,568, and at one spring of the trap 546 were captured. Two thousand bushels is the estimated crop of peaches from their orchards this year, and with other good crops, the "boys" will have a glowing fire, a cheerful welcome and cider on the table this winter.

Miss May Temple has gone to Marshalltown, Iowa, to resume her place as teacher in the schools there.

An alarm of fire was sounded about half past nine o'clock last evening, and the report flew about the streets that the paper mill was on fire. There was seme lively hustling for a time and a big crowd invaded Brownville. Luckily the fire proved to be in the straw pile on the open lot across the road from the race, so the damage was not very heavy. The origin of the fire is a mystery, but probably some one was smoking near the straw and hence the fire. The steamer responded promptly. A second fire alarm was rung on about mid-night last night, which proved to be Jim Pocklington's barn in the east part of the village. A few stoves, which had been stored in the barn during the hot weather, were destroyed. Clay Owen found a bottle near by which smelled of kerosene and the supposition is that the fire was the work of an incendiary. The steamer did good work in confining the fire to the barn.

THE REBELS WIN.

Crushing Blow for Balmaceda's Army in Chili.

The City of Valparaiso Captured by the Insurgents—Santiago Surrenders Unconditionally—Balmaceda a Fugitive.

THE WAR ENDED.

VALPARAISO, Aug. 29.—Balmaceda's power in Chili is broken. His army has been crushed after five hours' hard fighting, and is scattered beyond all hope of reorganization. The revolutionists have taken possession of Valparaiso. The future of Chili for the time was settled, and settled conclusively on the hills to the east of this city Friday by the grim arbitrament of war. With Balmaceda practically a fugitive, without resources in men or money, with the principal seaports of the country in the hands of the congressionalists, and a consequent shutting off of all income from customs receipts; with President-elect Vicuna a refugee on board a German warship, and the country flocking en masse to the standards of the invaders, it is a matter of only a few days when the capital will fall into the hands of the revolutionary leaders. A new government, with possibly Judge Bellsano Prats, head of the last parliamentary cabinet of Balmaceda, or Manuel Jose Irrarazewal, head of Conzass' cabinet, at its head, will be formed and things will go along about the same way in Chili as they did before January 7, when hostilities were formally begun.

Gen. Canto and his army won Friday's battle by superior generalship, good fighting, assisted by good fortune in the killing of Balmaceda's generals, and the consequent demoralization of the army and the desertion of entire regiments. Ever since the arrival of the congressional army at Vina del Mar there has been a constant series of maneuvers for position on the part of both generals. Every day, and nearly every hour of the day, there have been skirmishes, in some instances amounting almost to battles. In nearly all of these the opposition has had the best of it. A close censorship of dispatches was established by Balmaceda however, and only an inkling of the reverses to his arms could be got through.

VALPARAISO, Aug. 31.—Santiago has been formally surrendered, the triumph of the congressional party is complete, and peace and quiet may be looked for in Chili before many days have passed. After the crushing defeat which Balmaceda's forces met with at the hands of Gen. Canto's troops on the hills back of this city Friday, and the subsequent entry of the conquering army into Valparaiso, the fall of the capital was only a question.

As soon as the news reached Santiago Saturday of the overwhelming defeat of the government troops on the heights of Placilla and the fall of Valparaiso and the people knew that Balmaceda's power was gone, and they had nothing to fear from his wrath, their enmity to his government broke forth. The cry was raised that the president should be killed and a mob started for his house. It grew in numbers and fury as it went through the streets, and by the time it reached the executive mansion was ripe for any bloody deed. Short shrift would have been allowed the president had he been caught. He knew that he would have little chance for his life if he remained in Santiago, and at the first receipt of the news of his overwhelming defeat he hid himself. The bloodthirsty fury of the mob was balked. The desire of the rabble for revenge found vent in the application of the torch. Soon Balmaceda's house was a mass of flames. Before it had been destroyed the mob marched off to the house of Senor Goday, the ex-minister of the interior and an ardent Balmacedist, and set it on fire. Then the residences of Balmaceda's mother, Gen. Barbosa, who was killed at the battle of Placilla; Senors McKenna and Eastman, the government newspaper offices and the homes of several newspaper officials were burned to the ground.

Comparative order has at last been restored in this city. It took drastic measures to do it. Rioters who were caught in the work were summarily dealt with, and many of them were shot. These prompt measures have cooled the ardor of the lawbreakers at last, but rioting was not stopped until property estimated at $1,800,000 had been destroyed.

Senor Don Claudia Vicuna, who was elected president to succeed Balmaceda, and who is now a refugee aboard the German flagship, acknowledges that the defeat of the government is final, and that any further resistance would be simply a useless waste of force and destruction of life and property. This seems to be the general opinion among the adherents of the government here.

Numerous arrests of government officials have been made. The insurgents show a moderate disposition, however, and there have been none of those bloody butcheries which usually mark the success of a South American revolution. The leaders say that every man against whom charges are made will have a full and fair hearing before the proper civil authorities when order is fully restored.

Now that fuller details of the fighting of Friday are at hand it appears that the jealousy and bickering of Balmaceda's generals was largely responsible for the overwhelming defeat. They had no concerted plan of action, and the battle was fought on their side with absolutely no regard for tactical advantages. Their men were brave enough, but they were, it is now pretty certain, simply sacrificed. The total number of killed on the government side is now given as 700 men, and of the opposition 200. It is impossible to learn the number of wounded.

Two human skeletons of giant size were unearthed at Lakewood, N. Y., by workmen. The thigh bone of one was 30 inches long.

OVER 200 KILLED.

Fearful Loss of Life During a Recent Typhoon in Japan.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Aug. 31.—By the steamer Empress of Japan, which beat the Pacific ocean record by eight hours, news was received of a great typhoon in Japan that caused the loss of over 200 lives. This typhoon struck the steamer on the evening of August 16 and lasted till the night of the following day. The German vessel Helene Rickmers was driven ashore from anchorage and thrown high and dry upon the bank, where she now lies greatly damaged and almost a complete wreck. Twenty or thirty of her crew are believed to have been drowned. While the typhoon was in progress the lighters which were bringing her cargo and provisions were washed away, a number of men being drowned. Great damage to property and life resulted all along the shore. It is believed the loss of life will be 250, mostly Japanese and Chinese sailors. The meteorological report says the typhoon was the most violent that has visited oriental seas for years.

SWEPT BY FIRE.

South Dakota Farmers Lose Their Hay and Wheat by Flames.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Aug. 31.—A special to the Journal from Faulkton, S. D., says: All of the northwestern part of Faulk county was burned over Friday night by a terrible and most destructive fire, 20 miles wide and extending from Faulkton 50 miles northwest. As far as the eye can reach the sky was lit up with burning stacks of hay and grain. The farmers are ruined. For a space of 20 miles not a foot of grass is left for stock that escaped the flames. The damage can not be estimated yet. A heavy gale fanned the flames.

NINETY MILES AN HOUR.

All Railroad Records for Fast Time Are Broken.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 28.—A mile in 39 4-5 seconds, or at the rate of over 90 miles an hour, is the fastest run ever made by a railroad train. This unparalleled feat was accomplished Thursday on the Bound Brook road between Neshaminy Falls and Langhorn by engine No. 206, drawing two ordinary coaches and President McLeod's private car Reading, which is equal to two cars in weight. The fastest 5 miles were made in 3 minutes 26 4-5 seconds; the fastest 10 miles in 7 minutes 12 seconds, averaging 43 seconds per mile.

Population of Alaska.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 31.—Census Agent Petroff has returned from Alaska, having completed the census of that territory. The following figures closely represent the population in 1890: Aleuts, 900; Indians, 5,000; Esquimaux, 18,000; Chinese, 2,300; whites, 4,800; total, 31,000. This is a decrease of 2,000 in ten years, but as during that time the whites and Chinese population has increased largely this really represents a decrease of 8,000 in native population.

Back at Cape May.

CAPE MAY, N. J., Aug. 31.—President Harrison returned Saturday, arriving at 4 p. m. by special train from Jersey City. Secretary Halford was closeted with the president for several hours examining a big bundle of official mail, the accumulation of the past ten days. The regular executive business of the president's office has been resumed, and will be kept up till the middle of September, when it is stated it will be removed to Washington.

Father and Son Drowned.

HOLLAND, Mich., Aug. 29.—Capt. Cornelius Verhoof left here Thursday with his 9-year-old son on the yacht Little Harry, bound north with peaches. A heavy squall came up and Friday morning the yacht was found dismasted on the beach about 8 miles north from here. The boy was found drowned in the cabin, but the captain's body has not been discovered. He was a Hollander, aged 72, and leaves a wife.

Bounties for Texas Sugar Planters.

AUSTIN, Tex., Aug. 29.—The records of the internal revenue office here show that Texas has but thirteen sugar planters, and their sworn estimate is 15,000,000 pounds, on which, if the sugar stands the highest test, they will receieve $300,000 bounty. The state convict plantation will raise about 1,500,000 pounds, which, added to the above, makes the sugar crop of Texas 16,500,000 pounds.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 28.—Mrs. H. M. Hotchkiss has presented $275,000 to the Yale preparatory school, which she founded. In addition to this gift Mrs. Hotchkiss has given the school seventy-five acres of land. Seventy-five thousand dollars of the cash gift will be expended upon a building and the remainder will be used as an endowment fund for professorships.

End of a Strike.

DUQUOIN, Ill., Aug. 29.—The five months' strike is practically ended. The coal miners' executive board and the Horn Colliery Company came to terms Friday and a contract was signed for a year. Probably all of the other operators will agree to the same terms and comply with all of the recent mining laws.

Three Persons Lose Their Lives—The Damage to Property Will Aggregate About $250,000—Cyclone in New Jersey.

RUSHING WATERS.

TROY, N. Y., Aug. 29.—So far as known but three lives were lost in the flood of Thursday night, but the monetary loss is fully $250,000. A dozen dams were swept away, bridges destroyed and roads washed out. The storm alarmed the residents of Poesten Kill, and W. McChesney, W. A. Castle, Robert Morrison and Garrett Ives and his wife attempted to cross the Poesten Kill bridge just as the structure was swept from its fastenings. McChesney was drowned. Mr. and Mrs. Ives were rescued, and Castle, who is an old man, was found at daylight hanging to a clump of shrubbery half a mile from the bridge. McChesney's body was found 1 mile from Poesten Kill Friday morning. He was 21 years of age. Old Mr. Castle was exhausted when rescued and badly cut from contact with the floating wreckage. Three dams were washed out at Sand Lake, a damage of $100,000 was done to mills and several houses were washed away. At Smart's paper mill in this city one end of the mill was torn out, a bridge was carried away and a damage of $10,000 was done. In the valley of the Lebanon Springs railroad the storm was equally extensive, and at Berlin houses were washed away and two persons drowned. Travel on the Lebanon Springs railroad was completely interupted by the washout and it is feared cannot be resumed within a week. The Hoosac river caught the force of the cloudburst, and the Lebanon Springs railroad is washed out from the yard of the company at Petersburg to Berlin directly east. Where the railroad tracks should be, between Petersburg junction and the village of Petersburg, the Hoosick river is running like a mill race and the tracks are in many places washed away. All the railroad bridges in Berlin and Petersburg are gone, and several houses in the latter village are partially turned over. It has ceased raining and the flood will now subside.

CYCLONE IN NEW JERSEY.

NEWARK, N. J., Aug. 29.—A cyclone swept over the lower part of this city at 2:15 o'clock Friday afternoon, coming with frightful velocity and without warning. The roof of a three story building on the corner of Bowery and Lexington streets was torn from its fastenings and whirled skyward nearly 200 feet, doing considerable damage by its fall. The storm first struck the Tomlinson company's spring works, smashing the 2-inch glass skylight and picking up a heavy gate in the yard and hurling it through the air. Then the blast made a skip and did not alight again until it reached Oliver street. Facing it was an untenented three-story brick building which was formerly used for leather manufacture. First the wooden steps went flying, being torn to splinters. Then the brick front for a width of 30 feet went in like an egg shell. After the brick front went down the blast got under the roof, throwing it on the leather factory which adjoins. The second floor was ripped up, wrenched away and laid upon the wreck of the roof.

WENT TO THE BOTTOM.

Two Big Steamers Collide in Australian Waters.

MELBOURNE, Aug. 29.—A collision occurred yesterday in the Port of Philip Heads between the steamer Gambier and Easby. The Gambier was bound from Sydney, New South Wales, for Melbourne, and was just clearing the heads when she met the Easby bound out. It was impossible for the vessels to clear each other, and the Easby struck the Gambier amidships, crushing her side to such an extent that when she backed away the water poured into the hold of the Gambier in torrents.

Seven minutes after the collision the Gambier gave a long forward lurch, then her bows rose high out of the water, then she settled back, and sinking stern first, she disappeared from view carrying with her five saloon passengers, fifteen steerage passengers and six of the crew.

As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I never pine

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent;
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

DEMOCRATIC TITLES.

We often say with joy and pride,
Our hearers to convince
Of some one's quality that he's
A veritable prince.

An equine beats the record while
She's foaming as the surf,
And then she is the reigning queen
Of all the Yankee turf.

In speaking of the lion wild
That on the human feasts,
We all admit, admiringly,
That he's the king of beasts.

It strikes me as remarkable,
And hard to understand,
How royal titles shine in this
Most democratic land.

Methinks in speaking of a prince
Whom we with favor scan,
We should proclaim him far and wide
A blooming alderman.

The fastest racer on the track,
To fame should ever be
The lady of the white house of
The turf, it seems to me.

The lion, while he caracoles
With fair or foul intent,
Of all the animal creation
Should be the president.

A "real bona fide" duke
In whom some good we see,
A senator we should proclaim
In our unbounded glee.

Our playing cards we e'en should take
And tear to smithereens,
Till postmistresses and governors
Supplant the kings and queens.

These names that smack of royalty
We should be far above,
If but to be consistent with
The principles we love.

FACING THE AMEER.

A Cool Head and a Clear Brain Win in a Bold Enterprise.

"The thing that earned me my first promotion," said Col. B——, of the Seventy-eighth Russian infantry, as we sat in the balcony of the little posthouse at Tchinaz (in one of the dreariest parts of central Asia) watching the red glow of sunset fading over the broad, shining curves of the Syr-Daria and the great plain beyond, "was rather a queer affair altogether."

I give this story, which is perfectly true, as nearly as possible in the words of the hero himself:

"It was certainly one of those things which are a good deal pleasanter to talk about afterwards than to go through at the time, and I don't much think that I should care to try it again, anyhow.

"This was how it happened: When I first came out here the Khokandese still held all the country that we Russians have taken since, and it would have been no easy matter to get even as far as this.

"As for the country on the other side of the river we knew no more about it than if it had been in the moon.

"Now, this tract beyond the river (which belonged to the ameer of Bokhara in those days) was just the very place that our colonel, Tchernaieff, particularly wanted to know about.

"We were pretty certain to have to invade Bokhara sooner or later, and it was specially important to know if we should find any water and forage on the way and what sort of country we should have to cross.

"So when I got down here with one of our flying columns, which was making a raid through the Khokandese territory to give the 'coffee-faces' a lesson, I bethought myself that it might be long enough before I was so close to the border again, and that, as I knew the native language pretty well and wasn't afraid of a rough ride, I'd just go over into Bokhara and see what it was like.

"Didn't the old colonel look pleased when I volunteered? And I hadn't to ask twice for leave to go, I can promise you.

"'I don't think you'll ever come back, my boy,' said he, 'but if you do you'll see that I know how to reward good service.'

"With this consolation I set off, accompanied only by two Cossacks.

"I remember well how queer I felt when I stood for the first time on the opposite bank and looked back at the campfires of our soldiers and then forward at the great wide waste of desert; but the bright sunshine kept my spirits up—it's wonderful what a difference it makes sometimes whether the day's fine or gloomy—and away I went, merrily enough.

"As for my two Cossacks, they looked as comfortable as if they were going to a picnic.

"We kept a bright lookout as we went along; and well we might, in a country where we might all have our throats cut at any moment. But for the first two hours we didn't see a living thing. However, I had already made up my mind what to do in case we did fall in with any of the Bokhariotes; and it was well I had, for all at once I caught sight of a cloud of dust, far in the distance, with a sort of glitter running through it every now and then, coming right down upon us.

"I saw my Cossacks looking at me to see how I took it, and so, of course, I had to put on as bold a face as I could; but I don't mind confessing now that I would have given all my chances of promotion to find myself safe across the border again.

"However, it was too late to think of that, for by this time we were so near that we could see we had in front of us a body of at least fifty horsemen, every man with a gun at his back and a sword at his side.

"I tied my white handkerchief to the point of my sword, by way of a flag of truce, and, bidding the Cossacks stay where they were, I rode forward to meet the Bokhariotes, who slackened speed as I came up and looked at each other in a puzzled kind of way, as if they didn't quite know what to make of me.

"'Peace be with you, brothers,' said I. 'You have doubtless been sent to meet me by the great ameer, under the shadow of whose throne the whole earth rests. May he live a hundred and twenty years! I bring him gifts from the czar of the Ooroess (Russians). Let our horses be swift to reach Samarcand, that I may make the dust upon the threshold of Hazret (his majesty) into ointment for my eyelids.'

"The fellows looked more puzzled than ever, but no one thought of doubting what I said; for, indeed, it could never have entered into their heads that any Russian could be riding through their deserts with only two men at his back, unless he had really some business there.

"So the leader of the band saluted me very politely, and said that he 'laid his forehead in the dust before the messenger of the great czar,' with a lot more rigmarole of the same sort; and then the whole party turned and rode back toward Samarcand, with me and my Cossacks in the center.

"We slept at Djizak that night, just where the desert ends and the mountain begins. The governor pitched a tent in the garden behind his house, and entertained the messenger of the great czar most sumptuously. My Cossacks—who, like true Russian soldiers, felt quite safe so long as their commanding officer showed no sign of anxiety—ate two pounds of pilaff (a mess of rice and mutton) apiece, and then fell asleep quite comfortably.

"My slumbers, however, were not so quiet by any means. I had heard enough of the ameer to be sure that he wouldn't be easily taken in; and if he found me out, it would be only being tortured to death by inches, instead of getting cut down at once.

"Once or twice I thought of waking up my Cossacks and making a run for it; but every time I looked out of the tent, there were two or three Bokhariotes strolling about with guns on their shoulders, and I soon saw that there was nothing for it but to go right through with it to the end.

"We started again a little before sunrise, and got to Samarcand about noon. The view of the Tchepan-Ata hills, standing out over the rush and foaming of the river, was very fine; but to my great disgust, as soon as we got to the outskirts of the town, they blindfolded me with a silken scarf, so I missed seeing just the very thing that I especially wanted to see.

"We passed through several streets, seemingly crowded, to judge by their noise. Then I felt myself led up a winding path and through a gate; and then, all at once, the bandage was taken away from my eyes, and I found myself in a large paved court, in the midst of which, on a pile of cushions, sat a short, fat, heavy-looking old man, with small, narrow black eyes.

"The moment the Bokhariotes who were with me came near him they all fell upon their faces; and then I guessed that this old rogue must be the ameer himself.

"'What seek you here, Ooroess?' asked the ameer, looking keenly at me.

"So then I plucked up courage and told him as steadily as I could (for the unsheathed swords all around were rather unpleasantly suggestive) that I had brought him gifts from the czar, giving him at the same time my gold watch and my revolver.

"He was quite delighted with the revolver, and must need fire it off at once, nearly shooting some of his own attendants. But just as all seemed to be going well, he shot a piercing glance at me and said:

"'Surely, my brother, the czar, would not send such gifts without sending a letter with them?'

"For a moment I felt cold all over, for then it seemed as if we were fairly caught at last; and I knew what mercy we might expect from these ruffians if once the trick were found out.

"I could seek my Cossacks looking as blank as I did, but just then a bright thought struck me.

"About a week before, my brother in St. Petersburg had sent me a playbill of the Alexander theater, with the programme of my favorite play of Shakespeare.

"I drew it out of my pocketbook with a flourish, and said:

"'The king hath spoken wisdom, and, lo! the letter of the czar of Ooroosistan (Russia) is before his sublime eyes.'

"The ameer looked at it, like a monkey at a Greek inscription; but the huge double eagle and the big 'Alexander' (the only word he could read) quite satisfied him.

"He dismissed me with rich presents, and gave me an escort from his own guard as far as the frontier, where I was mighty glad to find myself again, I can tell you.

"As for the precious playbill, it was laid up with all honor in the archives of Bokhara, and when our fellows took Samarcand, seven years later, they must have been rather astonished to find it there."—David Ker, in Golden Days.

Lively Wires.

It was a couple of hours after midnight and a light rain was falling. A couple of newspaper men were going home after a hard night's work. Suddenly there was a break in the line of the flashing electric lights. The lamp directly opposite the two men was spluttering and sending only a few gleams through the darkness. The two men involuntarily stopped to look at it. Then came a tiny flash from the bottom of the pole. "Look! There is a live wire hanging down," said one. Suddenly there came another flash directly in front of the men, and then another and another just beyond. "Take care!" shouted the other man. "The wire is on this side of the street." The two scribes hastily backed away, and prepared to beat a masterly retreat. A moment more and the whole street seemed alive with these dangerous flashes, while visions of the horrors of electrocution brought gray hairs to the heads of the reporters.

"Pshaw! They're only lightning-bugs!"

Two hats were jammed down over the owners' ears, and the men splashed along through the rain.—Albany Argus.

—Enough for a Fortnight.—Jeweler—"Going to the seashore, you say?" Customer—"Yes; for a short stay." Jeweler—"Better look at our fine assortment of engagement rings, sir." Customer (after examining the stock)—"Well, I think that five will be sufficient to-day."—Judge.

SHERMAN'S HUNGRY SOLDIERS.

How They Snatched Up a Dinner at Which He Had Just Sat Down.

Mr. J. C. Jamison tells an interesting story of Sherman's march to the sea. For eighteen days the men had been on quarters rations, and on this particular day they took up their weary march without any breakfast. Along about noon they came to a pretty plantation presided over by a cultured and wealthy adherent of the lost cause. His mansion was palatial, and everything the eye beheld betokened plenty.

Visions of a square meal arose before the tired boys in blue, and those in the van quickened their pace and soon were on a dead run for the house. Mr. Jamison was something of a sprinter in those days, and was the first to reach the house. He dashed through the kitchen and headlong into the dining room, but no sooner had he passed the door than he stopped, transfixed with horror. Before him sat Gen. Sherman and some of his staff officers, the guests of the house. Before them was a steaming dinner.

Anticipating instant arrest, Mr. Jamison tried to retreat, but the hungry hosts blocked the way. They shoved him forward, and a brawny hand reached over his shoulder and seized a savory spring chicken. That was a signal, and in an instant the groaning table was stripped of everything edible.

"General," shouted the outraged exponent of southern chivalry, "do you stand silently by and see me thus plundered?"

"Yes," quietly responded Gen. Sherman. "The boys are hungry. They have been on quarter rations for eighteen days, and we are living off the country. I guess they need the dinner worse than we do."—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

LEGALLY DEAD.

An Ex-Soldier Who Is Supposed to Have Been Killed.

"Did you ever see a dead man walk-out?" queried a Griswold street insurance agent of a friend the other day.

"Of course not."

"Well, there is a case of it. See that man on the corner?"

"He looks pretty lively."

"Yes, but he's legally dead. Let me tell you about him. We served in the same Ohio regiment in the war. At the battle of Groveton, which took place a day or two before Second Bull Run, he was detailed as a skirmisher. The confederates pushed forward, and as the skirmishers were running back to the lines this man stopped for a moment on a little knoll. A shell came through a gap in the confederate lines, entered the base of the knoll, and when it exploded he was lifted twenty feet high."

"And torn to pieces?"

"We thought so, and a thousand men saw the performance. He was picked up by the confederates, sent to a hospital, and then held a year and a half as a prisoner of war. Our captain reported him dead, he was carried down the rolls as such, and even now the tangle has not been straightened out. When taken prisoner the confederates put him down as James instead of John, and that helped mix matters."

"But was he badly wounded?"

"No. He did not lose a drop of blood, but was simply stunned, and it was six months before his hearing was fully restored. He has paid a claim agent over five hundred dollars to secure his discharge as a union soldier, but he has not got it yet."—Detroit Free Press.

SMALL SHOT.

HOUSTON COUNTY, Georgia, claims the youngest confederate soldier in the person of Augustus L. Dixon, who enlisted in 1863 under twelve years of age.

FIELDS MARTIN, who lives near Flowery Branch, Ga., has worn a coat only a few times since the surrender of Gen. Lee. He says he feels more comfortable without one, no matter how cold the weather is.

A SINGULAR incident is on record of this power of blind men to remember voices. Henry Singleton, colored, a member of Admiral Foote Post G. A. R., of New Haven, when in a neighboring town met a blind comrade named John Porter, who, though he hadn't seen Singleton for twenty-eight years, recognized him by his voice as one of three runaway slaves whom he had halted while on guard on the union line near Newbern, N. C., in 1862. Porter recalled the affair in detail, and also named Singleton's two companions—Henry Chase and William Ford. As twenty-eight years had elapsed since the incident occurred, the case is remarkable.—Brooklyn Standard Union.

ONCE Gen. Sherman was asked by a gentleman how it was that he had always been willing to fight under Grant, without questioning, or caviling, or opposition, or backbiting, or trying to supplant him. His answer was characteristic and a key to the situation. He said: "I could always plan a dozen different ways of accomplishing a military object, and Phil Sheridan would declare that he could fight any one of them out to victory; but we could neither of us tell which was really the best plan. Then we would go to Grant, lay the whole of them before him and he would tell us which plan was the best and why; and then we could see it too. Grant's place was where he was, at the head."—Troy Times.

MARTIN WATERS, living at Mechanicville, this county, has a family war record to be proud of. He was himself a member of the 169th regiment, New York volunteers during the late war, and was in every engagement of the regiment, thirty-three in all. He also had four sons in the war, three in the army and one in the navy; also one brother and eighteen nephews were in the volunteer service. His father, Wm. Waters, was in the war of 1812. His grandfather, George Waters, was a lieutenant in the revolutionary army. His grandfather on his mother's side, Joseph Perry, was also in the revolutionary war, and was wounded in the battle of Bunker Hill. And Joseph Perry was the uncle of Commodore Perry of Lake Erie fame. Mr. Waters is seventy years old and is on the pension roll for ten dollars a month.—N. Y. Sun.

A WONDER WORKER.

Mr. Frank Huffman, a young man of Burlington, Ohio, states that he had been under the care of two prominent physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case to be Consumption and incurable. He was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds and at that time was not able to walk across the street without resting. He found, before he had used half of a dollar bottle, that he was much better; he continued to use it and is to-day enjoying good health. If you have any Throat, Lung or Chest Trouble try it. WHY IT IS POPULAR.

Because it has proven its absolute merit over and over again, because it has an unequalled record of cures, because its business is conducted in a thoroughly honest manner, and because it combines economy and strength, being the only medicine of which "100 Doses One Dollar" is true—these strong points have made Hood's Sarsaparilla the most successful medicine of the day.

The declining powers of old age may be wonderfully recuperated and sustained by the daily use of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Do you understand Latin?" asked the student. "I regret to say I do not." "O, well, I can make myself understood I suppose, in German; lend me $5."

WOMAN'S HEALTH AND LIFE

depend more on regularity than on any or all causes combined. An actual or living death is the result of derangement of functions which make woman what she is; immediate relief is the only safeguard against wreck and ruin. In all cases of stoppage, delayed, painful or other irregularities Bradfield's Female Regulator is the only sure remedy. Sold by Jno. I. Orr.

The new instruments of the new Hudson band have arrived, and were used Saturday night for the first time. The boys will hold an art loan to help pay for them. Scarritt & Steuerwald are going to loan them the office towel—Adrian Times.

The September number of the North American Review has a rich table of contents. The leading article is entitled, "New Light on the Jewish Question." Mrs. Mary A. Livemore contributes an article which will be of great interest to all women. Rev. Dr. Chas. H. Eaton, pastor of the Church of the Divine Paternity of New York has a very able article on "The Ideal Sunday," in which he advocates the opening of art galleries and museums on that day, which will challenge much discussion.

We clip the following from the Chicago Daily News of Aug. 26th: The Harvey World's Fair Building company was incorporated yesterday. Its capital stock is $25,000 and the incorporators are G. P. Waring, W. T. Mills, Noble C. King and others. The company proposes to build a hotel on the academy addition just north of Harvey to accommodate visitors to the world's fair who desire to live in a temperance community while attending the fair. The building, which will cover an entire block, will be constructed so that it may be turned into flats eventually.

A Liberal Proposition.

Who has not heard of that paragon of family papers, the enterprising and popular Weekly Detroit Free Press? For a generation its name has been a household word, and it has become a synonym for all that is excellent, pure and elevating in journalism. It is delightfully entertaining without resort to cheap sensationalism, instructive without being prosy or pedantic. Combining the literary qualities of the expensive magazine with the bright, breezy characteristics of the newspaper, it leaves nothing to be desired by the average reader. It is looked upon as a welcome visitor by every family who reads it, while thousands regard it as indispensable and would on no account go without it. An enormous circulation of 155,000 copies per week attests its wonderful popularity. Recognizing the fact that there are those who are unfamiliar with its surpassing merits as a home paper, the publishers offer to send The Free Press to them for the balance of this year (over five months) for only 30 cents; a club of four for $1.00 or a club of ten for $2.00. All our readers should subscribe ot once. Send for free sample copy. We will send you The Herald and The Weekly Free Press for four months for fifty cents. Send your subscriptions to this office

The St, Louis Republic.

A prominent feature of The St. Louis Republic is the Tariff Department, which was begun July 10, and will be continued until the end of the campaign of 1892. This department is edited by Hon. William L. Wilson, of West Virginia, one of the ablest democrats in Congress, who contributes signed articles himself, and has also enlisted the co-operation of well known and authoritative writers on the various phases of the Tariff question. It is not only instructive and profitable current reading, but permanently valuable, by reason of its careful and accurate treatment of the subjects discussed. It is indispensable to all who are interested in the discussion of the one great issue of the campaign of 1892. The "Twice-a-week" Republic contains the Tariff Department, besides giving the news of the day at least half a week earlier than any weekly paper. It also retains the agricultural, story and other features which have made the Weekly Republic so popular, and is at once the best and cheapest news and family journal published in the land. Remember The Price is Only One Dollar a Year for two papers every week. Send for sample copies. Address The Republic, St. Louis, Mo.

The Toledo Fair and Exposition.

For this occasion, the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway will sell excursion tickets September 7th to 12th inclusive, good to return not later than September 14th, at half rates with fifty cents added for admission to the Exposition.

What steam is to the engine, Hood's Sarsaparilla is to the body, producing bodily power and furnishing mental force.

Families and tourists should buy second-class tickets save money thereby, and go in this car at the same speed first-class passengers do. Address T. J. Clark, Traveling Passenger Agent, Chicago, Ill., and be booked in the car from that point any Wednesday this year.

Valuable Coal.

The Sebewaing Coal Company's new shaft, recently sunk, shows coal which is pronounced nearly equal to the product of Pennsylvania and Ohio mines, and possessing fewer of the qualities of Illinois coal, which while valuable, is not suited for many purposes. The deposits seem to underlie all the northern portions of Huron and Tuscola counties.

Last Friday as Nic Willis and son, were going home from Tecumseh, their horse got the best of them just south of this village, run away, hurled the brand new buggy into the ditch, completely demolishing it and breaking Mr. Willis' arm. The horse was caught and Mr. Willis and son taken home.

Mr. Drake desires that all who intend to become, or who wish to become students of the high school here, would meet at the building Saturday afternoon, Sept. 12th, at 1 o'clock. Bring fellow students who would be interested in a talk upon "Possibilities." The new Professor has quite an extensive equipment in electrical science, and as he is considered unusually keen in that direction, students, the coming term, will have an exceptionally good chance to study the art of electrical science, as well as many others that he will put in the school. Mr. Drake has already secured about twenty-five foreign students and the board look for a prosperous school. There is no evident reason why it should not be such.

The special attraction for our late visit to Ithaca was the marriage of our cousin, Arthur W. Snedicor, of Ithaca, to Miss Maggie Foote, of Lafayette, and as Mr. Snedicor was formerly a resident of our village, will give a brief outline of the occasion which his many friends may be pleased to read. The wedding took place at the home of the bride's father, Charles Foote, on Wednesday afternoon of last week. M. D. Snedicor, brother of the groom, and Miss Minnie Foote, cousin of the bride, performed the part of the best man and lady in a very pleasing manner. Rev. J. E. Long performed the ceremony. There were relatives and friends of the contracting parties present from Ithaca and Lafayette; also, Mr. and Mrs. Albert VanRiper, of St. Louis, Mich., Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Snedicor, of Howell, Mr., M. D. Snedicor, of Owattonna, Minn. J. D. Arner, of Ridgeway, Miss Egbert, of Cleveland, O., and Miss Ewalt, of Central Ohio. Quite a collection of valuable presents were presented by the friends. Refreshments were served, after which an hour was spent in congratulating the newly married couple. They left on the five o'clock train for a few days stay at Howell and Milford, amid a shower of rice and best wishes of friends who accompanied them to the train. During their absence rooms were put in readiness for them to begin housekeeping on their return. Also, a reception, a surprise, for them. They returned on the evening train Monday, and were escorted to their new home by the best man and lady, to find the house filled with friends ready to renew their congratulations. Refreshments were served and the evening spent very pleasantly. They start out in life very encouragingly. Mr. Snedicor has a position in W. K. Ludwig's store, and is respected very highly by all who know him; his wife is one of the finest young ladies in Ithaca, who we believe will help make home a place of happiness and pleasure. We, in behalf of friends here, extend congratulations.

S. W. FARMERS' CLUB.

The September meeting of the Southern Washtenaw Farmers' Club was held at the residence or Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Wallace on Friday afternoon, Sept. 4th. Their home, the home of Mrs. D. W. Morgan, overlooks, not alone the winding and picturesque River Raisin, but the village of Manchester as well. Mrs. Morgan is the oldest pioneer resident of the place, and her father, Mr. J. Soule, was a noble pioneer before her. It is seldom one has the rare pleasure of meeting with a family that includes, as did this one last Friday, four generations beneath the ancestral roof: Mrs. D. W. Morgan, her daughter, Mrs. M. B. Wallace, her granddaughter, Mrs. Lizzie Wallace Booth, from Denver, Col., with her two little sons. There was a full attendance of club members, scarcely an absent one, and a few invited guests. The committee on membership reporting favorably on the previous presentation of the names of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Burtless, a ballot was taken which resulted in their reception as members. The program opened with a report of the previous meeting, read by the secretary, Mrs. J. F. Spafard. An essay next followed, entitled, "The Girl of the Future," written and read by Miss Annette English. A selection read by Mrs. J. P. Lapham, taken from the Ladies' Home Journal, a sketch of the life of Mrs. Talmage, the wife of Brooklyn's noted divine, was duly appreciated by all present.

John G. English read a paper upon the subject for discussion: From the present outlook, which promises the best returns, raising wheat or live stock? The writer of the paper took the cereal side of the question, maintaining that it is possible to keep up the fertility of the soil without live stock by a proper rotation with the use of red clover. He grew enthusiastic over the clover subject, declaring that it should be our national flower, but as he concluded his excellent production there was a murmur of "golden rod" from the ladies present.

The President, J. G. English, called upon the several gentlemen for their views and Messrs. Bowers, Merithew, Osborn and Hitchcock, of Sharon, the Palmers, from Bridgewater, and W. E. Pease, Richard Green, A. D. English and others ably responded.

Messrs. W. B. Osborn and S. M. Merithew believed in a three three-years' rotation and neither would indulge in specialty farming.

Richard Green and Albert D. English were earnest wheat advocates, as they are justly entitled to be, the former growing 1088 bushels of wheat on 35 acres, the latter 1032 bushels on 33 acres of land, this year.

D. W. Palmer, a life-long admirer and raiser of Short-horn cattle, very creditably took the live stock side of the question.

Space forbids mention of the many excellent things said on both sides of the subject, but however widely they may have differed during the discussion, all were unanimous in praise of the elegant repast that followed.

After supper the time was spent in social converse and the Club adjourned to meet with Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Palmer, in Bridgewater, Friday, Sept. 25th, at one p. m.

A Liberal Proposition.

Who has not heard of that paragon of family papers, the enterprising and popular Weekly Detroit Free Press? For a generation its name has been a household word, and it has become a synonym for all that is excellent, pure and elevating in journalism. It is delightfully entertaining without resort to cheap sensationalism, instructive without being prosy or pedantic. Combining the literary qualities of the expensive magazine with the bright, breezy characteristics of the newspaper, it leaves nothing to be desired by the average reader. It is looked upon as a welcome visitor by every family who reads it, while thousands regard it as indispensable and would on no account go without it. An enormous circulation of 155,000 copies per week attests its wonderful popularity. Recognizing the fact that there are those who are unfamiliar with its surpassing merits as a home paper, the publishers offer to send The Free Press to them for the balance of this year (over five months) for only 30 cents; a club of four for $1.00 or a club of ten for $2.00. All our readers should subscribe at once. Send for free sample copy. We will send you The Herald and The Weekly Free Press for four months for fifty cents. Send your subscriptions to this office

"Build a hell for these New-Yorkers!" shrieks Dr. Tolmage. What's the use? The chances are that they would call on the balance of the country to subscribe to a fuel fund.

A DAY AMONG THE LAKES.

We took a day's trip through the northern part of Franklin and Cambridge one day last week. It was a beautiful fall day and we put in the time to good advantage.

We drove directly to Tipton and there halted to make a call on the postmaster. Mr. Conlin is now running the old corner store, where the postoffice is located. He has remodeled the building and improved it very much. It is used for both store and dwelling with a public hall in the second story. Mr. Conlin is carrying a good stock of general merchandise and is evidently prospering in business.

Turning northward our first halt was at "Unce Ab" Simmons. We found him at home and ready for a visit. He is one of the early settlers in that section, and is apparently good for several more years on earth. He had only fifteen acres of wheat this year, but that was a big crop. He is a lover of fine stock, having now on his farm twenty head of horses and two hundred sheep; forty of the latter being registered merinos. He has more live stock on hand than he can winter to advantage and would like to dispose of a portion of it.

Mrs. Pitcher has bought the old Stout place and had just moved thereon the day before. The trade will doubtless be a good one. Frank is now in Buffalo and is doing well there.

It was exactly high noon when we arrived at Putnam's Hotel at Sand Lake, and we halted there an hour for refreshments. The season at the lake is about over. The steamer Manitou was out on the shore upon trucks, and the House seemed almost deserted. Still they served a first-class dinner, and at one o'clock we went on our way rejoicing. The season has been a very good one. Considering the counter attractions at both Sand and Devils Lake Mr. Putman has no reason to complain. The Lake Park Hotel will always have a good patronage, while in his hands.

We found Andrew Ayres drawing in his oats, which was a fine crop. He harvested thirty acres of wheat this year, of prime quality, but it was not yet threshed out. However he expects a good yield when the threshing machine comes around.

Jno. W. Monaghan was at home and good natured as usual. He is nicely fixed, having a farm of 200 acres and wholly out of debt. He had thirty acres of wheat, which was still in barn and stack, which will give him a good lift when threshed.

We then drove round to Dan Ayre's place north of Wampler's lake, and found him head over ears in business. He runs four hundred acres of land and harvested sixty acres of wheat this year. Dan is now interested in a patent fence post, which is bound to win. It is a wrought iron post, in the ground, with a wooden extension above ground and is just the thing for a wire picket fence. He has one of the fences on his farm that has been set five years, and is just as good as new to-day.

Half an hour's drive brought us around to Allen Bros. farm in Cambridge. They are marketing their peach crop and are rushed with business. They have four thousand trees now in bearing, and their crop this season will probably reach two thousand bushels.

Dan Mahar is in luck this year. He has thirty-five acres of wheat all cut, which will yield at least twenty-five bushels to the acre, and he proposes to build that new house this fall, which he has had in contemplation for the past two years. He is now at work on the foundation walls for the edifice.

C. E. Jessup is running the Springville store and is also postmaster. The two occupations seem to dove-tail together to excellent advantage. He is evidently enjoying a good trade.

Delos Lewis is residing yet on the old farm on the turnpike. He has 160 acres of land, among the best in Cambridge and is well fixed. He harvested thirty acres of wheat this year, but it is not yet threshed.

From his place, we drove directly home, having had a fine day's drive.

BRITTON BUDGET.

We learn that Mrs. E. F. Sink has made up her mind to stay in Britton and that she now has a larger stock of goods then ever. Mr. Sink also has a stock of Novelties, which he invites all to call and see before going elsewhere to purchase.

NERVOUS INDIGESTION.

The prime cause of most of the nervous disorders and ailments with which humanity is afflicted may be traced to indigestion. The irritable man, the unhappy woman, the fretful child, contrive to make all around them miserable. They dose themselves for nervousness, and perhaps find temporary relief, only to grow more nervous when the inevitable reaction comes. It is in such cases that S. S. S. gives almost immediate relief. It builds up the entire system, purifies the blood, gives tone to the digestive organs, restores the functions of the stomach, gives activity to the liver, and puts all the nerves in tune with health and good humor. It is nature's great remedy and never fails to give relief.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT. 10, 1891.

If Lieut. Governor Jones, of New York, should decide to run as an independent candidate for Governor this fall, it will make New York politics decidedly lively and may endanger the Democratic ticket.

The McKinley tariff law, they tell us, is the cause of bountiful crops at home and of poor crops abroad. Now, if that beneficent agency would stir up a big European war, the American farmer would be on the high road to wealth.

Grover Cleveland is less worried over the prospects for 1892 than most of his admirers. He is enjoying life at his summer home, content to let the future take care of itself. Meanwhile the respect which the masses of the people entertain for him grows stronger every day. No political leader since Samuel J. Tilden has had such a hold on the popular heart.

If the wool product of Ohio amounts to twenty-six million pounds this year, as estimated, the loss to the producers by the fall in price, since the McKinley tariff went into effect, is $780,000, estimating the decline at three cents a pound, as Bradstreet averages it. Perhaps this is the reason why the Ohio Republicans are trying to dodge the tariff issue this fall.

The New York World hits the nail on the head in this wise: "The people have made the present House of Representatives Democratic by an extraordinary majority. They have done so with a well-defined purpose. Their votes were given in protest against an iniquity, and the men they have elected are charged by them with the duty of correcting that iniquity by legislation."

The American hog has got into Germany at last. Commenting thereon, the Toledo Bee aptly says: "The multitude of congratulatory telegrams sent to Washington from all over the country on this success is evidence of how keenly the people feel the congested conditions of trade; how utterly inadequate is the home market to use up the supplies this great producing country furnishes so easily."

About the boldest theft on record is that of a Kansas man who employed a steam threshing outfit, men and wagons, and removed a crop of wheat from a farm, sold it and walked off with the money—about $1,000—in his pocket, without anybody suspecting that he was not the rightful owner of the wheat; and not satisfied with stealing the wheat he left without paying the men who had helped him handle it.

The Forum for September is an educational number. What a preparatory school for boys should teach, what is the proper education for girls, and whether our colleges are rightly related to present social life and conditions, are the three great problems discussed in this number in several able articles. Every person interested in educational problems, if not already taking the Forum, should purchase this number and read it.

The Senatorial row in Ohio between Sherman and Foraker is not helping McKinley's chances. Ohio is naturally a Republican state on a full vote, but the general situation favors Campbell. The unpopularity of the McKinley law, the fight for the Senatorial succession, the People's Party movement, Gov. Campbell's skill as a political manager and the Australian ballot law are all aiding the Democratic ticket. The indications now are that Major McKinley will be snowed under.

If Secretary Tracy's orders are properly carried out the Navy Yards of the country will be effectually removed from the effects of partisan politics. Some time ago he made the principal physicians in all the Navy Yards subject to competitive examinations, open to all, and now, most important of all, he has issued an order that "no officer or employe of the Government shall require or request any workman in any yard to contribute or pay any money for political purposes," and that "no workman shall be removed or discharged for his political opinions."

THE TARIFF AND WHEAT.

McKinleyites and the Foreign Market—How the Wheat Trade is Affected.

What a queer position the McKinley organs find themselves in when considering the situation of the farmers. During the debate upon the McKinley tariff they claimed it to be a farmer's bill and that by raising the duties upon wheat and flour the farmers would be protected from the pauper wheat of Russia and India. The increased duties placed upon manufactured products they also claimed to be for the advantage of the farmers and not the manufacturers, for, said they, it will stimulate the home market and thus increase the demand for and the price of wheat. At the same time the foreign market was depreciated.

Now, however, since the bill is passed and their real objects are accomplished, namely, to shut out all foreign competition in manufactured goods, thus giving the trusts and monopolies complete control of the home market, they are fairly teeming with estimates of the probable demand for our wheat in Europe. And they are forced to admit the fact that but for the foreign market the wheat growers of the United States would be in the slough of despond, for as usual we have a surplus of 152,000,000 bushels, or 30 per cent. of our total production, which must be sold abroad.

What countries need our wheat and what other countries will help us supply them, shown in the following table:

Countries.	Bushels.	Countries.	Bushels.
France	86,000,000	United States	152,000,000
Italy	24,000,000	India	44,000,000
Germany	18,000,000	Russia	64,000,000
United Kingdom	126,000,000	Roumania	40,000,000
Austria	32,000,000	Turkey (Asia)	12,000,000
Belgium	42,000,000	Australasia	6,000,000
Portugal	4,000,000	Canada	5,000,000
Greece	2,000,000	Argentine	4,000,000
Denmark	1,000,000	Peruvia	2,000,000
Holland	16,000,000	Algeria, etc.	12,000,000
Switzerland	3,000,000	Chili	2,000,000
West Indies	13,000,000	Egypt	1,000,000
Total	320,000,000	Total	328,000,000

The United States has, therefore, nearly one-half of the surplus wheat of the world, and our surplus is constantly increasing. Comparing the growth of population and the increase in wheat production since 1850, we find that the population of the United States has increased 180 per cent. At this rate how long will it be before we consume all our wheat at home? At least one-half of the amount of wheat which the farmers will have to sell must be exported, and yet we are told that the boasted home market consumes nearly our whole crop. The trusts and monopolies don't care a straw where the farmer sells his wheat or at what price; their concern is to compel him to buy their products only at monopoly prices.

VEXATIOUS TARIFFS.

How the Petty Annoyances of the Custom House Make Good Women Smugglers.

It has frequently been declared, and with reason, that tariffs are vexatious. Perhaps to the every-day citizen this aspect is the most offensive. There is a vast amount of petty smuggling done through the post office, less because persons are anxious to avoid the additional expense of the duty than because importation through the custom house is troublesome. Women are said to be instinctive smugglers, and certainly it is a common thing for such women as have been abroad and tasted the sweets of cheap Parisian gloves, to order such small articles by mail from Paris and run the risk of having their property seized for duty. In nine cases out of ten there is no seizure, and the purchaser saves from 25 to 60 per cent. on what would have been the cost of the goods if imported through the custom house. A young woman, who had more than once successfully imported gloves and other trifles, was summoned to the custom house in New York and informed that she must pay duty on a package brought by mail from a famous Parisian shop. She paid her duty with somewhat the feeling of a criminal caught in the act, and was informed that upon the next occasion of a seizure she must appeal to the treasury department at Washington. "But I am perfectly willing to pay the duty," said she, "if you'll only tell me how to do it without the necessity of coming to the custom house." The officer to whom she addressed this plaint then explained the complicated, red tape system through which she must go if she would enjoy the privilege of importing goods from Paris without offending against the laws of the United States. When he had finished she gave a sigh of despair and came away. Explaining the matter to an acquaintance she said: "I could scarcely understand the system, and it is so complicated that I think I'll just go on as before and run the risk of seizure. So long as they don't confiscate the whole of my property, I can better afford to import and pay duty than to buy in New York, as the retail prices in the shops here are nearly double those in Paris, while the duty is seldom more than 50 or 60 per cent."

Here is the whole thing in a nutshell. The probability is that had the lady in question been buying gloves in New York she could have bought Parisian gloves brought over by an importer and she would have paid nearly double the Parisian price, because importer, jobber and retailer must have a profit, not only upon the price of the goods abroad, but as well upon the duty which the government exacts; not because it needs the revenue, but because American glove makers demand that the price of Parisian gloves shall be artificially enhanced in order that American gloves shall fetch more than their value in the markets of the world. Thus the vexatious tariff tends to make law-breakers of good women who would shrink with horror from depriving anyone, whether a private individual or a government of what is rightfully the property of such individual or government. Those who object to laws prohibiting the sale of strong drink, as an invasion of natural right, should study the tariff laws and customs regulations of this country if they would learn what it is to be bound hand and foot with red tape.

A TARIFF MORTGAGE.

How the Steel Rail Combine Foreclosed Its Tariff Mortgage in 1886 and 1887.

Our mine owners and steel rail manufacturers having procured a tariff for themselves have taken advantage of it. The mine owners, being protected by a tariff of 75 cents per ton on ore, have, however, been willing to supply, at foreign rates, all the ore wanted in slack seasons, and have done so at a fair profit, as shown by their dividend statements. When the demand largely increased, they have taken advantage of the fact that it is a matter of years to develop new mines, and have charged 75 cents or more a ton extra profit for their ores. The pig iron manufacturers, in turn, when supplied with ore at reasonable rates, could and did sell at a profit (as shown by their dividend statements) pig iron more cheaply than it could be imported. When trade became very active, however, they paid the ore producers their 75 cents per ton extortion, and taking advantage of the duty raised their own prices accordingly. So of the steel rail combine. It paid the ore producers their extra profits, added a little more to their own profits on pig iron and then raised the prices on steel rails to the importing point. The unity of interest, therefore, between the ore producer, the pig iron manufacturer and the rail combine has been perfect, and has been scarcely more so in those numerous instances in which the same companies combined all their classes of business—as in the case of the Cambria Iron Co. and many others. Thus the tariff on ore, pig iron and steel rails acts as a perpetual mortgage, ready to be foreclosed upon any show of a prosperous revival of railroad building and big farm crops.

In 1886 and 1887 this mortgage was foreclosed, and Carnegie and his associates made millions out of it.

In 1883, 1884 and 1885 there was a great falling off in railway construction, the average increase in mileage being only 4,532; and the price of steel rails averaged $32.33½ per ton. In 1886 a boom in railway construction began and continued through the following year, the average yearly increase in mileage being 10,486, and the price of rails rose to an average for the two years of $35.81 per ton.

Bessemer ore at Cleveland, ton	$ 5.00	$ 5.75	$ 6.75	35 %
Bessemer pig at Pittsburgh	17.61	18.96	21.37	21 %
Steel rails at mill	28.50	34.50	37.12½	30 %

No wonder that the steel rail combine exerted every effort to prevent a reduction in the duty on rails, for when another boom comes it expects to foreclose its tariff mortgage again.

FOOLING THE FARMER.

Trying to Pull Wool Over the Eyes of Ohio Wool Growers.

The American Economist, the organ of the Protective Tariff league, is moving heaven and earth to explain the fall in the price of Ohio wool in spite of the increase in the duty on foreign wools, and groping about in the dark in its usual way has finally found a "circular" of the high tariff wool dealers, Justice Bateman & Co., of Philadelphia, which says that wool has fallen all over the world. But this does not account for the fall in prices here, since Americans are paying more for foreign wool than last year. This argument the Economist was soon obliged to discard. It soon found another reason, however, for saying that the McKinley tariff was a help to the wool growers, in that more wool has been consumed here this year than last.

It shows that imports of woolen goods have decreased $10,800,000 for the eleven months ended May 31, 1891. Then it adds as a salve for the Ohio wool grower: "Here are nearly $11,000,000 kept at home to employ American labor, and to enlarge the market for American wool."

A bigger falsehood could not well be told, but the Economist has no time to deal with small ones.

The facts are (1) that Ohio and Michigan wools have fallen in price from 2 to 8 cents per pound and Australian wool has risen correspondingly in our markets, and (2) that the $11,000,000 of goods which it claims has enlarged "the market for American wool" have been made from high priced Australian wool, as the imports of foreign clothing wool clearly shows. They have been as follows:

Months.	1889-90 Pounds	1890-91. Pounds.
November	662,49[illegible]	825,2[illegible]1
December	285,27[illegible]	648,947
January	818,645	2,736,729
February	801,44[illegible]	2,102,79[illegible]
March	2,22[illegible]	8,526,262
April	74,612	5,08[illegible],498
Totals	5,5[illegible],851	19,594,4[illegible]

Our imports of clothing wools have increased 270 per cent.

These facts have become so convincing to one of the political shephards of Ohio that he is almost persuaded that a high tariff on wool is a delusion and a snare.

—The present organization of the leading table glassware manufacturers into a trust lends a peculiar interest at this time to the following statement: "A merchant not long ago imported from Antwerp an invoice of medium table glassware, paying for it $1,775. On landing it at the custom house the McKinley duty was found to be $1,065, thus making the entire cost $2,840. The duty under the old law would have been $742.30, or $322.70 less than the McKinley duty." That explains why this trust has sprung up so soon after McKinley's high tariff law took effect.

Demonetized Silver.

It is safe to say that no one will seriously contend that any harm would have been done to the industrial and legitimate business interests of the world if silver had not been demonetized by any country. If such contention were made it would be without warrant of fact or experience. The demonetizing of one of the two metals that had practically constituted the world's money for all the ages could not have been done, even with the best intions in the world, without producing a severe shock to the world's industries, because its inevitable tendency would be to appreciate the value of the remaining metal, which would be manifested in decreased prices for the products of labor, and a general shrinkage of all values save those of debts. The latter being payable in the equivalent of the remaining metal would, of course, be increased in size in proportion to the increased value of the metal. The fact that silver was first demonetized maliciously, for the express purpose of getting the best of an enemy, as in France; or to advantage a nation to whom the whole world was in debt, as in England; or to strengthen the creditor at the expense of the debtor class of its own citizens, as in the United States, does not perhaps add anything to the weight of the burden that act laid upon productive industry, but it aggravates the situation immensely, makes it more difficult for its victims to submit, and largely unfits them for a dispassionate discussion of the subject.—Farm, Stock and Home.

Makes the Weak Strong

The marked benefit which people in run down or weakened state of health derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla, conclusively proves the claim that this medicine "makes the weak strong." It does not act like a stimulant, imparting fictitious strength from which there must follow a reaction of greater weakness than before, but in the most natural way Hood's Sarsaparilla overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, purifies the blood, and, in short, gives great bodily, nerve, mental and digestive strength.

Fagged Out

"Last spring I was completely fagged out. My strength left me and I felt sick and miserable all the time, so that I could hardly attend to my business. I took one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it cured me. There is nothing like it." R. C. BEGOLE, Editor, Enterprise, Belleville, Mich.

"I derived very much benefit from Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I took for general debility. It built me right up, and gave me an excellent appetite." ED. JENKINS, Mt. Savage, Md.

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

GEN. WOODFORD ON THE LAND QUESTION.

Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, of Brooklyn, made a speech before the New York State Teachers' association at its recent session at Albany, on "The Labor Problem." He thus spoke of the common declaration that the interests of labor and capital are identical:

Now, I know that there is a beautiful euphemism, in which we all delight to indulge, that capital and labor are one. We are all pleased to say that the interests of capital and the interests of labor are one. It is pleasing to state and restate the golden truth that capital is best served when labor is best rewarded, and pleasing to state the corollary, that labor is happiest when in union with capital. Now all this is true, and in some milennial age I pray that the suggestion of the clergyman, and the dream of the poet, and the euphemism of the politician may all be realized. But when Lazarus, working eight or ten hours a day, with back bent, goes out on Sunday afternoon, and, walking up one of our great city avenues, sees where Dives lives, it is very hard to get the poor fellow to understand practically that labor and capital are one. When he goes back to the tenement house, and up rickety stairs, and through fetid atmosphere climbs his way to where the wife and the babies are, brutalized by compulsory associations with want, or with drunkenness, or possibly with crime, uncomfortable in the heat and dirt, neither he nor wife nor babe understant how labor and capital are one! They are one in the great sweep of God's truth. They are one in the good time coming; but to-day and now it will be Christian, it will be wise, it will be patriotic for those of us who, thanks to fathers, thanks to Providence, or thanks to our own thrift have our own places on the capital side of this question—it will be well for us to understand that between the tenement house and Fifth avenue there is a great gulf fixed which you and I ought to try in some way to bridge over. And hence, not venturing even venturing to dream that what I suggest is exact positive truth, conscious that all thought upon this question to-day will need continuous revision, I wish, in the few moments left me, to put to you three or four simply questions. If I can get you, who are educated men and women, to begin thinking practically about these things, I shall have more than answered all the purpose I had in coming.

The general first took up the question of great corporations, and insisted on the vital necessity of compelling them "to live absolutely inside the law, with all that this involves." He next took up the land question and spoke as follows:

If all wealth is produced by labor from the earth, if the land is at the basis of the state, should not the law hinder every attempt to aggregate land and transmit it in great bodies to posterity? I presume this may be a startling question to ask the conservative teachers of our public schools; but yet remember that in England to-day they have reached the point where the state has had to step in between landlord and tenant and fix the rate of rent. What would be thought in this land of ours if there was an attempt to tell the landlord what he should charge either for house, or factory, or tenement house or farm? And yet, just as certain as that sixty millions of people to-day mean one hundred millions fifty years from now; as certain as that one hundred millions fifty years from now means two hundred millions one hundred years from now; as certain as that two hundred millions one hundred years from now mean ultimately a population that will startle imagination, I tell you, my countrymen, sooner or later we have got to meet the problem that the men and women to whom God gives life shall have chance in the soil and on the dust out of which they are made! Now, do not misunderstand me. I am not going to talk any wild agrarianism. I recognize the right of a man to labor—nay, I recognize and assert the duty. I recognize the right of a man to be secured in the product of his labor, and the duty of the state to protect him. I recognize that it is as natural for a man to seek a home of his own as for the bird to build its nest. I pity the man who doesn't want soil of his own, not owned by the state but owned by himself, as the home for wife and children. But in our dealing with land in our laws inherited from old England, are we not just reversing the way that God deals with us? What is there in which you have greater property than in your body? Nothing. Wherever you go that body is yours. You may take it upon any man's farm, and while you stand there your body is absolutely yours, and the use of the soil beneath your feet is yours. You pass, you take it with you, but when you die that which was more your property than anything else in the world, under the providence of God, molders back into dust; passes into the earth, the sky, the air. Even the attempt of the old Pharaoh to make a mummy of it and keep it forever is at the last futile, and the body, which was yours, God dissipates and scatters. Under the theory of our human government, a man who has accumulated one hundred million dollars in real estate, though he has no right to primogeniture under our American system to entail it in perpetuity to the eldest son of the eldest son, is yet permitted to pick out the preferred son. We recognize primogeniture of intellect, and the man with a hundred million of real estate can give, by his will, the whole of it to the boy who can take the best care of it and can make two hundred million out of it. And so it passes on, possibly guarded by our system against the accidents of stupidity and dissipation, which in England may, and so often do, dismember the estate. Let us protect labor, let us protect saving; but I leave this question with you: Is there not greater wisdom in the theory of the French law, which requires that when a man dies his real estate at least shall be divided among all children that he leaves, so that the tendency of society shall be always to make as many landowners and as many land-holders as be. I ask you to take the question away with you. I may be wrong in the suggestion, it is not ventured with dogmatism. But with an earnest thought of what this great future is to be, I want to ask you, educated men and women, teachers, ought not the trained intelligence and educated intellect of this land to devise ways that shall not hamper industry, that shall not rob labor, that shall protect the filial and parental instinct, and yet that shall give a direction of American law in the line of distributing land, not aggregating it? It may not be a large question now; there is coming a time when it will be a tremendous question. It may make little difference to you now that great railway corporations own dukedom after dukedom as they stretch out toward the sunset. It may make little difference to you now that men coming from across the sea, where already there is the rumble of tottering thrones, have bought great estates upon our western land, beside which the great estate of Devonshire is but a county to a state; it may be little to you now, but there is coming a time when even in this fruitful land there shall be hunger for land and hunger for bread. God help the republic to build wisely now, when it has the chance and the power, so that it may not have, at terrible cost, to tear down and rebuild in the years that are to come! Careful study of the old Greek system of land laws and of the Hebrew code, with its semi-centennial year of jubilee, may and will be pregnant with suggestions to us all.

He finally discussed the subject of organized labor, and, while admitting that many strikes have been unwise and evil in their results, he insisted on the right of workingmen to organize for the promotion of their own interests and asked: "What will counteract the accumulation of capital in corporations except the organization of labor on the other side? Is there any more natural remedy? If there is what is it?"

Stelzner's Grundzinsgemeinschaft.

Under the title of Grundzinsgemeinschaft or community-of-ground rents, a characteristic example of word building which would delight Mark Twain, Alfred Stelzner writes a pamphlet, Berlin, 1890, to prove that the idea of land nationalization is of German origin.

Mr. Henry George has on several occasions repudiated any claim to absolute priority of ideas in the great field of land reform. He has frankly admitted that the fundamental conception of the single tax has occurred to other men at various periods of the world's history. This pamphlet, even if correct in its conclusions, is therefore welcome to every man who has the reform at heart, as an evidence that the world is beginning to appreciate the value of the single tax, if the different nationalities are already disputing as to who has a prior claim upon it.

I regret to say that I have not been able to procure the pamphlet itself; my only knowledge of it is derived from a review which appeared in the April number of the newly founded Schweizerische Rundschau, but which is sufficiently comprehensive to give one a good idea of the contents.

Stelzner maintains that the principle of common ownership of land was practically applied by primitive German law, and was only set aside by the introduction of Roman law and the growth of the Feudal system. He shows how the land passed into the hands of the sovereign and his nobles; how the free peasants became serfs thereby; and how, in modern times, in spite of the abolishing of serfdom, the mass of the people are still in a state of servitude to landlords. Stelzner then considers the present reaction which has arisen against this servitude, and claims the honor of pioneer in the movement for a physician and philanthropist, Dr. Theodor Stamm, who in 1871 issued a book entitled "The Deliverance of Famishing Humanity." "Stamm," says Stelzner, "considers the transformation of the private ownership of ground rent into a community ownership as the rescuing task of civilization." The pamphlet further describes the work of the "Allwohlbund," which, like the "Bund fur Bodenbesitzreform," carries on the propaganda of the single tax in Germany.

As Mr. George's book on "Progress and Poverty" did not, I think, appear until 1879 or 1880, Stelzner's claim of priority for Stamm must be admitted; but this, of course, in no way detracts from the merit of our great American exponent's work. It still remains true that Mr. George worked out his remedy for the social problem independently, that he presented his facts and elaborated his plan with a skill and eloquence which far surpass those of any other collaborator in the same field, and that it was his book which, bursting upon the world with irresistible force, obliged every one to pause and listen to the arguments of the single tax.

On the whole, this German pamphlet is only another sign of the universality of the hoped for land reform, and a source of encouragement to those who are laboring in the good cause in America.

W. D. MCCRACKAN,
Boston, Mass.

BUT it may be said, as I have often heard it said, "We do not all want land! We can not all become farmers."

To this I reply that we do all want land, though it may be in different ways and varying degrees. Without land no human being can live; without land no human occupation can be carried on. Agriculture is not the only use of land. It is only one of many. And just as the uppermost story of the tallest building rests upon land as truly as the lowest, so is the operative as truly a user of land as is the farmer. As all wealth is in the last analysis the resultant of land and labor, so is all production in the last analysis the expenditure of labor upon land.—Social Problems.

WAVES ROLL WILDLY.

During a Gale a Monstrous Waterspout Is Formed—It Was 300 Feet High and Churned the Sea Into a Foam.

A STRANGE SPECTACLE.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Sept. 7.—The visitors who journeyed to the beach Saturday to watch the unusually heavy sea were treated to a sight rarely witnessed near shore. About 9 o'clock the wind was blowing furiously from the northeast. Suddenly the sea, at a spot near the shore, was unusually agitated, and as the eyes of all were directed to the spot a huge waterspout formed and began moving seaward in a southeasterly direction. The volume of water was balloon-shaped and was fully 300 feet high. There was no vessel in its track, but Tyler Emmons, a fisherman, narrowly escaped being caught by the mountain of water. He saw it approaching and pulled his boat out of the way of the swirling column, which passed within 100 yards of him. The waterspout left in its wake a broad track of foaming water and the incoming breakers rolled mountain high for half an hour after the spout disappeared.

The bluff at Long Branch has been eaten away in many places and bulkheads badly scattered, especially in front of the Octagon hotel, by a high sea and heavy wind. At Sea Bright the Highland Beach railroad tracks are inundated. In this village streets are washed out, while in the lowlands near here the first floors of dwelling houses are flooded.

CAPTURED THE CASH.

Bold Robbers Loot Trains in Texas and Colorado—They Secure Thousands of Dollars.

DEL RIO, Tex., Sept. 3.—Telegraphic news from Samuels, Tex., a small station on the Southern Pacific railway, located in a thinly-settled section of this county about 40 miles from this place, gives a thrilling account of a daring train robbery committed by mounted men at that place shortly after midnight Tuesday night. Dynamite and Winchesters were used as a means of intimidating the express messenger and gaining entrance to his car. All the money and valuables in the safe in the express car were secured by the robbers, as well as several sacks of mail and a registered package from the mail car. The amount of money obtained is estimated at from $15,000 to $20,000.

CANON CITY, Col., Sept. 2. Seven men held up a Rio Grande express train near here Monday night. They compelled the express messenger to open his safe and took $3,600 therefrom. The passengers were not molested. Bloodhounds are reported hot upon the trail of the thieves.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

OMAHA, Neb., Sept. 3.—During a severe rainstorm at Grand Island, where the state grand army and Sons of Veterans' reunion is being held, a lightning bolt struck the camp. Two lieutenants and four sergeants of cavalry troop K were seated in the first sergeant's tent. The lightning struck the tent, scattering the splinters in all directions. Nine men were struck. The doctors believe that all will recover.

PACED A MILE IN 2:06.

Phenomenal Time Alleged to Have Been Made at Independence, Ia.

INDEPENDENCE, Ia., Sept. 5.—Two of the world's records were broken in practice here Friday. Allerton trotted the mile in 2:10 flat, crowning himself king of stallions and enhancing his value $50,000. Direct, the little black pacing wonder, covered the mile in 2:06, breaking the world's stallion records for both trotters and pacers and traveling the fastest mile that ever was made in a sulky.

Secured His Apartments.

CHICAGO, Sept. 7.—Col. Elliott Shepard, editor of the New York Mail and Express, has engaged for himself and a dozen or more friends the largest parlor in the Auditorium hotel, capable of seating 200 people, and fifteen bedrooms on the first floor for the entire period during which the Columbian exposition will last. The cost of the accommodations will amount, it is said, to something like $25,000.

Inmates of Our Penitentiaries.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—A census bulletin states that of 45,232 prisoners in penitentiaries, 2,486 were serving sentences of less than one year, 39,757 had been sentenced to imprisonment for a definite term of years, 2,683 for life, 12 during their minority and 62 were under sentence of death and awaiting execution.

Cut in Two by His Plow.

ANTIGO, Wis., Sept. 7.—A farmer by the name of Westland, residing on a farm near the railroad track between Eland Junction and Wittenberg, was instantly killed while plowing. His team became frightened, by a passing train and he was thrown to the ground, the plow cutting his body in two.

Named a State Ticket.

ALBANY, N. Y., Sept. 4.—The state prohibition convention reassembled and after adopting the usual orthodox prohibition platform nominated J. W. Bruce, of Canastota, for governor, and an entire state ticket.

A Murderer Hanged.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Sept. 5.—Frank Danforth, the negro wife murderer, was hanged at 12:30 p. m. His neck was broken and death ensued twenty minutes after the drop fell.

CELERY INDUSTRIES OF TECUMSEH.

A Visit to the Several Farms in this Vicinity, on Which Celery Is Grown.

A DETAILED EXHIBIT OF EACH, SHOWING THE WONDERFUL GROWTH OF THIS NEW INDUSTRY DURING THE PAST SIX YEARS.

The celery industry, which has grown up in the vicinity of Tecumseh during the past six years, is assuming mammoth proportions. Eight years ago Dr. H. L. Stewart planted an acre to experiment with and the next season about the same amount. Six years ago he began work in earnest, others immediately embarked in the business, and now there are sixteen firms growing celery for the general market, with plantations varying in size from two or three acres to nearly fifty acres.

On Monday last we started out to make a tour of these farms, and although we expected to witness some fine fields of celery and extensive appliances for growing that vegetable, we confess that we were surprised to see the wonderful rapidity with which this industry has developed within the past half dozen years.

Our first stop was at Ed. Russell's. Not finding him at home we went on to George Hanford's place, half a mile south. The rear portion of his farm sets back into the big marsh, on which the largest celery farms are now located. The firm managing this place is called the "Willow Bank Celery Co." They have twenty acres in all, fifteen on Hanford's home farm and five acres east of the road, on a flat adjoining the old Tefft farm. They have put up a new building for washing and packing this summer, also an aermoter and large water tank, giving them an abundance of water. Mr. Hanford began four years ago on a small scale and the "Willow Bank Co." will do a heavy business this season. They have nine hands at work now, and the rush of the season has not yet arrived. They are raising a superior quality of celery, and the "Willow Bank" brand has gained a wide reputation for superiority. They ship to various points, all over the country, a good share of their product going to New York City. They expect to grow a large amount for winter use and will soon erect eight sheds for storage purposes, contiguous to their packing house. Mr. Hanford is the active manager of the firm.

Turning our face westward our next stop was at the Tecumseh Celery Co.'s farm. This is an extensive place. They have forty-five acres in crop this year. They have put in a new engine and boiler this summer, of fifteen-horse capacity. They have two large wells and two force pumps driven by steam power. One is used to furnish water for washing purposes and the larger one to pump water for irrigation, when needed. The two pumps working together will elevate seven thousand barrels of water a day. This is the fifth season the company has been running. They own 86 acres in all and have quite a patch of onions, cabbage and tomatoes. Their buildings are neat and well kept, with a good dwelling house near the road, with a beautiful lawn and flower garden in front. Ed Hollister, the manager, is an excellent man for his position. He claims to have the best appliances among all the growers, but allows his celery to advertise itself. The product of the Tecumseh Company is certainly gaining a wide reputation. We will briefly state here the process of gathering and packing, as it applies to all the farms. The celery is cut and the outer leaves trimmed off in the field, and brought to the house in boxes of convenient size for one man to carry. It is then spread upon racks in the wash room. After washing it is conveyed to the bunching tables, where it is put up, one dozen plants in a bunch, and tied. It is then packed in boxes, a box containing from six to twelve dozen, according to the size and quality of the celery plants. These boxes are then marked and loaded into a spring wagon to be transported to town. The washing process used by the Tecumseh Co. is one of Mr. Hollister's own inventions. It consists of an oscillating piece of gas pipe with small holes on the under side, forming a sprinkler. It is run by machinery and does the washing very perfectly. The Company sell their entire product to three customers, wholesale grocers. They prefer this plan to selling it in small quantities to a large number of buyers. They have a telephone connection with Tecumseh. We drove over the plantation with Mr. Hollister and passed an hour there very pleasantly.

The Prairie Side Celery Co. manage the next farm west. This is the place upon which Dr. Stewart first began the business of celery growing. The present company is composed of L. B. Stewart, the Doctor's son, Messrs. Bittman and Fitzsimmons. They grow the "Prairie Side" brand of celery, which is known in the markets both east and west. They have thirty-five acres in celery this year and are now employing twelve regular hands. They have an abundant water supply, both for washing and irrigation. The present season, however, has been so favorable for rain that they have had very little need of irrigation, but no one can grow celery successfully without facilities for that purpose. They are now sending out about three hundred boxes per week, and can put up about one thousand boxes per week in the rush of the fall trade. They will have six sheds for winter storage. They have a plan of carrying the celery from the field to the house on rope crates, which they claim is the best method of handling it. The different growers adopt different methods of handling their celery and putting it up for market, but the process is very similar with all of them. They have telephone connection. We had a good square meal at the boarding house on the farm and after dinner proceeded westward.

The next farm adjoining on the west contains twenty-six acres in celery. Ives & Strong operate a portion of it and Chas. H. Ives the remainder, Mr. Ives personally managing about twenty acres. The patch is on Mr. Ives' home farm. A new packing house has been erected this season. They have a steam engine of fifteen-horse power which lifts the water for washing and also for irrigating. They have two pumps, one a large force pump, with which they can throw 5,000 barrels of water a day into the irrigating ditches. There has been but little use for that this season. They are employing ten hands at present, and are now shipping about one hundred and fifty boxes per week. Four years ago Mr. Ives began with about an acre, and he has now one of the best farms on the list. His shipments are made to many various localities, both to large cities and smaller towns in the West and South. His celery is of excellent quality and he has no trouble in finding sale for it. Their office in connected with the Tecumseh telephone line.

Our next halt was at Russell Bros.' This place is on Joe Russell's farm, in West Tecumseh, and contains twenty-two acres in celery. The firm consists of three brothers, Joseph, Robert and Thomas. They give the business their own personal supervision and employ besides, at present, eight hands. The soil of their celery patch is among the best. It is a rich black peat and very deep. They have dug twenty feet for water without reaching the bottom of this peat bed. This is their fifth season in the business, having begun with two acres the first year. They have all the appliances for growing and taking care of a big crop. The water for their wash room is supplied by a force pump run by horse power. They like that method better than a windmill and regard it as more economical than steam power. Their box lumber is purchased in boards, dressed the right thickness, and the boxes are then put together on the premises. In fact, most of the growers adopt this method of procuring their boxes. These are about all one size, being 24 by 28 inches square and 6 inches in thickness. The sides are made of clapboarding and the ends of heavier stuff. On this place, at the north end, is a large well, with a big force pump, which is run by horse power. The well has been fully tested and will throw a four-inch stream the whole twenty-four hours without pumping the well dry. They are thus provided with an abundance of water for irrigation in dry seasons when needed. They ship to many different places but the bulk of their product goes to New York to a few regular customers. They will ship two hundred boxes this week and their trade will keep increasing until frost comes. Their crop is largely early celery but they will raise considerable for winter use and have the necessary storage sheds in which to preserve the winter crop.

At the rear end of Fred Gamble's farm, near the Mackinaw railroad, is a small marsh containing about six acres. The Gamble brothers, Albert and Ernest, are running this patch, having three acres of celery and the balance in cabbage, tomatoes and tobacco. The firm name is J. A. Gamble & Co. They raise the White Plume brand of celery and are turning out a fine article. They have a large well on the patch, with two force pumps run by horse power, which gives them plenty of water. They are quite sanguine that their tobacco venture will prove a success.

Geo. Hollister has a small patch of celery, about two and a half acres, near the brick yard. He makes no claims to being an extensive grower and yet from this small piece of ground he is doing a good business, supplying the local market of Tecumseh and Adrian. He supplies three stores in Tecumseh and takes about one hundred dozen to Adrian each week. He raises the White Plume and its quality is surpassed by none.

Five miles northwest of the village, in Franklin, Oscar M. Palmer and Wm. Thurlby have a fine plant. The firm name is O. M. Palmer & Co. and they have twelve acres in celery. This is their first year on that piece of ground, although Mr. Palmer has had four years' experience at the business in company with Joe Russell. Their land was originally a black ash swamp and has a living brook running through it. This brook was deepened and a course of eight-inch tile laid at a depth of six feet from the surface. Lateral courses run from the main ditch and there are six open wells connecting with these drains. In a wet time these drains are opened and the water let out, thus draining the marsh. By damming them up the water sets back and rises to the surface. It seems to be a perfect method of irrigation; at least it has worked splendidly this season, although it was quite expensive to fit the ground. Their washing and packing house is very similar to those of other growers. It is a neat two-story building, with a room above for making boxes and a washing and packing room below. They employ eight hands now and will soon need more. The water for washing is taken from a well, being lifted with a force pump driven by horse power. They are now shipping about one hundred boxes per week. They have one large storage shed and expect to put up others. Although this is their first season they are raising a very fine quality of celery, which is finding a ready sale. To show the fertility of the soil Mr. Palmer cut a cornstalk that measured exactly 12 feet 5 inches in length. A small patch of fodder corn is now higher than his head, which was planted July 13th, after a crop of strawberries had been gathered.

The Spring Brook Celery farm is located on the back part of the old Jas. V. DePuy farm in East Tecumseh, and is owned by A. J. Usborne. There are twenty acres of marsh land. He started on a small scale last year and this year he has over ten acres in celery. Next year he expects to plant the whole field. On the west border of the marsh is a side hill so springy and boggy as to be almost impassable. Wells sunk in this bog fill with a stream of flowing water. This bog slopes gently from the marsh to about ten feet above its level. He has sunk three large wells in this bog from which are laid four lines of pump logs the entire length of the field. This plan furnishes splendid irrigation and it will be permanent and reliable. Mr. Usborne intends eventually to lay tile drain in lieu of the pump logs. He has a nice little packing house erected. The process of washing and packing is much the same as at other places. The celery when cut in the field is put into a large box and conveyed to the house with a horse and cart. He is raising a splendid article of celery and of extra large size. Seven or eight dozen fill a box, of that which he is now shipping, the boxes being of standard size, 24 by 28 inches and 6 inches deep. He ships to various points and is now sending out about fifty boxes a day. The "Spring Brook" is finding a ready sale and is already gaining an enviable reputation.

North of Ab. Usborne's patch and adjoining it on the same marsh is a new farm just opened this season. It is a forty acre farm, thirty of it being marsh land. Twelve acres are now planted to celery. It is owned and conducted by the "Fountain Celery Co." and they will sell their product under that brand. There is a fountain of living water on the hillside adjoining the marsh, which will afford a never failing water supply. A dwelling and packing house is now being erected on the place, but the crop is all late, and shipments will not begin for a month yet. This place is in rather an incipient state at present, but they have thirty acres fit for celery growing, and the present outlook is that it will pan out into a first-class celery farm.

In the same vicinity, a mile or two north, Henry Scofield has a celery patch of about three acres. He is getting nicely started this year and will probably utilize his whole available land next year, or about ten acres. He markets a good portion of his crop at Adrian and other towns near by and ships some to distant points. Although the business is run on a humble scale now, it is destined to grow into paying proportions.

Alva White has a nice patch of five acres on the Dr. White farm South of the village. There are four more acres in the same marsh which he intends to plant next year. The flat was a bog until last fall, when it was plowed for the first time. He is now rigging up a wash house, has a good well dug and a force pump put in, and will be all ready to cut and market as soon as the crop is ready, which will be about the first of October. Although this is Mr. White's first season the outlook is favorable for an excellent crop.

We found Ed Russell this time. This is the fourth season he has been raising celery and he has fifteen acres under cultivation this year. He has lately finished a new two-story building for a washing and packing house, the upper story being used in which to make boxes. He has also put in a new aermoter and a mammoth elevated tank. A pipe runs from this tank into the wash room, giving sufficient pressure to force a strong stream of water. He finds it a very fine arrangement for washing the celery. He employs eight hands now but will soon need more as the season advances. He has a connection with the local telegraph line and finds this a great convenience. He has two large storage sheds now and expects to put up more during the fall. His brand is called "E. L. Russell's Blue Ribbon Celery," and it has established a first-class reputation in the market. Everything about his establishment is very neat and tidy, and all the details of the business are dispatched in a business-like manner. His shipments are scattered, but the larger proportion of his output goes to New York and St. Louis.

Amenzo Van Valkenburg has a patch of one and one-half acres near the Franklin town line, about three miles west of the village. This is the third year he has cultivated celery. He has good arrangements for washing and packing, but he has not found any irrigation necessary thus far. He is raising a prime article which he markets near home, at Detroit and other places.

Levi Bowen runs the old Bowen farm of 205 acres in Franklin. There is a marsh of five acres on the place, which was formerly so wet that it could not be plowed or tilled at all. Of late it has become drier and this marsh is now all planted to celery. He has found no irrigation necessary thus far and the land produces a bountiful crop. He started on a small scale with one acre, this being the fourth season he has raised celery. He has just begun shipping, but is not cutting a large quantity now, as his crop is mostly late. He ships to various points, having secured a good lot of regular customers. There is one large storage shed on the plat and he expects to put up one or two more this fall. His method of washing differs from that of all the other growers. He uses open troughs, filled about half full of water, and washes the plants by hand. Although this costs more time and labor than the usual method pursued he claims it to be superior; that it is not likely to injure the plant and cause rotting. His celery is certainly very nicely put up and he has had no trouble in finding a ready market for every bunch he can grow.

Last, but not least, is the plantation of the Wilson Brothers in Franklin. They own a marsh of about twenty-five acres, upon one side of which is a large county ditch which affords good drainage in a wet time. They began last year with six acres, the Franklin Celery Co., operating it last season. This spring the Wilson Brothers, Abner, Henry, and Andrew Jr., purchased the plant. They sank three drive wells, all of which furnish a constant flowing stream. These three streams are collected in a tank about five feet above the surface of the ground. An overflow pipe leads from this tank to a hydraulic ram about twenty feet distant, and the pressure is sufficient to throw the water from this ram through a smaller pipe into a large elevated tank above the packing house. Five feet fall gives twenty-five feet rise. A pipe from this upper tank leads into the wash-room to furnish water for washing. Another outlet from the small tank leads into an open ditch running the entire length of the marsh, and from this ditch laterals can be constructed for irrigation. The flow from the wells produce a constant stream of the purest spring water, that will yield at least fifteen hundred barrels a day. Lew Waldron put in the water-works. The marsh is surrounded on three sides by forest and clay hills. Their method of washing and packing is similar to that most used among growers. Ten hands are now employed. They have one large storage shed and expect to erect three or four more this fall. They have eight acres of cabbage and four of potatoes on the ground, but will put the whole acreage into celery next year. Abner Wilson's experience as a market gardener will be of much benefit to the firm, and with their unexcelled water facilities, they are certain to develope one of the best paying celery plants in this section. The grounds are located one-half mile east of Sand Lake station on the Mackinaw road, which will be their principal shipping point.

Puck calls David B. Hill: "New York's Political Octopus." This is an apt comparison. Whenever David gets hold of anything, it is a very hard matter to make him let go. Dalrymple's cartoon in Puck of September 9th is a very good representation of Hill's present attitude.

Why should'nt Tecumseh have a fair? An organization was started here about twelve years ago and if it had been properly sustained by our own citizens it might have been a permanent success. "Pebbles and Pearls" is the title of the new book by E. Cora DePuy, which is now in the hands of the publisher and will very soon be upon the market. The work is a concise history of Mrs. Agnes L. d'Arcambal's life-work among prisoners and in the interest of prison-reform, and is the first book of the kind ever written by a Michigan author. It will be issued by the "Review and Herald" of Battle Creek, Mich., one of the largest and most complete publishing houses in the world, and will be sold in the interest of the Home of Industry of Detroit, the charitable institution which Mrs. d'Arcambal founded for discharged prisoners. 'Pebbles and Pearls' will be a book of surprising information. "The story of Dee," which relates how Mrs. d'Arcambal secured a pardon for a Swede and sent him back to his wife and child in his own native country, and "The story of Rob" which tells how she secured the release of a poor unfortunate being who had been imprisoned for common drunkenness, fed and clothed and cheered him, found him work and made a man of him, will be worth many times the price of the book. It is a most valuable and timely work and Miss DePuy's friends await its advent with interest.

In searching through some old papers belonging to his father, Rev. F. Adkins found a letter written to the former by the editor of the Marietta Intelligencer, asking him to write a Carrier's address. The letter is a decided curiosity. Mr. Adkins complied with the request and the address appeared in the Intelligencer of Jan. 1, 1844. Below is the letter:

MARIETTA, Dec. 9, 1843.

DEAR SIR:—I write in behalf of the Devil. He thinks you may be unwilling to enter into a direct negotiation with him, and desires me to act for him. He wants an address to his patrons, for the approaching New Year. Will you oblige him, and me, by preparing one for him? Seriously, I want you to write an address for my carrier boy. It should be not more than 100 lines in length. You can judge better than myself what should be the character of the article, and I desire to leave the whole subject to your discretion. It is important that we have it by Christmas. If you will accommodate us, your paper shall be sent for the year free of charge, and I will pay you whatever you may demand in addition. Until yesterday, the want of one had not occured to me. If it had, I would have given you more notice. If I do not hear from you negatively by return mail, I shall conclude that you will undertake the matter, and by so doing oblige The Public, The Devil, and Your Obt. Servant,

BEMAN GATES.

The Annual School Meeting.

The regular annual school meeting of Union District No. 7, was held on Monday evening at the Central Building. The attendance was small, only about fifty voters being present and the business went off smoothly. The meeting was most too quiet to be interesting. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved and the annual report was read by Director North, accepted and adopted. Supt. Kellogg then presented his annual report. The election of trustees resulted in the choice of the three out-going members to succeed themselves: S. W. Anderson, for two years; A. L. Brewer and Dr. Geo. Howell, for three years each. We present a few figures gathered from the reports which will be of public interest:

The number of scholars of school age is 549; number who attended school last year 458; number of non-resident pupils 35. Cost of education per capita for instruction—Primary Department, $9.68; Grammar Department, $9.63; High School, $25.78. Average, $12.93. Total cost of school, including all incidentals, per capita: Primary Dept., $15.00; Grammar Department, $14.95; High School, $14.95; School, $31.10. Average, $18.25.

THEY ARE SORE.

Chili's Successful Insurgents Bitter Against Uncle Sam.

Reasons Given for Their Hostile Feelings—Nearly All of Balmaceda's Troops Have Surrendered—Quiet Being Restored.

A TALK WITH MINISTER EGAN.

VALPARAISO, Sept. 3.—Balmaceda will not have as much money when he reaches Europe as he thought he would by over a million dollars. One of his most ardent supporters and closest friends, Deputy Verduga, was captured Wednesday at Talca while he was making his way out of the country with the purpose, it is supposed, of joining his fleeing chief either at Buenos Ayres or in Europe. He was taken to Santiago and turned over to the authorities. He carried with him $300,000 in Chilian bank notes and $800,000 in drafts on London. This, of course, was promptly confiscated by the representatives of the junta.

SANTIAGO, Sept. 3.—Gen. Baquedano has issued a proclamation turning over the government to the junta de gobierno and requesting intendentes and officials of all grades to obey the orders of that body until an election can be held, a new president elected and a constitutional government formed. The junta has already appointed the principal officers for Valparaiso, Santiago and the other leading cities of the republic.

There is no disguising the fact that there is a bitter feeling against the Americans on the part of successful revolutionists. This feeling is so strong that unless it is placated in some way it may seriously affect American commercial interests in Chili for some time. The capture of the Itata first created the impression that the United States government was actively unfavorable to the revolutionary cause. This impression was intensified by the action of Admiral Brown when he visited Quintero bay August 20 to witness the landing of Gen. Canto's army. The admiral desired to see the maneuver and invited some of the other naval officers in Valparaiso to come to the flagship San Francisco and go to Quintero bay. Only the German officers accepted it. The San Francisco did not anchor at Quintero bay, but steamed around until the landing was effected and then headed for Valparaiso. A boat was sent from the transport Copiapo to visit the American cruiser, but did not succeed in getting aboard. Upon the arrival of the San Francisco Lieut. Dyer visited Intendente Viel to secure permission to send a cable dispatch to the navy department. This visit has been construed by the adherents of the junta as proof positive that Admiral Brown was acting as a government spy on the movements of the opposition, and no amount of explanation had been sufficient to remove this impression.

Then other things have served to strengthen the feeling against the United States. Not the least important among them is the general feeling that Minister Egan has been an active partisan of Balmaceda, and has used his influence in preventing the state department from recognizing the belligerent rights of the insurgents. Acting Secretary of State Wharton's action in ignoring Senors Montt and Foster, the congressional envoys, even now when it is a recognized fact that they represent the only government of the country, has increased the feeling against citizens of the United States. Admiral Brown's refusal to give up the political refugees who have found an asylum aboard his ships has also added to the general irritation. It is the general belief that Admiral Brown is acting under instructions or by the advice of Mr. Egan. The feeling against Mr. Egan is very violent, and there is little question but that his recall will soon be demanded. Mr. McCreery, the United States consul at Valparaiso, is in high favor. He rendered valuable services to persecuted women and political refugees whose lives were in danger.

SANTIAGO, Sept. 5.—In an interview United States Minister Egan denied emphatically the charges that he was an ardent partisan of the late President Balmaceda, or that he had profited or expected to profit by certain nitrate and railroad contracts.

"Ever since my arrival here," continued Mr. Egan, with a trace of bitterness in his voice, "the English, who are naturally antagonistic to me, have looked with a jealous eye on my success in obtaining recognition for American citizens and payment of their claims. So far as my sympathies go they are extended to all. For four months my house was the asylum of men like Edward Montt, Charles Walker-Martinez, Augustin Edwards and other prominent opposition leaders. Together with Consul McCreery I have saved from death and imprisonment many men. There are to-day in the legation twenty of the more prominent adherents of Balmaceda who have not left the country."

Minister Egan says he began to make proposals to Balmaceda August 20, that in the event of his defeat and in order to avoid further bloodshed he should deliver the government into the hands of Gen. Baquedano. It was on the night of August 28 that, forced by stern necessity, Balmaceda had to affix his signature to the decree completing the surrender.

All of Balmaceda's army has surrendered to the junta except Col. Stephen, with about twenty-five cavalrymen. They have gone to Argentine, where it is expected they will engage in guerrilla raids until they are captured.

Affairs have almost settled down to the ante-bellum state of quiet and order. There has been nothing decided as yet regarding the elections and the establishment of a constitutional government. It will take several weeks at least before the necessary arrangements for this can be completed, and in the meantime the junta de gobierno will administer the affairs of the country.

The governments of Brazil and Peru have officially congratulated the junta on the victory of the congressional party and the restoration of peace in Chili. A decree has been issued by the junta announcing that the notes issued during the revolution by Balmaceda will be recognized as legal by the new government.

VALPARAISO, Sept. 5.—The congressional army was composed very largely of volunteers. So secure do the members of the junta feel in their position at present that they have given orders that any of the volunteers who wish to do so may return to their homes, and hence the late victorious army is rapidly disintegrating. In a few days it will hardly be possible to see many signs of the late war."

SANTIAGO, Sept. 7.—The provisional government of the republic of Chili will be formally recognized by the government of the United States today. Minister Patrick Egan on Sunday received a cable dispatch from the state department at Washington instructing him to treat the junta de gobierno as the government de facto of the country. Information to this effect was unofficially conveyed to Senor Jorge Montt, president of the junta, soon after the receipt of the cable dispatch, but official action will not be taken before to-day. Minister Egan will be cordially received by the junta for the news he brings, if nothing else. Members of the provisional government were much pleased at the receipt of this information, though they were not greatly surprised. They felt, as soon as the United States understood the situation here, that order had been restored throughout the country and the authority of the Junta was universally recognized Mr. Egan would receive the instructions which came to him Sunday. It is the opinion here that Senor Pedro Montt, who is now in Washington as the representative of the junta, will be regularly accredited minister from Chili to the United States as soon as the matter can be reached. This, it is thought, will not be delayed many days.

United States Minister Patrick Egan has received a letter from the state department at Washington approving his action in endeavoring to bring about a cessation of hostilities in Chili.

PARIS, Sept. 7.—A dispatch received at the Chilian legation in this city from Santiago says that the provisional government of Chili has been constituted, and that it will send a circular letter to the powers and to all countries appearing disposed to recognize the present administration of Chili.

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—Senor Don Prudencio Lazcano, the Chilian minister to the United States, is stopping at the Hoffman house. He left Washington Saturday afternoon with his wife, and practically severed his relations as minister to the Chilian government.

A PITEOUS SCENE.

It Is Witnessed at the Hanging of Wife-Murderer Bulling at Savannah, Mo.

SAVANNAH, Mo., Sept. 5.—William Bulling, a wife murderer, was hanged here Friday. Shortly before his execution Bulling attempted self-destruction by shooting himself twice in the breast with a revolver which, it is alleged, was given him by his spiritual adviser, who has been arrested. Bleeding from his wounds, Bulling was dragged to the gallows, and held upon the fatal trap-door while the rope was fastened around his neck. The scene was piteous in the extreme. The condemned man gave vent to the most piercing shrieks, pleading in agonizing tones for his life to be spared. At 3:21 p. m. the drop fell.

Interstate Hay Palace.

MOMENCE, Ill., Sept. 7.—The second interstate hay palace will be opened here September 16 with an address by Gov. Fifer. This palace is expected to surpass that of last year both in size and beauty. It is being built of baled hay and straw and a framework of lumber. Fifty people are now hard at work on the elaborate interior decorations of the palace. The building is to be twice the size of last year's palace and will run 221 feet north from the entrance, with a maximum width of 224 feet. It will cover one acre of ground. The palace will be 32 feet in height, surmounted by three towers running up 90 feet or more. In the construction of the palace there will be used 210 tons of hay, 190,000 feet of lumber, fifteen tons of decorating materials and eight tons of roofing paper.

They will not be issued until the Chicago agency is supplied and there is an accumulation at the factory.

Looted a Bank and Post Office.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., Sept. 7.—The safe of the Sloan bank was blown into scrap iron by burlars Friday night and $4,000 in currency stolen. Only $70 in silver was left. The burglars then stole the cashier's team, drove to Correctionville, a distance of 25 miles, blew open the post office safe, and stole $200 worth of stamps. A reward of $500 is offered for their capture.

OUR HOG'S AHEAD.

Germany Raises Her Embargo on American Pork.

After Being Properly Inspected Pork, Sausage, Lard, etc., May Be Henceforth Shipped Into the Fatherland.

HOW THE CHANGE WAS EFFECTED.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—Secretary Rusk has officially confirmed the news that the embargo on American pork had been raised by Germany. The consent of the German government in making public the fact had to be obtained, as it had requested a delay for domestic reasons. But the formal notice was received Thursday that all the restrictions on pork, bacon, ham, etc., imposed by the decree of 1880 and 1883 had been removed, and that the inspected portion of that product bearing the certificate of the department of agriculture would be admitted into the German empire.

Secretary Rusk at no time has lost confidence in securing the admission of American pork into Germany and France at such time as the governments became convinced that the system of inspection in this country would be a thorough one. Germany and France for the last ten years have prohibited American pork from their markets on the ground that it was unwholesome as an article of food. While Secretary Rusk has always contended that American pork was the best in the world, he recommended the act under which the inspection was inaugurated, believing that these countries could find no excuse to longer continue the prohibition if it had undergone an inspection.

The German government having become satisfied with the inspection has forwarded official notice through its legation of its action. About ten days since at a conference at Cape May Point between President Harrison and the German minister to this country an agreement was signed to that effect. It was decided at that time to keep the matter from the public press until official action could be taken by the German government. This having been done, the official notice was on Thursday conveyed to the department of agriculture from the German legislature.

The German government has also made some valuable concessions to this country in the matter of reduction of duties on American cereals, the same schedule being accorded to American cereals as to those of Russia and other countries. The result of these negotiations, in the opinion of Secretary Rusk, will in time prove greatly beneficial not only to American meat products, but also to American rye, wheat and other products of the soil. Secretary Rusk hopes to secure the admission of American corn into Germany to take the place of rye, which is a short crop, as an article of food. To this end he has instructed Col. C. J. Murphy, his agent, now in England, to proceed to Berlin and lay the matter before the German government. There will be no proclamation by President Harrison in regard to the free importation of beet sugar from Germany. Beet sugar is already imported to the amount of $17,000,000 per year. Under recent legislation it would be possible for the president to restore the old duty one-half if the pork embargo were kept up. This suggestion was made months ago by Secretary Rusk and probable had some influence in securing the removal of the embargo.

CAPE MAY, N. J., Sept. 5.—The negotiations which ended with the withdrawal of the prohibition against the importation of American pork into Germany were concluded at Saratoga and not at Cape May Point. The conclusion was reached while the president was at Saratoga by John W. Foster, representing the United States government, and Count von Munn, charge d'affaires, representing the German government, and was approved by the president. The removal of the pork restriction has nothing to do with any question of reciprocity, but is based upon the acceptance by the German government of the inspection of imported meats by this government under the law of the last congress.

BERLIN, Sept. 4.—The Reichsgesetzblatt publishes an order to the effect that the prohibition of the importation of swine, pork and sausages of American origin shall no longer be enforced when such live pig or hog product are furnished with official certificates stating that they have been examined in accordance with American regulations and found free from qualities dangerous to health. The chancellor has sent instructions to the proper officials that the order be given immediate effect.

Made Minister to Hayti.

CAPE MAY, N. J., Sept. 5.—The president has appointed John S. Durham, of Kentucky, minister resident and consul general to Hayti. Mr. Durham is now consul at San Domingo, and is a colored man of education and ability. This transfer was made also on account of the necessity of dispatch, owing to the presence of yellow fever and the revolutionary troubles.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. "IF WE MIGHT."

If we might, O if we might Turn back the wheels of time, my friend, to-night;
If to the vale of childhood we could go
And climb again from those warm depths below
To this steep hillside; live from day to day,
The past, just as we lived it once, O say
Would you be glad to tread the pathway o'er,
The same old steps again, no less, no more?

If we might, yes, if we might Turn back the whirling wheels, my friend, to-night,
And slowly wind from youth to middle age
The tangled road; if every blotted page
We could omit and let the good remain;
In life's brief book skip all the grief and pain;
Would you be willing then to live them o'er,
The backward years that can return no more?

"If I might, O if I might,
Perhaps I would, perhaps I should to-night;
I am not wise. Old friendships were so true,
Old loves so sweet, and, even if I knew,
I must have all the sorrow, all the pain,
For love's dear sake I might go back again,
The thorny pathway to my willing feet
Would not be hard, I think it would be sweet."

But, if the spring, ah! if the spring
Lead on to summer; if the autumn bring
The winter snowflakes; if the joyous chime
Of wintry bells ring in the blossom time,
Why would you live again the same old year,
Knowing another spring will soon be here?
The dead May violets rather should you kiss,
And say: "Next year they will be sweet as this."

And if the life, ah, if the life
We live on earth, so full of restless strife,
So full of joyful love, or blessed peace
Is beautiful, why should you wish to cease
The onward journey? Do not wish again
To live life over, even without the pain
For O, my friend, when life's last sun is set
The bright next day is Heaven, do not forget.

—Julia H. May, in Boston Journal.

WHAT FRED SAW.

It Was Enough to Bring a Murderer to Justice.

The day was very pleasant, but I could not enjoy it.

Long, weary months I had been in the darkened room, and still they kept me there, allowing no breath of the pure, cool air to reach my feverish head.

I tried to open the window, but I was not strong enough, and I fell back in my chair, breathing the stifling air, which every moment became more oppressive.

I thought I could not endure it, yet how could I avoid it? There was only one way without danger of discovery; a step into the hall, and those spiral stairs would take me to the housetop—to the observatory.

Waiting until I was sure the way was clear, I stepped softly into the hall, and ascending the stairs, though with much difficulty, I was soon enjoying the forbidden pleasure of breathing the air, untainted with the fumes of the nauseous drugs that had been dealt out to me with an unsparing hand all through the long, cold winter.

How exhilarating! I wondered that I had been housed so long. I looked down upon the group of young ladies who were sporting on the lawn.

Jenny Magrair was there, the daughter of my host, the only woman I had ever loved. But I was nothing to her. She knew not how I worshiped her, and I should keep my secret well, for she was the betrothed of Gerald Macburn.

How I envied him, and perhaps hated him a little, for I knew that he had not won her love. She had pledged her hand to save her old father from poverty.

She had consented to the sacrifice, and Macburn was satisfied.

Turning away, I tried to banish the painful, hopeless thoughts that had been awakened.

Adjusting the telescope, I took a survey of the farming and wood land that stretched far away to the east for many miles.

I caught sight of two men whom I recognized as Gerald Macburn and John Layton.

They were evidently in search of game. The glass was small, yet a very superior instrument, and I could see them very plainly, notwithstanding the distance.

I presume I should have thought no more about them, had I not known that, but a few months before, they were bitter enemies. I wondered how the reconciliation had been effected.

While puzzling my brains with these thoughts, I had unconsciously moved the glass to keep them within range. I saw them stop, and I knew by their motions that they were angry.

I became interested. I could see them so distinctly that I found myself listening to catch their words.

I could see their lips move, and I saw John Layton's clenched hands. He was evidently much excited, but he did not offer to strike; and if one can judge by sight alone, he was inclined to avoid any altercation, while Macburn appeared to seek a quarrel.

For full five minutes they stood there, gesticulating vehemently. They were some distance apart, Layton all the while endeavoring to widen the space, and Macburn following him up.

At last Layton, goaded beyond all endurance, wheeled about and shook his fist menacingly at his tormentor. Macburn was so exasperated at this that he raised his rifle and shot him.

I saw the poor man fall out of sight in the bushes, and I saw Macburn calmly reload his rifle and walk toward the spot where his victim was lying.

Then I staggered and fell to the floor, and all was a blank.

When I awoke to consciousness I was in bed. Clothes were all about my head, and in the dim lamplight I saw a watcher sitting by my bedside. It was my old chum, Harry Wilmot.

"How is this?" said I, when I realized the situation.

"Thank God, you are coming around again," said Harry; "but it has been a hard case, Fred; you have been as crazy as a 'loon' for a whole week. I advise you not to try the observatory again till you are strong enough to crawl back."

At these words, what I had seen from the housetop flashed upon my mind; but had my life depended upon it I could not then have told that it was not all a dream. To convince myself I inquired for John Layton.

"He is—no one knows where," replied Harry; "but you are too weak to either talk or listen."

"No, I'm not, Harry; tell me about it."

He yet hesitated, but I urged him, and he yielded.

"John Layton disappeared a week ago," he said. "Absconded is the better word, for he took with him quite an amount of money belonging to his father. The old gentleman is very wroth, and has used every means to find him, but has not succeeded. Fanny Morton—they were to be married soon, you know—is almost crazy about it, and will not believe that John intended to do anything wrong. This is all that is known about it. But, speaking of marriage, did you know that Gerald Macburn and Jenny Magrair are to be married to-morrow?"

"John Layton is dead," said I, without answering his question, though it sent a pain through my heart that was agony to me. "He is dead, Harry Wilmot."

Harry gazed at me pityingly.

"There, Fred, I wouldn't talk any more," said he. "You are very weak yet. Try and sleep."

"You think I am still crazy, Harry!"

"Don't, Fred, don't! If you ever expect to get off this sick bed, you must be more reasonable."

My question was answered. I turned my face to the wall and tried to determine in my own mind whether I was sane or not.

I went to sleep thinking of it; and when I awoke the sun was going down.

Harry, who had been out during my sleep, had just returned, and his entrance had probably waked me.

"How do you feel now, Fred?" said he, drawing a chair to the bedside.

"Much better and stronger, Harry. I have had a most refreshing sleep."

We talked awhile, and then I abruptly asked him if he would grant me one favor on the morrow.

"Certainly, Fred, if it isn't asking too much."

"It will be quite easy, though none the less important. Will you promise to carry out my directions faithfully?"

"If reasonable, yes. But couldn't you postpone it for a day? You know the wedding comes off to-morrow."

"Not an hour, Harry, after sunrise in the morning; and it should be done to-night, if it were not too late."

"Well, go on, Fred, and let us hear what it is."

I did not tell him what I had seen from the housetop, for I did not consider myself competent to make an accusation against anyone, but I described the spot where I firmly believed that I saw Gerald Macburn murder John Layton, and I requested him to take three or more companions with him—men that could be trusted—and explore the spot thoroughly.

"Will you promise, Harry? Now, don't say you will and then forget it, thinking I do not know what I am talking about, for I tell you I am not insane now."

"Well, Fred, I promise."

I knew that Harry could be depended upon, and I felt much relieved, passing a very quiet night.

Gerald Macburn was to be married at nine o'clock, and at ten they were to start on their wedding tour.

This was why I was in such haste. If he was guilty, as I firmly believed, I wished to prevent the marriage, or at least to arrest him before he stepped aboard the train.

I hardly know how I passed the time till Harry's return, I was so impatient.

I heard the carriages of the guests drive up to the door, and I could faintly hear the busy hum of preparation below; and then the old town clock, striking the hour of eight, startled me.

Only one hour longer, and Harry had not returned. What if he had missed the spot?

I watched the hands of the little clock, and for once they went too fast. I could almost see them move. Twenty—twenty-five — thirty minutes past eight, and would he never come! Yes, thank God! I heard the galloping of a horse on the gravelled road, and in a moment more Harry entered the room flushed with excitement.

"What did you find, Harry? Quick! Quick!"

"The body of John Layton!"

"I knew it, Harry! I saw the deed—I saw the murderer. But there is no time to lose. The wretch must be secured before it is too late. Bring a magistrate and an officer as quick as you can."

He was not long away, and he brought with him the old doctor, who was also a justice, while an officer entered by the back door and adroitly made his way to my room, unobserved.

I made my deposition, the warrant was issued and handed to the officer, and he went softly down the stairs to make the arrest.

He was not a moment too soon, nor too late, and he laid his hand upon Gerald Macburn's shoulder just in time to prevent Jenny Magrair from becoming the wife of a murderer.

Macburn was tried, convicted and executed.

My testimony was sufficient, for the power of the telescope was tested, proving beyond doubt that I had been an eye-witness to the murder, though miles away from the spot.

Jenny quickly recovered from the shock, and I from my sickness, and—we are married.—Boston Globe.

One Good Trait.

A custom prevails at funerals among the Dutch settlers in Natal for some one of the deceased's friends to make a short oration at his open grave, recording his virtues and the good deeds, if any, performed by him during his earthly sojourn. It happened, however, that an individual died who was not considered to have been possessed of any virtues whatever, and had never performed any good deeds. Consequently in his case the melancholy obsequies were nearly being completed in silence, when one of his countrymen, raising his voice, said, in solemn tones:

"Him was a berry good smoker."—Jury.

The St. Louis Republic.

A prominent feature of The St. Louis Republic is the Tariff Department, which was begun July 10, and will be continued until the end of the campaign of 1892. This department is edited by Hon. William L. Wilson, of W. Virginia, one of the ablest democrats in Congress, who contributes signed articles himself, and has also enlisted the co-operation of well known and authoritative writers on the various phases of the Tariff question. It is not only instructive and profitable current reading, but permanently valuable, by reason of its careful and accurate treatment of the subjects discussed. It is indispensable to all who are interested in the discussion of the one great issue of the campaign of 1892. The "Twice-a-week" Republic contains the Tariff Department, besides giving the news of the day at least half a week earlier than any weekly paper. It also retains the agricultural, story and other features which have made the Weekly Republic so popular, and is at once the best and cheapest news and family journal published in the land. Remember The Price is Only One Dollar a Year for two papers every week. Send for sample copies. Address The Republic, St. Louis, Mo.

Cheap Reading.

TO THE TEACHERS OF LENAWEE.

Office of County School Commissioner,
Tecumseh, Sept. 7th, 1891.

The managers of the Lenawee County Agricultural Society have made provision for an educational exhibit at the coming fair, to be held at Adrian, Sept. 21-25.

Prof. Wilson, my predecessor, took the initiatory steps, during the past school year, to secure a suitable exhibit this fall, by bringing the sheme to the attention of the teachers throughout the county, and the majority of them agreed to use their best endeavors to carry it into effect.

I desire, through the courtesy of the county press, to call attention of the teachers of the county once more to the subject.

The exhibit will consist of examination papers, diagraming, drawing, map-drawing, language work, essays, specimens of penmanship, herbaria and in short, anything which pertains to school work.

All the schools, both graded and ungraded, are cordially invited to join in this work. Send all exhibits, properly marked, to E. L. Mills, secretary of the fair, Adrian, who is heartily co-operating in the work, or to the undersigned, and they will be properly arranged. The society has assigned a building on purpose for the educational exhibit.

The managers have also appointed Wednesday, Sept. 23d, as Children's Day, on which special efforts will be made to amuse and instruct the children. On this day every child of school age, under 15 years old, will be admitted to the fair for 10 cents, over 15 and under 20 for 15 cents. The school district that makes the largest proportionate individual registry of those named in the school census for 1891 will receive a national flag valued at $10.00. This offer gives every district, whether large or small, a fair chance to compete for the flag.

Teachers, school officers and parents, will you co-operate in making an educational exhibit at the coming fair, that will be an honor to this great and intelligent county. Repectfully yours.

C. F. FIELD,
County School Commissioner.

The young people of south Macon church will give a handkerchief social at Grange Hall, Friday evening Sept 18th, Ladies will bring handkerchiefs marked with their initials, to be sold at auction. There will be a supper and other attractions.

WOMAN'S HEALTH AND LIFE

depend more on regularity than on any or all causes combined. An actual or living death is the result of derangement of functions which make woman what she is; immediate relief is the only safeguard against wreck and ruin. In all cases of stoppage, delayed, painful or other irregularities Bradfield's Female Regulator is the only sure remedy. Sold by Jno. J. Orr.

It was Sam Patch's motto, "Some things can be done as well as others." But among the things that can never be done is the half-baked specimen of humanity.

OUR COUNTY FAIR.

To the Members and all People Interested in the Welfare of our Lenawee County Agricultural Society.

The Annual Fair or Exposition given by the society has become a permanent institution, and is now one of the large fairs of our State. This has been brot about by efficient labor and sacrifice of time on the part of the officers, and their supporters and assistants, the people of the county. The beautiful grounds with substantial improvements and equipments for the display of all kinds of live stock, farm products, and various kinds of hand and machine manufactured wares show a wonderful progress and improvements over days gone by. It should be our ambition to continue this rapid growth and improvement, and if we look around us and note the advancement of other societies it seems to become an urgent duty that we be up and moving.

The time is near at hand for the exhibition of 1891. There are but two weeks before that important event. The success depends wholly upon you. The display in all departments must be complete, and the attendance large, to insure success. Every resident of Lenawee county should consider themselves on the "programme" to do something to forward the success we seek. Get a premium list of the secretary, E. L. Mills, Adrian, or from the director of your township. Look over all the departments and make exhibits in as many as possible. It is none too soon to make the preparation.

Breeders of all kinds of stock, we solicit your patronage. The accommodations will be good for your convenience and comfort. Good stalls and pens and abundance of bedding, hay and pure water. The pens and stalls have been renovated and improved. The swine now have good floors and an awning to keep out the sun. A long line of new horse stalls have been added to the already large number. We ask you to assist in filling every pen and stall.

There should be the greatest display of vegetables, seeds and grain that was ever shown in this county. Farmers will you each assist?

Butter and cheese makers, note the revised list for '91, increased premiums and more of them. Special effort is being made in this department. The banner dairy county of the state should step to the front with a great exhibit. Ladies, you who always sell your choice butter for the highest market rate, we ask you to show a sampl at the fair this fall. Special arrangements will be made for the display of this product. We also urge you to make exhibit of some of the choice loaves of cake and bread for which Lenawee county ladies are so famous. We hope to see every shelf and space full of these toothsome viands. With all the improvements in methods, and almost endless variety of canned fruits, jellies, vegetables, etc., we should have such a display as would fill our largest building to overflowing. Select a few of your best samples and help make a large show.

Granges, P. of I. associations and Farmers' clubs, I invite your attention to page 113 of premium list, to note the large prizes offered for displays of farm products. Appoint a committee at once to make the collection, and thus replenish your low treasury.

Domestic and ornamental needle work paintings, drawings, and that wonderfully interesting corner, the boys and girls department, should each and all have their full share of contributors.

All dealers in farm and general agricultural machinery are cordially invited to take space on the fair grounds, and every facility and convenience in the power of the association will be furnished them, with free steam power and pulley shafting.

Farmers, go to the fair to see and take notes of the improvements made from year to year in this line of machinery, and it is the great event of the season for the agents to advertise. Remember the dates of the fair. Wait for it.

Note the one-half rate on the railroads. The Lake Shore main line between Ottawa Lake and Hillsdale, the branches, Jackson and Adrian, Fayette and Adrian, Monroe and Adrian, Dundee line and Adrian, as well as the Wabash, between Detroit and Butler, the C. J. & M., between Dundee and Hanover, via Britton to Adrian, all make reduced rates.

Do your full duty for the coming fair, and it will be the greatest, by a large degree, of any ever held at Adrian.

Yours most earnestly,
GEO. B. HORTON, President.

Home Seekers' Low Rate Excursions.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

MICHIGAN MINES.

The report of the commissioner of mineral statistics for the year ending September 1, 1890, has been sent to Gov. Winans. It gives figures as follows:

One-half of the iron ore produced in the United States was mined in Michigan, the amount being 7,185,175 tons, valued at $41,000,000. Eighty-two iron mines were operated in Michigan in 1890, and seventeen blast furnaces producing 225,537 tons of pig iron. Six copper mines paid dividends in 1890 amounting to $3,000,000, the Calumet and Hecla paying $3,000,000 alone. The total dividends of this mine are $34,850,000. The Calumet and Hecla's stock is worth $36,000,000. The total production of the copper mines of Michigan in 1890 was 565,899¼ tons, valued at $15,845,427. The amount of land plaster was 920,436 tons and 2,498,383 barrels of stucco of 300 pounds each. There were nine coal mines producing 71,991 tons. Ninety-seven salt concerns produced 3,838,637 barrels. Sandstone quarrying is on the increase, two companies having dividends amounting to $100,000. The Ropes gold mine turned out a net product of $65,240.67.

FOUND DEAD.

A Mystery Over the Death of Two Persons Near Red Oaks.

The body of James Burns was found in his home near Red Oaks by Herman Grostick. A girl who was supposed to be his daughter, but who it was ascertained from papers found in the house was not, was found lying dead across the body. A tight cord around the girl's neck showed that she had been strangled. There were no signs of a struggle and everything in the house was in order. The supposition was that Burns died a natural death and that the girl, on discovering his death, strangled herself. Burns was 45 years old and the girl was 18.

Increased the Revenue.

State Treasurer Braasted has been at work to make the state law for licensing peddlers and hawkers operative, with the result that the resources of the state will be increased fully $15,000 annually hereafter. The name and address of every peddler in the state was secured and all were sent an official invitation to buy a license or submit to prosecution. As a consequence the revenue from this source has been increased 800 per cent.

A Strange Coincidence.

A. H. Whitney and wife, of Toronto, reached the Russell house in Detroit the other evening en route for New Mexico. Mr. Whitney died just as the hack drove up to the hotel entrance. The next morning another A. H. Whitney and wife, of Quincy, Ill., reached the Russell. Mrs. Whitney registered, as her husband was ill. He had been in his room but five minutes when he died. The families were in no way related.

State Treasurer's Report.

State Treasurer Braasted's report, which has just been made to the governor, shows that the balance in the treasury June 30, 1890, was $1,151,259.78; receipts for the year, $3,181,308.81. The disbursements have been $3,107,924.27, leaving a balance in the treasury on June 30 of $1,224,644.82. The expense of the legislature was $123,866.46.

Sloop Capsized.

The sloop Little Harry, owned and sailed by Cornelius Verhoof, left Holland for Muskegon with forty bushels of peaches. The next morning the sloop was found on the beach 7 miles north from the harbor in a dismantled condition. Verhoof's 5-year-old son was found drowned in the cabin. Verhoof's body had not been found.

A Long Trance.

At Whitehall George Beard, aged 21, has been confined to his bed for the last three months. During seven weeks of this time he has lain unconscious, apparently in a trance. He seems to have lost every sense save that of feeling. When he is touched on the arm with a slight downward pressure he will raise his arm.

Fell from a Dizzy Height.

"Jack" Hogan, brother of Aeronaut Ed Hogan, of Jackson, Mich., who lost his life two years ago in experimenting with an airship on Long Island, fell 2,500 feet from a balloon at the Detroit exposition grounds and was instantly killed.

The startling fact is shown by reports of the Massachusetts Commissioners of Prisons that during the last fifty years, while the population of the State has only trebled, the number of criminals has increased fifty fold. There is one prisoner to every 400 inhabitants in the State, and in Boston one to every 222 inhabitants. This large proportion, however, includes re-commitments. These facts are interpreted by Mr. William P. Andrews, for many years Clerk of the Criminal Court at Salem, Mass., as evidence that the "reformatory" conduct of prisons has caused an alarming increase of crime, and that the substitution of reformatory for punitive treatment is fast bringing us to State socialism through the attractiveness of prison-life. Mr. Andrews will contribute an article to the October Forum, containing the results of many years' observation of the working of the two systems.

TO THE TEACHERS OF LENAWEE.

Office of County School Commissioner,
Tecumseh, Sept. 7th, 1891.

The managers of the Lenawee County Agricultural Society have made provision for an educational exhibit at the coming fair, to be held at Adrian, Sept. 21-25.

Prof. Wilson, my predecessor, took the initiatory steps, during the past school year, to secure a suitable exhibit this fall, by bringing the sheme to the attention of the teachers throughout the county, and the majority of them agreed to use their best endeavors to carry it into effect.

I desire, through the courtesy of the county press, to call attention of the teachers of the county once more to the subject.

The exhibit will consist of examination papers, diagraming, drawing, map-drawing, language work, essays, specimens of penmanship, herbaria and in short, anything which pertains to school work.

All the schools, both graded and ungraded, are cordially invited to join in this work. Send all exhibits, properly marked, to E. L. Mills, secretary of the fair, Adrian, who is heartily co-operating in the work, or to the undersigned, and they will be properly arranged. The society has assigned a building on purpose for the educational exhibit.

The managers have also appointed Wednesday, Sept. 23d, as Children's Day, on which special efforts will be made to amuse and instruct the children. On this day every child of school age, under 15 years old, will be admitted to the fair for 10 cents, over 15 and under 20 for 15 cents. The school district that makes the largest proportionate individual registry of those named in the school census for 1891 will receive a national flag valued at $10.00. This offer gives every district, whether large or small, a fair chance to compete for the flag.

Teachers, school officers and parents, will you co-operate in making an educational exhibit at the coming fair, that will be an honor to this great and intelligent county. Repectfully yours.

C. F. FIELD,
County School Commissioner.

CONFIRMED.

The favorable impression produced on the first appearance of the agreeable liquid fruit remedy Syrup of Figs a few years ago has been more than confirmed by the pleasant experience of all who have used it, and the success of the proprietors and manufacturers of the California Fig Syrup Company.

REUNION OF COUNTY OFFICERS.

The regular annual meeting of the past and present County Officers and Supervisors was held at Putnam's Lake Park Hotel, Sand Lake, last Tuesday. It was a beautiful September day, and about eighty county and township officials, many of them accompanied by their wives, put in an appearance. The busy season doubtless kept many away and the meeting was not advertised long enough beforehand, but notwithstanding these drawbacks, there was a good turn out and a very creditable program was presented. By noon the company had all arrived, and promptly at that hour, they filed into Mr. Putnam's spacious dining hall, and partook of a sumptuous dinner.

At one o'clock the meeting assembled in the dancing hall to listen to the literary exercises of the day.

President O. Lamb called the assemblage to order and gave a brief introductory address.

In the absence of the secretary Lucius A. Porter, of Madison, was chosen secretary pro tem.

An address of welcome was given by Dayton B. Morgan and a response thereto by S. C. Stacy.

Singing—Nearer My God to Thee.

Walter S. Westerman, of Adrian, then gave an address, which was received with evident satisfaction, after which short impromptu talks were given by C. H. Dewey, F. A. Dewey, A. C. Osborn, Samuel Morey, Marshall Reed and R. Wooden.

A committee, consisting of D. D. Sinclair, A. G. Hall and C. H. Dewey, previously appointed to revise the constitution and by-Laws, here submitted their report, which, on motion, was accepted and adopted.

President—Orsamus Lamb.
Vice Pres.—Loss Parsons.
Secretary—L. A. Porter.
Treasurer—L. C. Baker.
Directors:
Woodstock—A. M. Sickley.
Rollin—Selah Raymond.
Hudson—Orrin Pierce.
Medina—Geo. Woodworth.
Seneca—Moses Salsbury.
Dover—W. A. Wilkinson.
Rome—Cornelius Knapp.
Cambridge—Samuel Morey.
Franklin—Samuel Wilson.
Adrian—W. H. Knight, and the present supervisors from the remaining towns and wards in the county.

A vote of thanks was extended to Landlord Putnam and his wife for their courtesy and hospitality.

A motion was carried that at least four of the County Officers who have served earliest and longest should be invited to furnish papers at the next reunion.

On motion the Director's were requested to hold the next meeting at the same place but at an earlier date. The session for 1891 was then declared closed.

The Association is now well started and we hope to see a large gathering next year. Those present were unanimous in the opinion that Putnam's was the place where the meetings should be held.

THE MACON GRANGE.

At the last meeting of Macon Grange the following committees were chosen to assist in entertaining Lenawee County Pomona Grange, which convenes at Macon Grange Hall, on Thursday, October 1st, at 10 o'clock A. M.:

To meet at trains—M. J. Martin, J. W. Baker and Cyrus Mead.

Reception Committee—J. W. Osborn and wife, Wm. R. Wilson and wife, Ella Southard and Nelia Russell.

Table Committee—Harry Bailey, Josie Clarkson, Lewis Skinner, Fannie Miller and Geo. W. Graves and wife.

Committee on Music—Rev. Mr. Gulick, Mettie Miller and Emma Bailey.

The membess of Pomona Grange have always had an enjoyable time when meeting with Macon Grange and are looking forward to this meeting as one of pleasure and profit. Now, let the members of Macon Grange see to it that nothing is lacking on their part in making it a success, thereby retaining its reputation as being one of the best Granges in the county.

A. J. Crosby, Jr., lecturer of Michigan State Grange, has been invited and is expected to be present.

The program as far as it can be procured will appear in next week's HERALD.

The next regular session of Macon Grange will be held on Friday, Sept. 25th, at 7:30 P. M.

The centre cartoon in Puck of September 16th, by C. J. Taylor, entitled, "Back to the Hard Realities of Life," is a forcible reminder that the vacation season has closed. The men who have been cutting such a swell at the Summer resorts are seen at hard work at their regular vocations, while the Summer Girl, who has failed to catch a husband, is catching Hail Columbia from the old gentleman.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT 17, 1896.

The democrats of Ohio formally opened their campaign last Tuesday and from this time on politics will be red hot in the Buckeye State.

The campaign in Iowa is progressing very smoothly and the republicans are gaining ground daily. The principle occupation of the republicans in that State this fall is getting converted.

The cradle in which Major McKinley was rocked when a baby was exhibited at the opening of the campaign at Niles, Ohio. It was a good old fashioned democratic cradle, made before the war, and represented no monopoly taxes.

The silver dollar may be worth only eighty cents, but we are prepared to accept them at par, when paid over our counter on subscription account. This offer applies especially to those who are in arrears. Pass in your dollars, gentlemen.

Congressman Chapman, of Detroit, has been mentioned as a possible candidate for speaker. It is very doubtful whether he has authorized any use of his name. The Michigan delegation will probably vote for Reed or Springer.

The nomination of J. Sloat Fassett for governor by the New York Republican is a strong pull for the McKinley, Governor Hill's hand on the throttle of the democratic locomotive and Boss Platt running the republican engine, politics in New York have struck a pretty low ebb.

Mr. Foster estimates the wealth of the United States at $1,000 per head for every man, woman and child in the land. Now, if Mr. Porter would give us some statistics to show how this wealth was apportioned, it would give great satisfaction to a great many people.

While our Ohio neighbors are sweltering in a heated political campaign this fall, the Wolverines keep along in the even tenor of their way, harvesting a bountiful wheat crop, gathering an immense fruit crop and husbanding their resources for a grapple with McKinleyism next year.

What's the matter with Don M. Dickinson for a presidential candidate? He is one of the ablest and strongest democratic leaders, East or West. He is free from factional quarrels and in the vigor of perfect health. In case the war between the Cleveland and Hill factions shall render it unsafe to nominate a New York candidate, our Don will loom up as a strong probability.

The retirement of Judge Cooley from the Inter-State Commerce Commission is received with universal regret. He has been president of the Commission since its organization, having been appointed by President Cleveland, and he has been the leading spirit of the Commission from the day of his appointment. His failing physical health compels him to take this step. It will be a difficult task to fill his place.

The Toledo Bee pertinently says: "Mr. Cleveland's example is a good one. He declines to be made anxious by either friends or enemies over next year's program. The party cannot do better than to take the same position. 'Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof,' and we in Ohio have McKinleyism to overthrow. When that is done it will be time to talk about next year, and when that is done the Ohio democracy may have a good deal to say concerning next year's ticket."

Chauncey M. DePew, in a recent interview regarding his visit to England, said: "I find to my great gratification that it is far better than has been represented in America; in fact, money is an absolute drug in the market, and has no actual interest value as a deposit. I have it on the highest authority that all the stories concerning financial disasters and pending heavy failures lately circulated in America have no foundation whatever, and none of these prophecies of evil will be fulfilled." How singular it is that England has grown so rich under the blighting policy of free trade.

NIEDRINGHAUS REPUDIATES.

Having Accomplished Their Ends the Prospective Tin Plate Makers Repudiate Their Agreements.

Nothing shows more clearly that it is only at the meetings of committees and in the halls of congress that those who demand high tariff speak of the interests of labor, and that when they go away they leave behind them all thoughts of their working men, than the actions of Mr. Niedringhaus, of St. Louis.

When Mr. Niedringhaus took his seat in the Fifty-first congress he made a speech declaring that he was there as a representative of labor; that he did not want to go to congress, but was forced to by the workmen of St. Louis.

Now Mr. Niedringhas has a factory in St. Louis in which he makes kitchen utensils. Ex-Congressman Niedringhaus is president of the St. Louis Stamping Co., a concern with factories in St. Louis, engaged in the production of kitchen hollowware. It also imports tinned plates and is one of the prospective tin-plate manufactories called into existence by the McKinley tariff.

While agitating the question of a higher duty on tinned-plate the manufacturers held a conference with the leaders of the Amalgamated Iron and Steel Workers, at which, according to Mr. Weihe, president of this association, the following occurred:

When the tin plate association, of which Mr. Niedringhaus was a prominent member, went before congress to have the tariff on tin plate raised, its members were afraid to go before the ways and means committee themselves, though they did a sight of lobbying. They came to our association and represented that an increase in the tariff would start the tin plate industry on a boom and would be a big thing for us, and they wanted us to help them out. It was necessary, they said, to have us, the laborers, go before the committee. We took in their talk and were really persuaded that it would be a good thing. So we sent committees to appear before the ways and means committee. And, in consideration of this work on our part, the tin plate association agreed to a tin plate wage schedule by which its members would pay 15 per cent. extra for soft steel work and 20 per cent. for changed iron and steel. Now they want to crawfish out. They say they cannot manufacture at such a price. They are right—they cannot. Another thing, they will not be able to turn out the amount of tin plate by 1897 called for by the McKinley bill. They got the association to help them, and now they want to recede from their agreement with us, and Mr. Niedringhaus, who should be the very last, is the first to try and back out.

Now Mr. Niedringhaus refuses to carry out his part of the agreement. The result is his workmen have gone on a strike, and he has telegraphed to the treasury department inquiring whether the importation of contract laborers from abroad is permitted. The first reply sent to him was that the contract labor law would not prevent him from importing skilled workmen and that no special forms were necessary for doing it.

But it was soon found that the Amalgamated association controlled more votes than Niedringhaus could muster, and accordingly, in view of the campaign in Ohio, Secretary Foster wrote to Mr. Niedringhaus repudiating the letter of his subordinate and declaring that the treasury department was not in the habit of deciding supposed cases. Here the matter stands for the present, but it will be hard for them to desert in his hour of need this lively gentleman to whom they have looked with confidence for tin dishes and tin bills of fare whenever they advertised a high-tariff banquet, but when they understand the situation he will cut a very small figure by the side of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers and its votes. Secretary Foster has already silenced the officious and learned Owen, and Niedringhaus will soon discover that he has permitted his business to encroach unwarrantably upon the domain of practical politics.

INFANTS LIVING AND DEAD.

How the Flesh and Blood Baby is Taxed For the Benefit of Infant Industries.

Infant industries have been objects of solicitude with tariff makers since the first American tariff bill was passed. Many of these infants are now 100 years old and most of them have passed the age of 21, but they still figure a infant industries, in the language of the tariff makers and in that of the stump speakers who shriek for higher and continued protection to these wards of the state. It might be thought that to men so tender toward these strapping infants of trade the real wailing and helpless infants that are born into the United States every minute of every day in the year would be equally objects of solicitude. Nothing of the sort. On the contrary, the strain upon the sympathies of tariff makers made by the demands of infant industries has left those legislators absolutely indifferent to the claims of real flesh and blood babyhood. Indeed, the flesh and blood infants are taxed like all the rest of us in order that the infants of iron, steel, wool, wood, leather, flax and what not may be sumptuously fed, clothed and housed. Whatever the flesh and blood infant wears or eats is taxed for the benefit of these lifeless infants of trade.

Flannel is a necessity to the flesh and blood infant, and one might have expected to find flannel on the free list of a tariff bill framed by the professed lovers of infanthood. Not at all. The baby's flannel is taxed just like its father's coat and its mother's gown. Here is what the law provides. Flannels worth 30 cents a pound, duty 108 per cent; flannels worth from 30 to 40 cents per pound, duty 91 per cent; flannels worth from 40 to 50 cents per pound, duty 101 per cent; flannels worth from 50 to 60 cents per pound, duty 112 per cent, according to weight and other qualities; flannels worth from 60 to 80 cents per pound, duty from 75 to 89 per cent; flannels worth above 80 cents per pound, duty 105 per cent.

Thus if the flesh and blood baby would have flannels he must pay from 75 to 123 per cent, toward the maintenance of the infant flannel industry of the United States. It makes no difference how poor the flesh and blood infant's parents may be or how difficult they may find to keep it alive and warm, that tax must be paid toward the support of the other infant.

But flesh and blood babies must sleep under blankets in winter time. This is a lovely thing for the great blanket infant industry, for every flesh and blood baby in the land can be made to pay something toward the support of this infant. Here is what the live baby pays to the blanket baby: Blankets worth not over 30 cents per pound, duty 91 per cent; worth from 30 to 40 cents per pound, duty 98 per cent; worth from 40 to 50 cents per pound, duty 101 per cent; worth from 50 to 60 cents per pound, duty 110 per cent; worth from 60 to 80 cents per pound, duty 95 per cent; worth above 80 cents per pound, duty 71 per cent.

Thus the live infant pays from 71 to 110 per cent to the blanket infant. Oddly enough the live baby, whose parents can afford to buy blankets worth above 80 cents per pound, gets off with a tax of 71 per cent. Somehow the tariff makers always had a tenderness for wealth. The fact is that a great many of them are millionaires and a fellow feeling makes them wondrous kind. It was easy enough to let up on 80-cent blankets while 40-cent blankets paid 119 per cent duty.

Linen is one of the things that go to make babies pretty. It was a baby clad in linen long clothes that drew forth from Charles Lamb a famous whimsical witticism. As they carried the little one past the gentle Charles he grasped the wealth of flowing linen, and feeling upward toward the baby's tiny toes stammered out, "Wh-where does it leave off?" Those long clothes are taxed, you may be sure. Here is what the tariff schedule says: "Sheets and all other manufactures of wearing apparel made in whole or in part of linen and not otherwise provided for, 55 per cent."

Then there are the laces and pretty bits of linen that go to sweeten the faces of small humanity; they too are taxed. Laces, insertings, embroideries, 60 per cent. duty. But lest something might escape the tax, the tariff makers placed a duty of from 73 to 123 per cent upon women's and children's dress goods. Then they realized that the living baby must have soap to keep him clean, and they clapped a tax of from 20 to 41 per cent. on soap. While they were about it they put a tax of 20 per cent. on the sponge with which the baby is washed. Of course they taxed the baby's cradle and his carriage, just as they taxed the comb for his hair and the bone teething ring.

But you would have supposed that the proposed lovers of infants would have paused when they came to toys. How could they deliberately go about making a poor defenseless baby pay more than the market value for his trumpery rattle? They could, however. "Ah! toys!" said they. "Everybody must have toys, and now is our opportunity." So saying, they concocted this provision of the tariff: Dolls, doll heads, toy marbles, of whatever material composed, and all other toys not composed of rubber, china, porcelain, parian bisque, earthen or stoneware, and not specifically provided for, 35 per cent.

Perhaps you think they relented when they reached toys of china, rubber and all that, and decided to let them in free. Every child now has a rubber rattle, and thousands of featureless rubber dolls make American nurseries hideous. True, and the tariff makers had those very facts in mind when they omitted rubber toys from the list of articles dutiable at 35 per cent. Here is what they did about that: China, porcelain, parian, bisque, earthen and stone toys, painted, tinted, stained, enameled, printed, gilded or otherwise decorated or painted in any manner, 60 per cent. duty; toys composed of rubber, 55 per cent. duty.

There you have it all. The baby must pay for his whistle. He can have no fun without tax. He must take up his load of tariff taxation and carry it to his grave, and his heirs must pay a tariff tax on his shroud and coffin. Even the fire-crackers with which he celebrates the Fourth of July and learns his first noisy lesson in patriotism, are taxed 100 per cent.

—An interesting investigation into the cost of labor and materials in manufactured products has just been completed by the bureau of labor statistics of Massachusetts. It completely refutes the doctrine of the McKinleyites that the cost of labor is the chief item in the cost of manufactured goods and that the tariff is levied solely to equalize labor cost here and abroad. This report shows that the cost of labor represents only 26 per cent. of the cost of the product, while the cost of the protected materials is 68 per cent., or over twice as much. The average rate of duty under the McKinley tariff is 60 per cent. and is largely added to the price of the goods made. Tariff reformers aim to decrease the cost of materials by making them free, thus not only increasing the wage of labor, but decreasing at the same time the total cost of production. Workmen will thereby be benefitted in two ways, by getting more money for their work and more goods for their money. It is for the workmen to decide which they want.

—The Lawrence (Kan.) Recorder (rep.) says: "There must be a disposition to make such changes in the tariff act as will satisfy the west that it is not to be robbed for the benefit of the east, and some responsible assurance that such abominations as billion congresses are not to be of annual occurrence, or the republican party will go out of power, never to return."

—A bushel of wheat will buy two or three times as much sugar to-day as it did a year ago. So will a bushel of potatoes. Sugar is now free. It was not a year ago. Is the tariff a tax?

The Corduroy Tax

There is an establishmen int the United States which makes corduroy of an inferior quality, suitable for making caps and other uses not requiring heavy material. This establishment is located at Providence, R. I., the State in which resides Senator Nelson W. Aldrich, who engineered the McKinley bill through the Senate.

The manufacturer of corduroys is not of very great importance to anybody, not even to those engaged in it; but the new law provides a bounty for it. The old law levied a tax of 35 per cent. on this article, but the new act raises this to 14 cents, though the House fixed the specific tax at 10 cents per square yard, and 20 per cent. advalorem, which, upon the lower grades, is equivalent to from 80 to 85 per cent., though upon the higher grades it is but little, if any, more than the old tax. The inferior grades are used by the working and poorer people, and of our total imports about 1,000,000 yards, at least 500,000 yards are of such grades.

Corduroy which sold for 25 cents per yard before the enactment of the law now sells for 39 cents, that which sold for 45 cents now costs 62, but the better qualities have not advanced in price. Thus does labor receive the benefits of the spoliation tariff. Boston Herald.

Makes the Weak Strong

The marked benefit which people in run down or weakened state of health derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla, conclusively proves the claim that this medicine "makes the weak strong." It does not act like a stimulant, imparting fictitious strength from which there must follow a reaction of greater weakness than before, but in the most natural way Hood's Sarsaparilla overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, purifies the blood, and, in short, gives great bodily, nerve, mental and digestive strength.

Fagged Out

"Last spring I was completely fagged out. My strength left me and I felt sick and miserable all the time, so that I could hardly attend to my business. I took one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it cured me. There is nothing like it." R. C. BEGOLE, Editor Enterprise, Belleville, Mich.

"I derived very much benefit from Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I took for general debility. It built me right up, and gave me an excellent appetite." ED. JENKINS, Mt. Savage, Md.

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

THE RIGHT TO THE USE OF THE EARTH.

By Herbert Spencer.

(Report of Chapter IX, of "Social Statics.")

5. It does indeed at first sight seem possible for the earth to become the exclusive possession of individuals by some process of equitable distribution. "Why," it may be asked, "should not men agree to a fair subdivision? If all are co-heirs, why may not the estate be equally apportioned, and each be afterward perfect master of his own share?"

To this question it may in the first place be replied that such a division is vetoed by the difficulty of fixing the value of respective tracts of land. Variations in productiveness, different degrees of accessibility, advantages of climate, proximity to the centers of civilization—these, and other such considerations, remove the problem out of the sphere of mere mensuration into the region of impossibility.

But, waiving this, let us inquire who are to be the allotees. Shall adult males and all who have reached twenty-one on a specified day be the fortunate individuals? If so, what is to be done with those who come of age on to-morrow? Is it proposed that each man, woman and child shall have a section? If so, what is to become of those who are to be born next year? And what will be the fate of those whose fathers sell their estates and squander the proceeds? These portionless ones must constitute a class already described as having no right to a resting place on earth—as living by the sufferance of their fellow men—as being practically serfs. And the existence of such a class is wholly at variance with the law of equal freedom.

Until, therefore, we can produce a valid commission authorizing us to make this distribution—until it can be proved that God has given one charter of privileges to one generation and another to the next—until we can demonstrate that men born after a certain date are doomed to slavery, we must consider that no such allotment is permissible.

6. Probably some will regard the difficulties inseparable from individual ownership of the soil, as caused by pushing to excess a doctrine applicable only within rational limits. This is a very favorite style of thinking with some. There are people who hate anything in the shape of exact conclusions; and these are of them. According to such the right is never in either extreme, but always half way between the extremes. They are continually trying to reconcile yes and no. Ifs and buts and excepts are their delight. They have so great a faith in "the judicious mean" that they would scarcely believe an oracle if it uttered a full length principle. Were you to inquire of them whether the earth turns on its axis from east to west or from west to east, you might almost expect the reply: "A little of both," or "Not exactly either." It is doubtful whether they would assent to the axiom that the whole is greater than its part, without making some qualification. They have a passion for compromises. To meet their taste, truth must always be spiced with a little error. They can not conceive of a pure, definite, entire and unlimited law. And hence, in discussions like the present, they are constantly petitioning for limitations—always wishing to abate, and modify, and moderate—ever protesting against doctrines being pursued to their ultimate consequences.

But it behooves such to recollect that ethicals truth is as exact and as peremptory as physical truth; and that in this matter of land tenure the verdict of morality must be distinctly yea or nay. Either men have a right to make the soil private property or they have not. There is no medium. We must choose one of the two positions. There can be no half-and-half opinion. In the nature of things the fact must be either one way or the other.

If men have not such a right, we are at once delivered from the severe predicaments already pointed out. If they have such a right, then is that right absolutely sacred, not on any pretense to be violated. If they have such a right then is his grace of Leeds justified in warning off tourists from Ben Mac Duhl, the duke of Atholl in closing Glen Tilt, the duke of Buccleugh in denying sites to the Free church and the duke of Sutherland in banishing the Highlanders to make room for sheep walks. If they have such a right, then it would be proper for the sole proprietor of any kingdom—a Jersey or Guernsey, for example—to impose just what regulations he might choose on its inhabitants—to tell them that they should not live on his property unless they professed a certain religion, spoke a particular language, and paid him a specified reverence, adopted an authorized dress and conformed to all other conditions he might see fit to make. If they have such a right, then is there truth in that tenet of the ultra tory school, that the land owners are the only legitimate rulers of a country—that the people at large remain in it only by the land owners' permission, and ought consequently to submit to the land owners' rule, and respect whatever institutions the land owners set up. There is no escape from these inferences. They are necessary corollaries to the theory that the earth can become individual property. And they can only be repudiated by denying that theory.

7. After all, nobody does implicitly believe in landlordism. We hear of estates being held under the king—that is, the state; or of their being kept in trust for the public benefit; and not that they are the inalienable possessions of their nominal owners. Moreover, we daily deny landlordism by our legislation. Is a canal, a railway or a turnpike road to be made, we do not scruple to seize just as many acres as may be requisite, allowing the holders compensation for the capital invested. We do not wait for consent. An act of parliament supercedes the authority of title deeds, and serves proprietors with notices to quit, whether they will or not. Either this is equitable or it is not. Either the public are free to resume as much of the earth's surface as they think fit, or the titles of the landowners must be considered absolute, and all national works must be postponed until lords and squires please to part with requisite slices of their estates. If we decide that the claims of individual ownership must give way, then we imply that the right of the nation at large to the soil is supreme—that the right of private possession only exists by general consent—that general consent being withdrawn it ceases—or, in other words, that it is no right at all.

8. "But to what does this doctrine, that men are equally entitled to the use of the earth, lead? Must we return to the times of uninclosed wilds, and subsist on roots, berries and game? Or are we to be left to the management of Messrs. Fourrier, Owen, Louis Blanc & Co.?"

Neither. Such a doctrine is consistent with the highest state of civilization, may be carried out without involving a community of goods, and need cause no very serious revolution in existing arrangements. The change required would simply be a change of landlords. Separate ownerships would merge into the joint stock ownership of the public. Instead of being in the possession of individuals, the country would be held by the great corporate body—Society. Instead of leasing his acres from an isolated proprietor, the farmer would lease them from the nation. Instead of paying his rent to the agent of Sir John or his grace, he would pay it to an agent or deputy agent of the community. Stewards would be public officials instead of private ones, and tenancy the only land tenure.

A state of things so ordered would be in perfect harmony with the moral law. Under it all men would be equally landlords; all men would be alike free to become tenants. A, B, C and the rest might compete for a vacant farm, and one of them might take it without in any way violating the principles of pure equity. All would be equally free to bid; all would be equally free to refrain. And when the farm had been let to A, B or C, all parties would have done that which they willed—the one in choosing to pay a given sum to his fellow men for the use of certain lands—the others in refusing to pay that sum. Clearly, therefore, on such a system, the earth may be inclosed, occupied and cultivated in entire subordination to the law of equal freedom.

9. No doubt great difficulty must attend the resumption, by mankind at large, of their rights to the soil. The question of compensation to existing proprietors is a complicated one—one that perhaps can not be settled in a strictly equitable manner. Had we to deal with the parties who originally robbed the human race of its heritage, we might make short work of the matter. But unfortunately, most of our present land-owners are men who have either mediately or immediately—either by their own acts, or by the acts of their ancestors—given for their estates equivalents of honestly earned wealth, believing that they were investing their savings in a legitimate manner. To justly estimate and liquidate the claims of such is one of the most intricate problems society will one day have to solve. But with this perplexity and our extraction from it, abstract morality has no concern. Men having got themselves into the dilemma by disobedience to the law, must get out of it as well as they can; and with as little injury to the landed class as may be.

Meanwhile, we shall do well to recollect that there are others beside the landed class to be considered. In our tender regard for the vested interests of the few, let us not forget that the rights of the many are in abeyance, and must remain so as long as the earth is monopolized by individuals. Let us remember, too, that the injustice thus inflicted on the mass of mankind is an injustice of the gravest nature. The fact that it is not so regarded proves nothing. In early phases of civilization even homicide is thought lightly of. The suttees of India, together with the practice elsewhere followed of sacrificing a hecatomb of human victims at the burial of a chief show this, and probably cannibals consider the slaughter of those whom "the fortunes of war" has made their prisoners perfectly justifiable. It was once also universally supposed that slavery was a natural and quite legitimate institution—a condition into which some were born, and to which they ought to submit as to a divine ordination, nay, indeed, a great proportion of mankind hold this opinion still. A higher social development, however, has generated in us a better faith, and we now to a considerable extent recognize the claims of humanity. But our civilization is only partial. It may by and by be perceived, that equity utters dictates to which we have not yet listened; and men may then learn that to deprive others of their rights to the use of the earth, is to commit a crime inferior only in wickedness to the crime of taking away their lives or personal liberties.

ILLINOIS is one of the richest states of the union. It is scarcely yet fairly settled, for the last census shows the male population in excess of the female, and wages are considerably higher than in more eastern states. In their last report the Illinois commissioners of labor statistics say that their table of wages and cost of living are representative only of intelligent workingmen who make the most of their advantages, and do not reach "the confines of that world of helpless ignorance and destitution in which multitudes in all large cities continually live, and whose only statistics are those of epidemics, pauperism and crime." Nevertheless, they go on to say, an examination of these tables will demonstrate that one-half of these intelligent workingmen of Illinois "are not even able to earn enough for their daily bread, and have to depend upon the labor of women and children to eke out their miserable existence."

It is the fool who saith in his heart there is no God. But what shall we call the man who tells us that with this sort of a world God bids us be content? —Social Problems.

JUMPED THE TRACK.

Fearful Plunge of a Union Pacific Train in Colorado.

Cars Land in a Ditch Fifteen Feet Below—Twenty-Six Persons Injured, Some Fatally—Fifteen Hurt in Another Wreck.

A TRAIN WRECKED.

DENVER, Col., Sept. 14.—Passenger train No. 314, bound toward Denver on the Graymont division of the Union Pacific railway, was wrecked Sunday morning about 11 o'clock near Beaver Brook station and twenty-six passengers were injured, five of whom will probably die. The train was late and running rapidly and when rounding a sharp curve the express car left the track and rolled down a 15-foot embankment. It was followed by the mail and two passenger coaches, one of which turned over twice before reaching the bottom. The train was loaded with passengers, many of whom were knights of pythias who were returning from the knights of pythias state convention which was held at Aspen last week. When the news reached Golden, Col., a wrecking train was ordered out and was starting when Robert Pruin, an employe of the road, attempted to board the engine. In doing so his revolver fell from his hip pocket, the hammer striking a stone, and the weapon was discharged, the ball taking effect in the man's neck, making a wound which will result fatally. Those seriously injured in the wreck were left at Golden in the hands of physicians, while those not badly hurt were brought to this city and taken to their homes or the hospitals. It is not known exactly what caused the wreck, but as the track was a narrow gauge and the coaches very top heavy it is thought that the train was running too rapidly for safety.

A passenger train on the Colorado Central railroad was wrecked at noon Sunday. Fifteen passengers were injured, but it is thought none fatally. It has been impossible to learn the particulars yet, as the telegraph office at that place has been closed.

CHILDREN CREMATED.

Locked in by Their Mother, They Set the House on Fire.

WICHITA, Kan., Sept. 14.—Word has been received here of the burning to death of four children on a farm in the southern part of Barton county. Mrs. William Klein, the mother of the children, locked them in the house while she went on an errand, and presently the attention of the father, who was some distance off, was attracted by smoke issuing from the house. He hastened home and found the building ablaze. By the time he had effected an entrance the interior was a mass of flames. He found one of the children, who died shortly after being rescued. The charred remains of the others were found in the debris. The eldest child was only 7 years.

LOUIS, Sept. 12.—The most important matter that has come before the German Methodist Episcopal conference, at which representatives from the states of Illinois, Iowa and Missouri are present, now in session here, was determined at Friday morning's meeting. The election of general delegates was held, which brought out a vote on the woman question, the women being defeated by a considerable majority.

A Shortage of $30,000.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Sept. 12.—President Coleman, of the Catholic Knights of America, is here investigating the accounts of M. J. O'Brien, treasurer of the order. Mr. O'Brien is out of the city and President Coleman has taken charge of the office. Thus far in the investigation of the accounts there is a deficit of about $30,000, which in the absence of Mr. O'Brien is unexplained.

Father and Daughter Killed.

CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 12.—Jacob H. Shaffer and his two daughters, Ella and Ida, attempted to cross a railroad track in a buggy ahead of a passenger train at Warren, O., Friday. The buggy was struck, Mr. Shaffer and Ida being instantly killed and the other daughter seriously hurt. Mr. Shaffer was a wealthy farmer.

An Actor Commits Murder.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 12.—M. B. Curtis, the well-known actor, was lodged in jail here Thursday night charged with murdering Alexander Grant, a policeman. Curtis had been drinking and was in the custody of the officer when the crime was committed. Curtis claims that he did not fire the fatal shot.

CHEATING IN HORSE BLANKETS

Nearly every pattern of 5/A Horse Blanket is imitated in color and style. In most cases the imitation looks just as good as the genuine, but it hasn't the warp threads, and so lacks strength, and while it sells for only a little less than the genuine it isn't worth one-half as much. The fact that 5/A Horse Blankets are copied is strong evidence that they are THE STANDARD, and every buyer should see that the 5/A trade mark is sewed on the inside of the Blanket.

TOLEDO, O., April 6, 1891.

TECUMSEH HERALD.

Issued Every Thursday Morning.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT. 17, 1891.

OUR CHICAGO LETTER.

CHICAGO, Ill. Sept. 14th, '91.

DEAR HERALD.—It has just popped into my mind that it is time that I gave you another epistle from the Garden City, and yet it is hard to know just what will be of interest to your many readers. The most interesting matters get into all the daily papers and they reach all the smaller towns and cities now, leaving but little for a casual correspondent to tell. The progress of the preparations for the World's Fair is heralded daily to all parts of the English speaking world, and so there is but little that we can get outside of the regular way about the coming show.

The two last great aldermanic boodle cases, the "Economic" gas franchise, and the Pacific ordinance are still the topics of great interest to all who wonder what all this corruption is to end in. The recent articles in the fearless Evening and Morning News, proving that the Standard Oil Co., under the disguise of the Economic Fuel and Gas Light Co. has grasped the city with its deadly clutch, has done a great deal to teach the people how much they can expect of the representatives they send to the city hall. The two political parties are equally involved in the scandal. The problem now is to find out how many barrels of Standard Oil it took to grease the way through over the mayor's veto.

An appropriate motto to hang over the door of the council chamber would be: "All who enter here, leave honor behind." That is what they seem to do. Is it possible that greed is destroying patrotism, honor, and all political purity? It is getting so that when we hear an alderman spoken of we immediately think of a thief. We see the evidence of corruption in every department of the city government, and long for men in office strong enough, bold enough, and good enough to stand up and defy the demoralizing influences at work trying to undermine our liberties.

Our last mayor elect, the invisible Washburn, has appointed one head of a department who is making a warm place for himself in the hearts of all law abiding citizens. I refer to Maj. McClaughry, Chief of Police. He is so earnestly endeavoring to purge the police department of its rottenness that he has antagonized the leaders of his own party, and were it not for the press he would find that he was not wanted by the men who put him in office. His antagonism to the lawless elements of every form may lose the Republicans a good many saloon and brothel votes. They took his ante election talk as talk and did not expect him to fight vice as he is doing. They have stepped on his toes under the table, nudged him with elbows and said plainly that he must not be too harsh with people who have "pulls." But, Mr. Chief of Police McClaughry goes on bringing up the delinquent and the derelect with a round turn, and even the almighty policeman whe delights in clubbing inoffensive citizens for standing on their own doorsteps, gets "let down." He compels saloons to close according to the law, and even the high-toned hotels and restaurants come under his strong hand. Would that we had more men like him in office.

The theatrical season is now open and most of the many theatres doing a big business. The "County Fair," has had a wonderful summer run at Hooley's and could fill that theatre for weeks to come. The play is one that will always be popular, for it contains the lasting elements that touch the human heart. At the Chicago Opera House the successful "Sinbad, or the Maid of Balsora," is still drawing packed houses, after its long run. Those theatres that remained open during the summer months have made mints of money.

"A Night in Pekin," after a prosperous season, has closed and the pyrotechnical pageant perambulates to Nashville Tenn. It is announced that the old exposition building will hold another show commencing about Sept. 15th, and lasting the usual six weeks. The Art exhibit will be a minus quantity, and the art halls will be filled with a flower display. I think that this omission of the art works will prove a mistake, for thousands have gone to the old rookery only to look at the fine collections of pictures, and who care nothing for the beets and cabbage heads that flourish there.

A few days ago I found my inspiration for making faces rapidly oozing away, and in spite of my efforts to work nothing would come right, and at last in a fit of desperation I left my easel and took the same old camera and the same old plate-box that you have seen me carry around Tecumseh many a time, and went over to Madison street. There I boarded a Madison street cable car and went as far as it would carry me. Where the cable line ends an electric car line commences. When a car labeled "Desplaine's River" came along I climbed into it and was soon whirling along at a good pace, farther west on Madison street than I had ever been before. The electric line ends at the river, ten miles from the city hall, and there I disembarked and started for a stroll along the banks of the stream, which reminds me of the good old River Raisin, only it is somewhat larger. I found some very pretty views that I captured, and had a delightful time and two or three adventures. The farmers out in that section make extensive use of barbed wire fences and in getting myself and luggage over one particularly offensive fence I had a tussle with it and came out of it with some torn clothing, and from this time on I am an enemy of any fence that contains barbed wire. I had hardly gotten over my discomfiture when a large dog that had adopted me the moment I left the car, gave a loud yelp and attracted my attention toward a large patch of golden rod and other floral beauties. That was more than I could pass by and I stopped to pick a bunch to lug home with the other things I was loaded down with. I noticed that the dog acted strangely, rushing around in a frantic manner and snapping at himself and the air in a manner that told of some unusual disturbance. I had picked a large bunch of one kind of flowers when I found out what ailed the dog. It was when I found about 72,696 hornets whizzing around my head and body that I realized that doggie had found 'em first. With my bunch of flowers in one hand and my hat in the other I frantically fought the fiends and after a scrimage of about five minutes duration I became the victor, but at what an expense? I had jammed several holes through my hat by striking fence stakes that in the excitement of the moment must have seemed like gigantic stings to me. My sleeves and my hat were the abiding places of diverse hornets that had lost their lives in the attempt to get the best of me. I felt so worked up over the attack that I kept the sting of every pesky hornet that touched me. The swellings had gone down by the next morning. Poor doggie came out of the fight with his right eye closed, his tongue swollen so that he had hard work to keep it in its proper place, and a well defined limp, besides being a great deal smarter than before, although the smartness might not have lasted. For the first viewing trip in four year, and the first one in the vicinity of Chicago, I think I had quite a time. Shall try it over again some day, all but the hornet part of it. I do not know what became of the dog—I had to leave him as the cars will not carry canines unless the lady carries him in her arms. I am more used to carrying babies, and prefer babies, too.

I see very few of our Tecumseh colony now-a-days. Mrs. Elliott and her sister, Mrs. Mann, are now living near Garfield Park, and nicely located. Mrs. Elliott is a very popular little woman among all classes.

Mrs. Abbie Fisher, I understand, is in the city, but I have not seen her yet. There has been some talk of getting up a Tecumseh picnic and reception for her.

I called on Dave Silvers a couple days ago, and found him as usual, a jolly, good fellow, doing well and holding his own in the ticket trade. His office is a kind of rendesvous for Tecumseh and Clinton people. They know where they are welcome and where they get polite treatment as well as a cordial reception.

Until I find time and material to use for another letter, adieu. L. F. W.

J. L. Hudson, the well known Detroit clothier, has just erected one of the most beautiful as well as capacious business buildings in that city. The structure is eight stories high, with a frontage of 210 feet on Farmer street and 100 feet on Gratiot avenue. The excavation for the basement was the largest ever made in Michigan. He moves out of the old house into the new today, the 17th, and we acknowledge the receipt of a very courteous invitation to be present at the dedication, but Thursday is our press day and the most important events rarely draw us away from home on that day.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

The Lenawee Co. Fair. For this occasion the Lake Shore R. R. will sell tickets to Adrian and return Sept. 21st to 25th inclusive at half rate, good to return until Sept 26th.

W. T. Eccles, of Tecumseh, has a scheme which he believes will distance celery raising. He has four or five acres of lowlands, and he proposes to dam it and with the water from a big spring, make a trout pond of it. He can secure any amount of free help to harvest the crop.—Adrian Press.

The Wabash road will sell special half rate tickets next week during the County Fair, between Detroit and Adrian. A special train will be put on, passing Britton at 10:00 A. M., going west, and leaving Adrian at 4:45 P. M. (5:15 sun time) going east. This train will make close connections at Britton with the Mackinaw trains.

The Mackinaw road will sell trip tickets at half rates for the county fair next week, Sept. 21st, to 25th inclusive. These tickets will be sold between Dundee and Hanover. The regular morning trains will connect at Britton with trains on the Wabash. Returning will leave Adrian at 5:15 P. M. and connect at Britton with evening trains both ways.

It will be interesting for a fisherman to know that after October 1st nothing but hook and line can be used in any inland lake. Even set lines or night lines are prohibited, and to be found on a lake with spear, jack, net, set lines, artificial light, explosives, etc., is prima facie evidence of guilt. If this law is rigidly enforced it will make a great difference in the number of game and food fish inhabiting those waters in a few years. Tons of fish are caught in winter with the aid of light, spears, set tackle and night lines and it was for the purpose of doing away with these practices that the law was passed.—Exchange.

We attended the Dundee fair last Friday and to say that we were surprised at the completeness of the exhibition will only state the simple truth. A large floral hall, commodious sheds for sheep, hogs and poultry, lengthy and roomy quarters for horses and cattle, a big grand stand had sprang into being, as if by magic, during the last three months. The race track is one of the best in this section of the State. The departments were all fairly represented and some of them especially so. We have attended county fairs at Adrian in which the show of stock was inferior to that at Dundee, both in quantity and quality. The fruit display in floral hall was a very fine one, and the general display in that building was good. Several Tecumseh horses were represented at the different races. In the three minute race Frank Davidson's Boomerang took three straight heats; purse, $200; C. D. Bills' Encore took three heats in the three year old trotting; purse $100. The races were all good, some of them having six entries. The weather was all that could be asked for. The citizens of Dundee have good reason to feel highly elated over the success of their initial fair.

The controversy over the identity of Major Robert Hendershot as the Drummer Boy of the Rappahannock has been decided in his favor. We clip the following from the Savannah, Ill. Times:

During the National encampment at Detroit this year Major Hendershot, the Drummer Boy of the Rappahannock, was asked to head the procession behind the Quincy band. This created jealousy among some of the drummers connected with the late war. They came to the Detroit meeting, and some of them not being themselves, they made it unpleasant for the Major as well as creating quite a disturbance. They declared he was not the original Drummer Boy of Rappahannock. At first he paid no attention to their statements, but when they had the brazen effrontery to write both the managers of the encampment and him personal letters, the Major put on his war paint, and unsheathed his scalping knife and has made the fur fly right and left ever since. His credentials from Lincoln, Grant, Sherman, Greeley and most of the old war horses have completely silenced his enemies and one by one they have hunted their holes and slunk out of sight. We publish elsewhere some of the letters the originals of which we have read and know them to be genuine. The familiar handwriting of Greeley, Lincoln and Grant stamp them as genuine beyond question. We are glad to see the Major exonerate himself in the masterly way that he does.

Fred struck astride of the wheel, fracturing his collar bone and bruising his limbs. Dr. Howell is attending him and he is doing as well as could be expected.

The Hillsdale fair, which has always been one of the best in the State, bids fair to eclipse the record this year. Arrangements are in progress to insure this consummation. The fair will be held late, as it always has been, commencing Monday, Sept. 28th and closing Friday, Oct. 2d.

In an article in the Scientific American of Sept. 12th, headed "Condition of Workingmen in Michigan," the statement is made that 5,949 persons take newspapers and magazines, which is 67 per cent of all employes. In the village of Tecumseh, the only place named in the article, 87 per cent of the employes take newspapers and magazines. This certainly speaks well for the intelligence of the employes of our village.

A meeting was held at the Council Rooms last Monday evening to talk up a fair association. It was well attended and the sentiment manifested was strongly in favor of the project. Lucius Lilley was called to the chair and William DeMott was chosen secretary. We have heard a great deal of late years about the growing excellence of of the Eaton county fair. Its managers found that it paid to spend money freely for unusual attractions and now that the society, for the first time in its history, is free from debt it proposes to double the great number of attractions which have given it its enviable reputation in years past. They have about $100 offered for bicycle attractions and the great invention of Boston, the unicycle, has been promised by its inventor. A rare lady aeronaut is billed for each day and the races are much better and more numerous than ever. Three applications are already in for the wedding on Thursday, October 1, and $300 are offered in special sports. It will be one continual round of pleasure for all who attend and we advise our readers to post its dates in their hats. It begins Sept. 29 and closes October 2.

During our visit to the Dundee fair last week we met John O'Neil, who formerly lived at Tecumseh. He is now engaged in buying butter and eggs, which he sells in the Toledo market. He is on the road four days each week and seems to be working up a fine business. He runs a small farm two miles north of the village, where he lives. Between the farm and his butter and egg trade he has enough work to do to keep him out of mischief.

Mrs. Chas. H. Ives, who has been lingering with consumption for several months, passed on to the better land last Monday. The funeral obsequies were held Wednesday afternoon at the M. E. church and were attended by a large concourse of mourning relatives and friends. She had been prominent in church circles and was a woman of most estimable character and fine attainments. A suitable tribute to her memory will appear hereafter.

During a visit to Devils Lake one day last week, we made Will Anderson a visit. He "hooked up" his team and we drove over to the South end of the lake by the west road, taking all the boys along. Mr. Ames of Tecumseh also formed one of the load, as he was at the lake that day. Upon returning we enjoyed a good dinner at Will's house and then drove out to see his stock. He is keeping nine milch cows and puts up about forty pounds of creamery butter a week. He will increase the number of his cows to twelve and is making arrangements to start an extensive hennery next season. He owns sixty acres of land, which will afford plenty of hay and pasture for his cows, and he is going to make farming a success.

Prof. Burt Walker made his balloon ascension last Saturday afternoon according to previous announcement. The wind blew a strong gale all the afternoon and many predicted that he would not attempt to make an ascent. But he did'nt propose to be bluffed off the track by a stiff breeze. Accordingly the big bag was properly inflated, and about five o'clock the guy ropes were loosened and she sailed up beautifully with Prof. Walker in tow. The ascension was nicely made, but the parachute apparatus became entangled in some way and that part of the program failed to materalize. The persons holding the ropes let go too soon and the balloon came near running away without a passenger, but the professor sprang forward and caught the trapeze bar in his right elbow and clung to it in that manner, until he alighted. When he came down his arm was nearly paralyzed. It was a most daring exploit and the spectators expected to see him drop from his dizzy hight any moment and be dashed to pieces. The balloon did not go up very high and came down within half an hour, on the Benedict farm about three miles from the starting point. There was a big crowd in town to witness the performance. The people eagerly watched the daring aeronaut until he alighted and drew a long breath of relief when they saw him safely on terra firma again. Taken altogether it was the most exciting and daring exploit ever witnessed in Tecumseh.

The HERALD job rooms have received an addition which will be of much utility—a Pearl job press. It is an easy running and very rapid press, exactly adapted to all kinds of small commercial work. It will easily pay for itself in a few months.

J. C. Hazlett has rented the store formerly occupied by Jones & Hazlett and will open a new stock of suitings there next Saturday. Mr. Hazlett is a first class merchant tailor and we bespeak for him a liberal patronage. We call attention to his special announcement on the first page of to-day's Herald.

Harry Tansley has a group photo in his possession taken at the last encampment, showing the brigade hospital corps. The tents are in the background and ranged in front are the members of the corps, about twenty in all. Surgeon Gen. Woodward, Mr. Tansley and Al. Heidenrich, of Tecumseh, appear in the group.

J. M. Jones has opened rooms for merchant tailoring on the second floor over the former store of Jones & Hazlett. He has a very complete and large assortment of suitings, trouserings and overcoatings, which it will do one good to see. He has commodious rooms for working, and as a cutter and a fitter every one knows that "Jimmy Jones" cannot be excelled. He swings out a new card in to-days paper and invites his friends to call and see him.

While at Devils Lake the other day we took the time to pay a visit to Frank Wood, whose place is about half a mile north of Allen's hotel. He has a nice farm of fifty acres, all improved. He had a bountiful wheat crop this year and has just seeded fifteen acres. A marsh of some three or four acres is now sown to Japanese buckwheat which promises an enormous yield. The same flat could probably be utilized for celery growing. Mr. and Mrs. Wood are enjoying good health and the latch string is always out at their house. We passed an hour there very pleasantly.

DISASTERS AT SEA.

Collision of Steamers Off Cape Colonna, in Greece.

Many Lives Lost by the Accident—A Terrific Hurricane on the Nova Scotia Coast Causes Death and Destruction.

STEAMERS COLLIDE.

ATHENS, Sept. 12.—A collision has taken place off Cape Colonna, the most southern point of Attica, between an Italian steamship, the Taormina, of the Italian Messageries Company, and a Greek steamship, the Thessalia. The Taormina sank soon after the accident, drowning her captain, seven of her crew and forty of her cabin passengers. The second officer of the Taormina and a number of passengers who were standing on the bridge at the time the collision occurred were saved by the boats of the Thessalia.

The Taormina left Constantinople Wednesday morning and arrived Thursday night near the island of Gaiders, when it sighted a vessel coming toward it. The Taormina repeatedly whistled, but no notice was taken of the signal. The Thessalia, which was going under full steam, struck the Taormina midships. The panic on the Italian vessel was frightful. Many of the hatches were open and the shock caused a number of people to be pushed down into the hold and killed outright. Five minutes after the ships struck the Thessalia disengaged itself from the Taormina and continued on its course, paying no heed to the Taormina or its signals of distress. Some of the latter's passengers leaped upon the deck of the Thessalia just after the vessels struck, and in this manner many were saved. Brave Capt. Ferroni, of the Taormina, remained at his post on the bridge and sank with his ship. Capt. Primas declares that the captain of the Taormina must have mistaken its course and must have seen that he (Primas) did what he could, but was unable to prevent the collision.

ATHENS, Sept. 14.—The corrected estimate of the number of persons drowned by the collision off Cape Colonna between the Italian steamship Taormina and the Greek steamship Thessalia shows that sixty-six persons lost their lives.

DUBLIN, Sept. 12.—A steam launch carrying non-union laborers from Dublin to Londonderry sank in Lough Foyle Friday after colliding with the steamer Albatross. Fifteen persons were drowned, among them a child of Graeme Hunter, agent of the London grain federation, who was aboard the launch with his family.

HALIFAX, N. S., Sept. 12.—The two-topmast fishing schooner Georgiana is being towed into Halifax by tugs. It was found 10 miles off Devil's island, bottom up, by the fishing schooner Coronet. The Georgiana was making Halifax harbor on the night of the hurricane with a crew of sixteen men and a cargo of 800 quintals of fish. Its dories were smashed and swept away. It was thrown upon its beam-end and finally turned bottom up and all its crew drowned. The lost consists of two members of a family named Boudrot, four members of the Le Blanc family, five named Porter and five named Surrette. All were from Yarmouth. A dispatch from Yarmouth says that the news of the loss of the Georgiana caused a great shock there, and that the thriving village of Tasket Wedse, where all the young fellows of the crew belonged, is in deep mourning.

Vessels arriving at Canso, Sydney, Shelburne and all Atlantic ports bring details of the severity of the gale. The fishing fleet on the western banks suffered severely. One vessel reports having had four of its crew swept overboard. Scores of vessels lost dories, trawls, sails and other gear, and many men were carried overboard.

KILLED THEM BOTH.

An Arkansas Man Slays His Wife and a Sewing Machine Agent.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 12.—S. F. Parker, a traveling agent, sold the wife of George Harris a sewing machine. When Harris learned of the trade he became enraged, and slipping up behind Parker stabbed him several times, killing him instantly. Harris then turned on his wife, cutting her fatally with the same knife. The murderer then tried to escape, and when overtaken by the sheriff's posse he made desperate resistance. He was taken, however, and is now in jail.

Made the Rope That Hanged Guiteau.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 14.—Robert H. Humphrey, the man who made the rope with which Guiteau was hanged, was stricken down with paralysis of the spinal cord about ten days ago and died Saturday morning. Guiteau, before his death, cursed the men responsible for his execution, predicting that they would come to no good end, and several of these men have gone to untimely graves.

Fatal Boating Disaster.

CLOQUET, Minn., Sept. 14.—Meager particulars have just been received of the drowning of five persons in the St. Louis river. They are said to be settlers who were going on a claim. In crossing the St. Louis river their boat capsized and all were drowned. Two of the victims were brothers named Jackson, and one of them a 12-year-old girl.

Shot His Daughter and Himself.

LYLE, Kan., Sept. 14.—Thursday last John Sorrick and wife, farm people, agreed to separate and the woman was given the custody of their 7-year-old daughter. Thursday Sorrick went to a neighbor's where his wife was stopping and a bitter quarrel ensued, ending in Sorrick fatally shooting his daughter and sending a bullet into his own brain.

End of the World.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 14.—Rev. Joseph Jenckes, D.D., rector of St. Paul's cathedral in this city, one of the most prominent Episcopal ministers in Indiana, has become convinced from historical research that the world will end in ten years.

TWO SUICIDES AT NIAGARA.

A Man and a Woman End Their Lives by Going Over the Cataract.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., Sept. 12.—At about 1:30 o'clock Thursday afternoon a man jumped over the American falls from Luna island. About three hours later a woman ended her life by jumping into the river from Prospect point and being carried over the American falls. Nothing is known about the identity of either of them. The man was seen to float down the river by three men who stood on Luna island. They called to him and he replied: "I am going over the falls." As near as they could judge he was about 35 years old and had a sandy mustache. Many people saw the woman's act, for it was at an hour when the park was crowded. She stepped upon the stone wall about 20 feet back from the brink, climbed over the new iron railing and jumped into the river. Among those who saw her was H. T. Heim, of Philadelphia, who jumped into the water from the point and grabbed her. They were not a dozen feet distant from the edge of the falls. She struck at him fiercely and fought him off and was then swept over the precipice. Mr. Heim regained the shore with difficulty. She was about 25 years old and dressed in mourning.

JOHN H. B. LATROBE DEAD.

Eminent as a Lawyer, Writer, Philanthropist and the Founder of Liberia.

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 12.—John H. B. Latrobe, the oldest lawyer in Maryland, and widely known as a lawyer, author and philanthropist, died Friday at his home here. He was 89 years old, and his death was caused by a general weakening of the vital powers incident to old age. The venerable lawyer's greatest achievement was the establishment of the republic of Liberia in Africa. Mr. Latrobe was president of the Maryland and national colonization societies, and it was through his individual efforts that Liberia was established as the "black republic." His was the pen that drafted its constitution, and this code stands almost entirely unchanged at the present day. Dr. Hall, who went to Africa a short time ago to complete negotiations with local chiefs, who ceded large tracts of land to Liberia, went through Mr. Lathrobe's efforts.

Over Four Thousand Associations in the World, with 390,000 Members.

LONDON, Sept. 14.—The World's Young Men's Christian association has just completed its annual table of statistics. From this it appears that there are in Great Britain and Ireland 756 centers and 78,900 members. In London there are sixty-five associations, with a membership of 10,000 and an annual cost of $150,000. Exeter hall, with 1,500 members, costs $60,000 a year. Liverpool has 3,000 members and costs but $16,000 a year. Manchester, with 2,500 members, costs but $11,000 a year. Germany has more associations than England and in the United States there are 1,305 centers, having a membership of 222,000. Taking the entire world the report estimates that there are over 4,400 Young Men's Christian associations in existence, with an aggregate membership of 390,000.

BOLD BURGLARS.

Their Unsuccessful Raid on the Bank at Effingham, Ill.

EFFINGHAM, Ill., Sept. 12.—About 1 o'clock Friday afternoon two men entered the First national bank and, covering the cashier, Joseph Partridge, Jr., with revolvers, ordered him to hand over the money. The cashier, who was alone in the bank, retreated behind a safe door and shouted for help. One of the robbers fled, but the other passed back of the railing. The cashier made a dash for the street. The robber picked up a roll of bills, $200 in all, and also ran out of the bank. He joined his companion and the two started down the street. After an exciting chase they were finally captured and taken to jail. There they gave their names as A. H. O'Neil and William McGuire. O'Neil is known as a tough character here. Nothing is known of McGuire.

Three Hundred Killed.

BERLIN, Sept. 14.—Further particulars have been received of the defeat of the Germans in east Africa by the natives. Three hundred of the blacks under German command were killed and a large quantity of guns and munitions of war were lost to the enemy. The victorious natives followed up their success without mercy, killing all they got in their power.

SALVADOR SHAKEN.

The Country Visited by an Earthquake with Dire Results.

Many Cities and Towns Have Suffered Severely—A Great Number of Lives Thought to Have Been Lost—Property Laid Waste.

A TERRIBLE CALAMITY.

SAN SALVADOR, Sept. 12.—Details of the terrible earthquake shock, reports of which were cabled Wednesday, prove it to have been more disastrous than was at that time supposed. In this city about forty people were killed and sixty more or less injured. Judging from the fearful results in San Salvador the number killed throughout the country will be somewhere in the hundreds. The shock began here by a slight tremor, which gradually augmented. The duration of the first shock was ten seconds. The earth was shaken in a most horrible manner for five seconds. Then it gradually died away, until at last no motion whatever could be felt. During the shock there was a frightful noise, which was plainly audible in all parts of the city. The air was filled with agonizing shrieks. Everywhere could be heard the cries of parents calling for their children and children screaming for their parents. The pandemonium was succeeded by a calm that was quite as dreadful as the shock had been, for it was accompanied by the darkness of night. No one knew what was to happen next. Earthquakes, by turn feeble and violent, continue at irregular intervals. Everybody expects the climax to come September 21, on account of the equinox. It is not unlikely this city will be made a total wreck.

The government has sent 300 men to deepen the outlet to Lake Ilopongo, in order to diminish the amount of water in it and to reduce the violent shocks. Lake Ilopongo is 8 miles east of this city and is 96 miles square. It occupies the area of the old sunken volcano. It is now filled with rainwater and is heavily charged with sulphuretted hydrogen and other gases. The workmen engaged in digging the outlet September 12 were carried away by a torrent of warm, ill-smelling water and were drowned.

The details of the ruin of towns in the axis of the earthquake are meager. Of 320 houses at Comaseaqua only eight remain standing. The loss of life there is great.

SAN SALVADOR, via Galveston, Sept. 14.—The earthquake of September 8 was experienced all over the country. The material losses are estimated at $500,000, although this seems a low figure.

BANK DOORS CLOSED.

State Officials Take Charge of a Michigan Financial Institution.

MILFORD, Mich., Sept. 11.—The Milford State bank has failed in business. Thursday morning, at the usual time for opening, a notice was placed upon the door announcing the closing of the bank pending an examination. The news of the failure was unexpected. The amount of the liabilities cannot be learned definitely. Unprofitable investments and poorly secured loans are said to be the cause of the difficulty. The capital stock of the bank is $50,000. It is rumored that the Highland vinegar and pickle works are involved in the failure. The losses in this place will be large.

Says He Didn't Rob Daly.

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—William S. Hollingsworth, who is alleged to have stolen $100,000 from his partner's (John Daly, the king of New York gamblers) safe, said the whole story was untrue. Some time ago he quit the gambling business on account of his children. He squared up everything and has witnesses to show it. He did not need to take any money to square up Wall street losses, as his Wall street dealings showed a large profit.

A Terrible Fall from a Scaffold.

SALTSBURG, Pa., Sept. 14.—A terrible accident occurred here Friday night. A swinging scaffold under the railroad bridge was crowded with nine workmen when the rope broke, precipitating the entire party into the river bed 50 feet below. The river is low and the men fell on the sharp stones, four of them being fatally injured, while the rest were more or less bruised.

In Favor of the Women.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Sept. 12.—The Michigan Methodist conference voted Thursday on the question as to whether women should have a voice in the general conference. The pastors voted 156 for and 36 against the proposition, while the lay vote stood eight to one in favor of the women.

Stole Money and Watches.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Sept. 12.—Robbers entered the wholesale commission house of Baldwin & Morgan during the night, blew open the safe and secured $200 and six gold watches. They failed to blow open the third door of the safe and missed $10,000. There is no clew to the robbers.

The Failure Record.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—The business failures occuring throughout the country during the last seven days number 214, as compared with a total of 217 last week. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 193.

Cost of the Chilian War.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—It is semi-officially estimated that the revolution cost Chili $70,000,000. As the nominal revenue of the state is $52,000,000, recuperation will be speedy.

Robbers Make a Big Haul.

AKRON, O., Sept. 12.—A safe in the store of W. H. Nees at Uniontown, a village 12 miles from Akron, was blown open by burglars Thursday night. They secured $4,500.

Three Millions Paid In.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent;
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

LOVE'S FOREVER.

"Then must we really part forever?"
Some rashly spoken word had chilled her,
And scornfully she turned away
From the soft speech whose potent sway
Had evening after evening thrilled her.

Responsive to the plaintive plea
That certified his heart's endeavor,
She glanced at him disdainfully,
And, cold as rolls the polar sea,
Her voice pronounced the word "Forever!"

A sob! A moan! With leaden feet
From the veranda he descended,
Trod ruefully the murky street
Praying to find a winding sheet,
And whatsoever with it blended.

"This woe must cease!" he said, then laid
His hand upon a dagger straightway;
A gasp! A shudder! Then the blade
Was pocketed and tracks were made
Back toward the cruel maiden's gateway.

A form rushed out, four arms did lock
As if they never meant to sever,
A simultaneous labial shock,
And twenty minutes by the clock
Had marked the bounds of Love's forever.

COURTSHIP.

A Glimpse Into a Paradise Where All Is Sunshine and Love.

The Diffident Lover, the Confident Lover, the Sudden Lover and the Lover Who Always Does the Right Thing at the Right Time.

When Tom, Dick or Harry sets out to court his Angelina is it "of malice prepense and aforethought," or does it all occur on the spur of the moment?

It has been a much discussed question, and one to be diversely answered as long as there are "many men of many minds." Each girl believes she knows just when she made the first impression; but the truth is very often the man himself cannot tell when the seed was planted nor how it germinated, and is surprised to find that a full-blown flower is abloom in his heart, sweetening and brightening the whole world for him.

There is certainly no royal road to success in love. It is as impossible to lay down exact rules of procedure in courtship as it would be to apply mathematics in calculating the probable course of a butterfly's flight. Even as the wind "bloweth where it listeth," so the lover's emotions vary and change—often against his will and better reason. The man who is very sure and calm in his courtship, who has no anxiety and is not sometimes assailed by doubt and wretchedness, is, obviously, not very deeply in love. Certainty and quietude may be the aftermath following marriage, but they are surely foreign to that anxious yet too brief season which precedes the period of bridesmaids, minister, congratulations and a wedding tour.

There are men who, finding themselves interested, plunge into a courtship as a diver takes his leap into the waves. He comes up breathless; but the very force of his first effort has carried him far on to success. He loses in delicacy, but succeeds by the very oddity of his way, or perhaps, because it is the unexpected that happens. To this type belonged the stranger who, traveling west with a slender girl graduate from Boston on her way to take charge of a school, proposed at the end of the trip that she should teach him how best to live his life, rather than the children how to spell. His straightforward assurance had its charm, and she exchanged her pupils for a husband at the end of the first scholastic term.

Others approach the point of proposal as a sensitive patient would take a prescribed sea bath when the north wind has chilled the waves. They advance to the very edge, but as the billow rolls up to their feet, they, afraid of the shock, draw back—only to again advance as the water recedes, and, once more, retreat precipitately as the breaker returns. So with the diffident lover. Who so brave as he when away from his fair? Who so determined to his fate? But as the moment approaches when he must "put it to the touch and win or lose it all," his courage ebbs away, and he thinks: "I'll wait a little while and make more sure." Lucky for the man if he can at last find such help as Dorothy gave her lover, who for ten long years tried weekly to propose, but always became frightened and turned the question into something else. At length in sheer desperation, she answered:

"No, I woan't be havin' the loan o' yo' nag; but for the Law' sake, Obadiah, if yer want to marry me, WHY doan't yer say so?"

Then comes the man who, as gracefully as the strong swimmer parts the waters, progresses through the intricacies of courtship, and arrives at the desired haven of acceptance safely and surely. He is comme il faut in every particular; he does the right thing always, and invariably in the right place. His attentions to every member of the family, from grandmother to baby sister, are just what they should be. His intentions are perfectly plain—and so are those of his lady love and of all her kin. He, she and they know that he will ask, she accept, and they approve; but it is proper that a certain semblance of the-young-man-in-love and the-young-girl-innocent should be maintained; so Angelo does all that is requisite and at last proposes with just the right amount of ardor and uncertainty in his voice and words. Serapina behaves to perfection—blushes, hesitates and is coy, as is incumbent upon so fair and modest a maiden—but, finally, sweetly consents, "if mamma and papa will approve." These self-sacrificing parents, having long ago determined what a good thing the match will be, magnanimously give their permission, and all "goes merry as a marriage bell."

From these three kinds of courtship there are many variations—all of them pleasanter, perhaps, than the examples given—for Tom, Dick or Harry, honest fellows despite types and rules, following out their own theories, and believing that each one knows more about his own particular Angelina than any other man has ever known about any other girl. He tells himself he is not silly enough to be frightened or bashful or awkward; he is well aware of just what he is going to say and where and when he shall say it. He thinks, too, that he can be pretty certain of her answer (or he would not be so foolish as to ask), though, if she should make some few objections, he hopes and believes he knows just how to combat them successfully. So he lays out his plans while Angelina sleeps peacefully, dreaming, most probably, of him; and he retires to rest in a state of supreme self-satisfaction—and is likely to have visions of some other and hitherto forgotten girl.

The courtship begins and prospers somewhat slowly, as courtships will when carried on beneath alien eyes; but one day he calls and asks her to walk. Happily they are suburban and natural, so Angelina assents; she is lovely and light-headed, Tom gallant and gay. He knows of a path in a romantic piece of woods, a lovely bit of forest with fallen trees and broken ridges and a purling, winding brook—a little oasis of nature left in the desert of advancing civilization for just such happy pairs as this. They talk of the last dance they attended in the winter; he talks distinctly, but she insists on recalling the incidents of that evening in a very different way: "How very pleasant Dick Darcy was, and what a delightful dancer! his step quite suits mine"—which was not what Tom planned at all.

In the midst of her chatter about the delights of the past season, she steps on a root running zigzag across the path, and hurts her foot. Instantly our swain is all sympathy and pity. Will she not show him where it was hurt? No, of course not; she could not do that, and, besides, how would it help the matter? Then he sighs and wishes it was her rounded chin or pretty hands, that he could make them well by an old recipe his mother had when he was a little child. She, never thinking, asks what it is, and when he says: "A kiss," she exclaims: "Oh!" and trips on ahead of him, blushing furiously, but feeling pretty happy after all.

This episode was not in Tom's plan, but he thinks it a good one and believes he has scored a point.

They come to a fallen tree; this Tom had remembered, and given it a prominent place in his proposed campaign. He would hold her hands and help her over and—but the girl vaults lightly across unassisted, and Tom says something rather bad under his breath as he thinks that there was a fine chance lost.

They walk along in the cool green shade until the brook is reached; then he gallantly puts his foot into the shallow water and tells Angelina to step on it and so pass dry shod. But she spies a piece of rock and makes a stepping stone of that, declaring that she could not think of crushing his foot beneath her weight. Tom looks at the slender figure and springy step and laughs at the idea of her hurting him, but groans inwardly as he thinks of this being another planned episode gone astray. The only results are a wet shoe and the bottom of his new trousers badly dabbled.

Angelina is sparkling as the sunshine, as enticing as beauty, good health and warm heart can make her; but Tom's courtship does not progress. She is a very will-o'-the-wisp along conversational paths; as he seems nearing the desired point, she is off and away on some other line of thought. He follows and tries to take the lead, but with the perversity of her youth and sex, she avoids the very thing she most would have, and will not allow him to say one word even verging on sentiment. At length Tom lapses into monosyllabic replies, and looks as he feels—very downcast and a little gloomy. She watches him furtively, and begins to take a less heartless tone. He is quick to see the change, so maintains his despondent manner, letting it gradually harden into austerity. As he becomes severe, she softens, until, declaring she is tired out, she throws herself on a green knoll, spreads out her pretty draperies and prepares herself to be propitiated, coaxed and courted.

Tom feels instantly that his chance has come, and, honest gentleman that he is, shows his joy in his face. He throws himself down quite near to her and falls to praising her dress, her hat, the fit of her gloves, the dainty chain around her slender throat. It is only the beginning, and soon love makes him eloquent, though his heart is beating furiously and he has forgotten every speech which he had prepared. No matter; her heart beats as fast as his and every throb pleads for him as he speaks—until at last he draws her toward him, lifts the drooping head, takes one long glance into the soft brown eyes and lets his lips touch hers in the first kiss of love. His veins throb, and, forgetting himself for an instant, he holds her so close and tight that she is frightened and begins to cry. Then he feels as if he were a criminal and pets and soothes her into quiet.

They sit there long, hand in hand, saying little, only feeling that the supreme good has come to them and that life is very beautiful.

So it is that some men court and to some women is granted the boon of an exquisite association of blue skies, green woods, mossy knolls and running water with their hearts' bright history. To all such the face of nature is forever beatified, for it is hallowed by the sweetest recollections that belong to the glory of youth, beauty and love.

Some time ago the question was asked of many writers: "What is the happiest time of a woman's life?" Perhaps if they had answered truthfully they would have said: "The days of courtship, when I was wooed by the man I loved the very best." For, though dearer and deeper joys may come, there is nothing so beautiful, so joyous and natural as "Love's young dream."

When the baby cries every one wants to know what's the matter; and if the outcry is frequent, the chances are that there is something wrong about the food. It requires unusual facilities to be able to keep posted on all the latest ideas about feeding young children, therefore the article "How and What to Feed the Baby," published in the October number of that progressive monthly, Demorest's Family Magazine, is especially valuable to all who have anything to do with babies.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Death of Emily Ward.

Famous "Aunt" Emily Ward died in Detroit, aged 72 years. For two generations Emily Ward had been a leading figure among Michigan's best known private benefactors. Although unmarried she was truly a mother in Israel. Emily gained the title of "Aunt Emily" when but 10 years of age, owing to the helpful position she occupied in her father's house. Every uncared-for orphan child, every youthful waif without home or friends, found in "Aunt Emily" a protector, teacher, friend and mother. There are half a dozen of her "boys" whom she reared and launched in life who can now write their checks for sums expressed by seven figures.

Drowned in Their Mother's Sight.

Frank and Harry, the 12 and 14-year-old sons of James Harrison, a farmer residing on the Lake Huron shore near Forestville, started from their home in a small sailboat. Both were inexperienced sailors, and they had not covered a mile of their journey before a squall struck their boat, capsizing it. Their mother, who had been watching them from the bank, became frantic at sight of their danger, but before aid could reach the boys they had both sunk for the last time.

An Owner Wanted for $25,000.

William Babcock, 25 years old, left his home at Mosherville and went west seven years ago. Since then nothing has been heard of him. His father, who was one of the richest men in the town, died recently, leaving a fortune of nearly $100,000 to be divided among four heirs. The dead man's estate has been turned into cash by order of the probate court, and the missing son's share of $25,000 is now deposited in bank awaiting his return.

Health in Michigan.

Diphtheria was reported at thirty-two places, scarlet fever at thirty-five places, typhoid fever at fifty-six and measles at eleven places.

Stole His Clothing.

Some cold-blooded thief stole a suit of clothes belonging to Will Lytte while he was in swimming near Muskegon. He stayed in the water the whole afternoon, and barnecles had commenced to form when a friendly barrel came within reach, with which he clothed himself and started home in the dark. He thinks half the town turned out to receive him.

A Beauty Contest.

Starved to Death.

The terribly emaciated body of a colored man was found near Monroe. Near the head were some turnip leaves, he evidently having eaten the turnips, and a hill of potatoes near his head gave evidence of his having dug into it with his hands. There was nothing to identify him by. He had evidently died of starvation and consumption.

The first rainstorm of any consequence that has fallen in the vicinity of Shepherd, Isabella county, in two years, fell recently, when several inches of water deluged the land in a very short time.

The Michigan salt association and its successors have handled 40,000,000 barrels of salt for Michigan manufacturers since 1876 and lost but $1,500 in bad bills.

James M. Wells, of Bay City, has suffered from varicose veins ever since the war and because of his army service. The disease has so gained upon him recently that he will lose his right leg.

Mrs. Jane Hill, aged 99 years, died at Detroit after a residence of seventy-five years in that city. She leaves three children, twenty-one grandchildren, forty-one great-grandchildren and six great-great-grandchildren.

OUR COUNTY FAIR.

To the Members and all People Interested in the Welfare of our Lenawee County Agricultural Society.

The Annual Fair or Exposition given by the society has become a permanent institution, and is now one of the large fairs of our State. This has been brought about by efficient labor and sacrifice of time on the part of the officers, and their supporters and assistants, the people of the county. The beautiful grounds with substantial improvements and equipments for the display of all kinds of live stock, farm products, and various kinds of hand and machine manufactured wares show a wonderful progress and improvements over days gone by. It should be our ambition to continue this rapid growth and improvement, and if we look around us and note the advancement of other societies it seems to become an urgent duty that we be up and moving.

The time is near at hand for the exhibition of 1891. There are but two weeks before that important event. The success depends wholly upon you. The display in all departments must be complete, and the attendance large, to insure success. Every resident of Lenawee county should consider themselves on the "programme" to do something to forward the success we seek. Get a premium list of the secretary, E. L. Mills, Adrian, or from the director of your township. Look over all the departments and make exhibits in as many as possible. It is none too soon to make the preparation.

Breeders of all kinds of stock, we solicit your patronage. The accommodations will be good for your convenience and comfort. Good stalls and pens and abundance of bedding, hay and pure water. The pens and stalls have been renovated and improved. The swine now have good floors and an awning to keep out the sun. A long line of new horse stalls have been added to the already large number. We ask you to assist in filling every pen and stall.

There should be the greatest display of vegetables, seeds and grain that was ever shown in this county. Farmers will you each assist?

Butter and cheese makers, note the revised list for '91, increased premiums and more of them. Special effort is being made in this department. The banner dairy county of the state should step to the front with a great exhibit. Ladies, you who always sell your choice butter for the highest market rate, we ask you to show a sample at the fair this fall. Special arrangements will be made for the display of this product. We also urge you to make exhibit of some of the choice loaves of cake and bread for which Lenawee county ladies are so famous. We hope to see every shelf and space full of these toothsome viands. With all the improvements in methods, and almost endless variety of canned fruits, jellies, vegetables, etc., we should have such a display as would fill our largest building to overflowing. Select a few of your best samples and help make a large show.

Granges, P. of I. associations and Farmers' clubs, I invite your attention to page 113 of premium list, to note the large prizes offered for displays of farm products. Appoint a committee at once to make the collection, and thus replenish your low treasury.

Domestic and ornamental needle work paintings, drawings, and that wonderfully interesting corner, the boys and girls department, should each and all have their full share of contributors.

All dealers in farm and general agricultural machinery are cordially invited to take space on the fair grounds, and every facility and convenience in the power of the association will be furnished them, with free steam power and pulley shafting.

Farmers, go to the fair to see and take notes of the improvements made from year to year in this line of machinery, and it is the great event of the season for the agents to advertise. Remember the dates of the fair. Wait for it.

Note the one-half rate on the railroads. The Lake Shore main line between Ottawa Lake and Hillsdale, the branches, Jackson and Adrian, Fayette and Adrian, Monroe and Adrian, Dundee line and Adrian, as well as the Wabash, between Detroit and Butler, the C. J. & M., between Dundee and Hanover, via Britton to Adrian, all make reduced rates.

Do your full duty for the coming fair, and it will be the greatest, by a large degree, of any ever held at Adrian.

Yours most earnestly,

GEO. B. HORTON, President.

$1,000 REWARD.

Our American chemists are renowned, not only for their enterprise, but for their vigilance. They are prompt to expose frauds wherever they find them. Thus far, however, they have not earned the reward of one thousand ($1,000 dollars offered by the proprietors of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) for the discovery, by analysis, of a particle of mercury, iodide of potash, or any poisonous substance, in their famous medicine. The reason the reward has not been picked up is because there are no mineral or poisonous substances in Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) It is a vegetable compound, which has been before the public for half a century, and its history is marked by a wonderful series of successes.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Don't forget the K. O. T. M. social Saturday night.

K. O. T. M. social Saturday evening. Let everybody come.

We are sorry to hear that our friend, Wm. Underwood, is again on the sick list.

Corn-cutting is right in seassn, but the boys say they must lay off to attend the fair at Adrian.

Miss Jennie Saxton is at home making a short visit. Her friends trust she will not catch the measles.

Fine weather, but nevertheless a rain would not come amiss, as the wheat will hardly sprout the ground is so dry.

Rev. Geo. W. Borden and family of Marion, N. Y. are making an extended visit at his father's, the Rev. E. W. Borden's, Charlie Dubois and family and Wm. Rinn returned from their visit in Canada last Saturday evening and report a general good time.

The school bell chimed forth its welcome Monday morning and from the rush of children a stranger would think Britton quite a city.

Osgood Bros. are remodeling their sorgrum mill preparatory to their fall run. They turn out splendid molasses and are sure to please.

We understand that E. W. Lenardson is one of the trio going west and offers to sell his safety cheap. We would also caution him against the possibilities of a tie ticket.

Our feather weight wheelman gave us an exhibition of fancy riding on the streets the other P. M. He contemplates crossing the Niagara on a tight wire soon. Better go a little slow.

Willis Helm's house is now all ready for the plaster. Men usually don't fancy moving and house-cleaning, but we think W. J. H. must be an exception to the rule, as he wears such a pleasant smile.

The death of Charles Ballou, who was killed by being thrown from his wagon while coming from Dundee last Friday night, casts a shadow of sorrow over the whole community. Charlie was a good, kind-hearted boy and we all mourn his loss.

Owing to many unlooked for delays, manager Gillen was unable to hand in the cast of characters for The Fireman, to be given at the Opera House in Oct. The play is a heavy one and success depends upon getting the cast well chosen, which we trust will be accomplished in time for next week's budget.

Report says we are about to lose three of our young men who have decided that the western country is waiting for them. We don't know whether they are going on their wheels or not but our advice is to take them along, as there is a good many ties to count between California and Britton. But success to you boys, we glory in your spunk.

You ought to have been up to the ball game at Ridgeway last Saturday. Macon and Britton, vs. Britton and Ridgeway (mostly B—ton). Ridgeways sure hitter the catcher, only got flanned out two or three times, the mistake being caused by Britton's twirler. The teams were about equally matched, both doing excellent work. Score 11 to 12 in favor of Macon-Britton.

As a lad of five summers observed two or three persons enter one of the saloons here, he made the remark "that they were going in there to be shaved," and we think he was about right.

Major Hendershot All Right.

The following, which is cliped from the South Dakota Democrat sufficiently explains itself.

The following card from R. H. Hendershot, of this city, recently appeared in a Detroit paper: "Will you allow me through your valuable columns to thank the Detroit Evening Journal for the "gentlemanly" manner in which it informed me as to the whereabouts of Chaplain Taylor. I called on Comrade Taylor this evening and our meeting has been to me one of the most pleasant features of the encampment. He was almost a father to me while I was in the Eighth Michigan Infantry, and I have always looked upon him as a second Abraham Lincoln or a Zack Chandler in heart. He saw me when I crossed or recrossed the Rappahannock behind the boat. He knows I took the prisoner to Burnside, and if his statement and mine do not agree when he makes it, it will be because of the lapse of time and memory. No man can doubt Chaplain Taylor's word. May the sweet benediction of heaven come to him and to his, and if he is mustered out by death's mustering out officer before we meet again I know that he will be admitted to that grand eternal post, where its members constantly increase and where none are ever lost nor depart, and where universal peace and eternal reign of joy makes war and dissension impossible. God bless him and all of his.

"Drummer Boy of the Rappahannock."

In a later issue of the paper in which the above appeared is published a latter from Chaplain Taylor, in which he declares that Mr. Hendershott is just what he claims to be.

Science in Bread Making.

At the recent annual meeting of the American Chemical Society, held in Washington, D. C., the question of the value of corbonate of ammonia as a leavening agent in bread, or as used in baking powders came up for discussion in which Prof. Baker, of the University of Pennsylvania, and President of the Society; Dr. Richardson, late of the United States Department of Agriculture in Washington; Dr. Wm. McMurtrie, late Prof. of Chemistry in the University of Illinois; Dr. E. H. Bartley, late Chemist of the Brooklyn, N. Y., Board of Health, and Prof of Chemistry of the Long Island College, and others took part.

The consensus of opinion was overwhelming in favor of the employment of ammonia. It was stated as a fact that ammonia rendered the gluten of the flour more soluble than the original gluten, and that the bread in which this action was produced by carbonate of ammonia must be more digestible and hence more healthful, and because of the extreme volatility of carbonate of ammonia, and its complete explusion from the bread in the process of baking it is one of the most useful, most healthful and most valuable leavening agents known.

These conclusions are borne out by the very elaborate and exhaustive experiments made by Prof. J. W. Mallet, of the University of Virginia, which show conclusively that bread made with a baking powder in which one per cent of carbonate of ammonia is used, in connection with cream of tartar and soda, is not only of uniformly better color and texture but a product more wholesome, because the ammonia serves to neutralize any organic or lactic acids present in the flour.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT. 24, 1891.

The wizard who manufactures rain to order out in Wyoming is said to be an Ohio man. Enough said. That explains it.

The Shermanization of silver is what they call it down in Ohio, when speaking of the present status of silver. That is a very appropriate and significant name for it.

October sixth will be a big day for the Ohio Democracy. A state mass meeting will be held at Columbus, at which every Democratic governor in the Union is expected to be present.

The American hog has finally found his way into Germany, but it will take some time to build up a large trade. A business that has been ruined by idiotic legislation cannot be restored in a day.

The "cheap" silver dollar will buy as much tariff taxed goods as a gold dollar a greenback dollar, or a grayback dollar. Pass in your silver dollars, gentlemen. They are taken at par in this office.

In many of the judicial districts of Kansas the republicans and democrats are uniting against the Farmers' Alliance. We doubt the propriety of such a coalition. The democrats surely have nothing to gain by it.

Every level-headed citizen will rejoice at the prospect of extending and enlarging our trade with Germany. Call it by whatever name you please, it is a blow in favor of free trade and against the tariff humbug.

The Farmers' Alliance of Minnesota has issued another "hold your wheat" circular, which claims that wheat will reach $1.50 per bushel before the winter is over. An array of figures are given which would seem to substantiate the claim.

The Kansas republicans insist that mortgages are an evidence of great prosperity. This may be a very pretty theory for the mortgagee, but when the sheriff calls round to take the farm on a foreclosure the mortgagor isn't likely to view the matter in that light.

In the liquor plank of their platform the New York republicans declare in "favor of restriction by taxation in such localities as do not by option exclude the liquor traffic." Nothing restricts trade so much as taxation, that is true. But why doesn't this truth apply to the tariff as well as to the liquor question?

Before the setting of the sun on the day of his nomination for Governor, Congressman Flower, of New York, sent in his resignation as a member of the Fifty-Second Congress. The act demonstrated his own high sense of honor and propriety and at the same time it was a stinging rebuke to Gov. David B. Hill, whose action in a similar emergency was quite the reverse.

The New York Democrats nominated a very strong ticket last week and it is reasonably sure of success. New York is naturally a democratic state. Its leading interests are agricultural and commercial and both of these demand greater freedom of trade. Factional warfare is held in abeyance and the New York democrats will address themselves to the duty of the present hour, the election of their state ticket.

The Chicago Times says: The republicans of New York may regard with much comfort the prospects for pecuniary profit in the candidacy of Mr. Fassett. A thrifty life, the principal incidents of which were his marriage to the daughter of Millionaire Crocker and his subsequent inheritance of a fortune of more than a million dollars, has resulted in providing him with a very comfortable "barrel." And what could be more inspiriting to the average republican politician of the Empire state than the thought of a well-filled barrel with the Fassett turned on?

USE AND ABUSE OF HAMILTON.

Quoted By McKinley & Co. in Support of Our High Tariff—Hamilton Was Not a McKinleyite—Said the Consumer Pays the Tax and the Tariff is a Bounty.

When our protectionists of the present day refer to Alexander Hamilton as the "father of protection" and quote him in support of our extravagant and overgrown McKinleyism, they do not seem to know on what dangerous ground they are treading. Hamilton was by no means a protectionist of the McKinley stripe. He held views which are utterly opposed to the pet notions of McKinley & Co.

For example, the protection which Hamilton defended averaged less than eight per cent all around; while our McKinley tariff averages abou 60 per cent. and runs above 100 and even 200 and 300 per cent. on some articles. With his little eight per cent. tariff, too, Hamilton was satisfied. In his report on manufactures, issued in 1791, he said: "It need scarcely be observed that the duties on the great mass of articles have reached a point which it would not be expected to exceed."

And yet our McKinleyites a century later give us 60 per cent. and denounce as "unpatriotic" the wicked democrats who several years ago were about to give us 40 per cent.

Our McKinleyites, too, make it one of the fundamental points of their creed that "the foreigner pays the duty;" and even now the great McKinley himself is defining protection as "taxing somebody else's property rather than our own." But Hamilton was a man of honest mind who would practice no cheap deceptions upon himself. Hamilton admitted that it was "true, as a general rule, that the consumer pays the duty."

At another very important point Hamilton stood at variance with our latter-day protectionists. These insist that domestic manufacturers do not charge more for their goods by reason of the duty on the foreign article. But not so Hamilton. He, simple-minded and honest man, could not see how there could be any such thing as protection at all, if the manufacturer did not get higher prices. Here is the way he put it down in plain black and white: "Duties evidently amount to a virtual bounty; since, by enhancing the charges on foreign articles, they enable our manufacturers to undersell foreign competitors.

Here is another good, square admission of the same thing: "As a duty upon a foreign article makes an addition to its price, it causes an extra expense to the community for the benefit of the domestic manufacturer; a bounty does no more."

Hamilton made no attempt to "whip the devil around the stump."

THE WOOL HUMBUG.

Views of a Prominent Protection ist Trade Paper—How Wool Prices Have Gone Down Under McKinley's Higher Duties—What Kept Up Territory Wools.

The American Wool Reporter, of Boston, a protectionist trade paper in favor of free wool, contained an editorial recently on the prices of wool, which every wool-grower should read. The Reporter says:

The wool industry in several departments shows greater depression to-day than before the passage of the McKinley bill. Woolen hosiery has been somewhat benefited, it is claimed, and dress goods manufacturers note some improvement, due largely, however, to the fact, as stated a week ago, that fash on has run to fabrics which are especially within the ability of our domestic mills to produce, and which would have been the case even at the old duties. But generally the manufacturer of woolen goods cannot be said to have been materially benefited as yet by the high tariff measure. In spite of the large consumption of goods due to a seasonable winter, men's wear woolens are in an unsettled condition, with manufacturers doubtful whether to shut down their mills during the summer or to pile up goods in anticipation of a demand whose character may be wholly disappointing.

The price of domestic fleeces is from 3 to 4 cents per pound lower than before the passage of the McKinley bill, and the imports of clothing wools during the eleven months ended May 31 of the fiscal year, which closed June 30 1891, have been 30,812,861 pounds against 14,325,491 pounds during the corresponding eleven months ended May 31, 1890. The kinds of domestic wools for which the high tariff, it was supposed, would do the most good, have been the very ones that have declined the most since the passage of the bill. The only grades which have really held up to their former level have been territory wools, due largely to the fact that they have been in such large demand for mixing with Australian wools, and, although they may ease off in sympathy with the rest of the market, they are likely to hold comparatively firm, as there is every indication that during the remainder of the year Australian wools will be sought for and if they are, territory wools will be in demand to be used in connection with them. As to importations of foreign wools, there is no indication of a cessation. American wool buyers have taken 15,000 bales at the recent London sales, as they reasonably believe that that amount will be wanted.

As a measure, therefore, for checking importations of foreign wools, and for enabling the west ra wool grower to secure better prices for his wool and for improving the condition of the goods market as a whole, the McKinley tariff thus far has not been a success. And we cannot say that with the large importations of foreign wool, which are sure to continue, there is evidence of any substantial improvement for the domestic grower, although naturally there may be some reaction from the present depressed level of values, just as there is in the stock market when prices have had a sharp break. But the "promised land" into which the domestic wool grower was to be led by his Moses, whom he so trustingly followed, has not appeared, and it seems as far off as ever. It is not to be wondered at that we hear rumblings of discontent from the Ohio, Michigan and Pennsylvania wool growers.

THE EFFECT.

An American Industry Ruined By the McKinley Tariff.

Every effort imaginable is put forth by the McKinley organs to show that some new industry has been established here as a result of the McKinley tariff. Thus, for instance, they claim that the plush industry is one of these, but every one knows that long before the McKinley bill was even thought of there were several establishments making plush in New York, Pennsylvania and Connecticut. But for every establishment which has been helped by the bill a dozen could be named which have been injured by it.

The latest of these is a factory devoted to the manufacture of knitting machines, the owner of which is a protectionist. As a result of the McKinley tariff his export trade in knitting machines has been ruined and he is obliged to make bicycles to keep his factory running and give his workmen employment. What he thinks of the McKinley tariff was told to a representative of the American Wool Reporter as follows:

"So you are making bicycles. Is not that a novel line of goods for a knitting machine factory?"

"Oh, yes," replied the manager, "but our export trade is destroyed. Twenty-five per cent. of our force can produce enough goods for the home market, and we have as large a domestic demand for machines as any works in the country, to state it mildly; so happily, circumstances being favorable, we are able to keep 75 per cent. of our men at work in a totally different field, which for their sakes we are glad to do."

"What is the cause of this great falling off from your export trade?"

"The reason is very simple. When the tariff upon German knit goods is so high as to exclude them from the American market, the Germans will not buy American knitting machines. You may say that, so far as the export trade is concerned, the manufacture of American knitting machines is paralyzed. We have been in business since 1867, manufacturing machines, both for making seamless hosiery and for making underwear; also topping machines, looping machines and machines for making 'union suits.' Ours are distinctively hand labor-saving machines. Our factory, in the aggregate, is 305 feet long, forty feet wide and three stories high. We have adequate water power, nine months in the year; employing steam power for the remainder of that period; giving labor to 300 men. We have sold 100 machines a year to go Germany. We sell none now in that direction. You may say: 'The latest tariff legislation has destroyed that part of our business.'"

An ounce of fact is worth a ton of theory. A New England protectionist manufacturer gives the foregoing incontrovertible testimony to the ruinous effect of the McKinley tariff upon a legitimate American industry.

WHITE LEAD.

Protection to What Might Be Styled Wholesale Robbery.

During the debate on the McKinley bill the supporters of the measure vehemently denied that the trusts and combinations protected by it were selling their goods at lower prices abroad than at home. Those who claimed that such was the case were invariably called "liars," "traitors" and "haters of American industry."

After the bill was passed, however, the McKinleyites began one by one to admit the truth of these assertions. Thus the Chicago Inter Ocean, a rabid McKinley organ, said of the cartridge combine: "Four concerns, protected by a stiff tariff against foreign competition, combine and crush out and buy out all competitors in this country, and thus compel every American consumer to pay 25 per cent. more for goods than a Canuck has to pay for the same goods, or a Greaser in Mexico. This is protection with a vengeance—protection to what might easily be styled wholesale robbery."

But there are other combines which do the same thing. Thus the white lead trust, with its capitalization of $89,447,600, controls the whole trade in white lead in the United States and charges American consumers all that the duty of three cents per pound will allow. How it does this is shown by the following from Hardware, a paper published in Toronto: "The United States white lead trust has a price for the Canadian market that is as firmly held down below the cost of profitable production as the home market price of the same trust is firmly held above it. United States white lead is quoted to be laid down here in carloads, minus the Canadian duty, at $3.70 per hundred pounds spot cash. The Canadian government justly requires that the duty of 5 per cent. be calculated, not on the price quoted here, but upon that quoted to the united trade—that is, upon $6.50—which makes the total cost laid down here $4.02½."

Is not this "protection with a vengeance: protection to what might be styled wholesale robbery?"

HOW IS THIS?

McKinley Increases the Duty on Glucose to Protect the Manufacturers While the Latter Reduce the Wages of Workmen.

The high tariff New York Tribune has reported a recent reduction of 10 per cent. in the wages of the workmen in the glucose factories at Buffalo, N. Y.

The tariff duty on glucose under the old law was 20 per cent., and in the McKinley law was increased to three-quarters of a cent per pound. This specific duty, which may have been substituted for the old ad valorem rate in order that the increase might escape notice, is equivalent to a little more than 30 per cent.

The excuse for this increase of duty has never been made public. There is certainly no excuse to be found in any large importations, only $22,000 worth of glucose having come in last year. Perhaps the increase was made in anticipation of the glucose trust, which was formed several weeks ago, in order to give it a lift.

It seems as if evil spirits had entered into our protected industries since McKinley increased their protective duties, leading them to form trusts and combinations at a rate that the country has never heard of before. Let them beware lest, under the spell of these evil spirits, they "rush violently down a steep place into the sea" of popular indignation, and lose the last vestige of special privilege which a too indulgent nation accords them.

—A western trader going recently to one of the Indian agencies to buy moccasins was asked $1.75 for them. Astonished at the price he said: "Why, John, they were only $1 25 last year and I cannot stand such a raise. I know that deer are growing scarce, but why ask so much? I will pay a trifle more but not $1.75." John answered promptly, "'Kinley bill, 'Kinley bill."—Dry Goods Economist.

The New Election Law

The law is an adaptation of the Australian system. It provides that the tickets shall be printed by a county commission composed of the judge of probate, county clerk and county treasurer. The tickets are to be printed in the counties and not by the secretary of state as in the old law. The names of all candidates of all parties must be placed in separate columns under vignettes, the same as in the present law, and all upon one large ballot. The booth system is preserved as in the old law. The tickets are to be distributed to the voters by the inspectors of election and no tickets are allowed outside the railing. The party desiring to vote a straight ticket simply stamps a cross at the head of the ticket, but if he wishes to split his ticket he places a cross before the name of the candidate for whom he desires to vote and draws a line through the names of those for whom he does not wish to vote. No slips or pasters are used, because there is no use of them. The canvass of the vote will be quicker than under the old law, because the board of inspectors first count the straight tickets and then count the split tickets. These boards are constituted as follows: In townships, of the supervisor, two justices and the township clerk; in cities having no special charter provisions, of the supervisor of the ward and two aldermen. The bill does not include township or city elections, but county, state, judicial congressional and legislative balloting. The bill forbids any candidate to treat or in any way entertain at his expense any of the voters, and also forbids bringing able bodied voters to the polls with vehicles at the expense of the candidate or any political committee. It further requires candidates and political committees to file a statement in writing and under oath of all moneys expended.

The senate amendment provided for the dividing of precincts of 500 so as to facilitate the counting of ballots.

King of Medicines

Scrofulous Humor—A Cure "Almost Miraculous."

"When I was 14 years of age I had a severe attack of rheumatism, and after I recovered had to go on crutches. A year later, scrofula, in the form of white swellings, appeared on various parts of my body, and for 11 years I was an invalid, being confined to my bed years. In that time ten or eleven sores appeared and broke, causing me great pain and suffering. I feared I never should get well.

"Early in 1886 I went to Chicago to visit a sister, but was confined to my bed most of the time I was there. In July I read a book, 'A Day with a Circus,' in which were statements of cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla. I was so impressed with the success of this medicine that I decided to try it. To my great gratification the sores soon decreased, and I began to feel better and in a short time I was up and out of doors. I continued to take Hood's Sarsaparilla for about a year, when, having used six bottles, I had become so fully released from the disease that I went to work for the Flint & Walling Mfg. Co., and since then on account of sickness. I believe the disease is expelled from my system. I always feel well, am in good spirits and have a good appetite. I am now 27 years of age and can walk as well as any one, except that one limb is a little shorter than the other, owing to the loss of bone, and the sores formerly on my right leg. To my friends my recovery seems almost miraculous, and I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is the king of medicines." WILLIAM A. LEHR, 9 N. Railroad St., Kendallville, Ind.

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

A REPUBLICAN DIRECT TAXER.

The Daily Press, of Paterson, is the republican organ of Passaic county, but its advocacy of the tariff does not close its eyes to the evils of levying local taxes on the products of labor. The following editorial article, in the issue of the Press of June 10, nearly took the breath away from the local single tax men:

One reason which commends the single tax idea to a great many people is its simplicity. Another is its certainty of collection. Under the present system the taxing of personal property is of necessity a humbug. Such property assumes a thousand shapes. It is intangible, elusive, deceptive, much of it non-valuable, except by an expert, and it is a fruitful source of fraud, cheating and lying, and, therefore, a corrupter of the public morals. The thing to be aimed at is to make every taxpayer, somehow, bear his fair share of the burden of supporting the state and locality where he lives. That this is not done now is notorious. And it is equally certain that, if it were done, the burden of all honest tax-payers would be lightened, as the public ratables would be enormously increased. It is really immaterial to the individual what form taxing takes so long as it is effectual and impartial. One of the chief absurdities of the prevailing system is the taxing of "improvements" by householders. These should never be taxed unless they are a source of increased income to a proprietor. It is preposterous to make a man pay the state a bonus for doing something which costs him money, benefits every person employed in the improvement, adds to the attractiveness of his neighborhood, and increases the value of all adjacent property. It would be more sensible for the state to pay a bonus to a man who would improve the property where he lives, and which does not bring him any revenue, for in so doing he is rendering a public service. A tax upon land alone would avoid all these complications and injustices. Land remains the same no matter what "improvements" it holds, and is, in fact, in all financial transactions concerning the property—with the exception of taxing—regarded as the basis of security. And there is another absurdity in the present tax system which is tending to make many thoughtful people favor the "single land tax," and that is the comparative exemption which a landowner who does not choose to put buildings on his land enjoys. The tendency of this is to encourage the holding of large tracts of land unimproved, while they increase in selling—not, mark you, in taxing value. If land was regarded as the element of chief value for taxing purposes, and its "improvements" were not taxed the moment they were put upon it, it is clear that there would be many more houses erected than there now are, to the benefit of the building trades and those having to rent dwellings. But we are going farther afield than we intended on this subject. Our idea was simply to refer to the evils that attend the attempts to tax personal property, and to point out the fact that there is a rapidly-growing sentiment against it, outside of those who number themselves with the followers of Henry George. There has been a movement started in New York in favor of making real estate the main basis of taxation, which has among its leaders such large capitalists and property owners as ex-Mayor Ely, F. B. Thurber, William Steinway and other prominent citizens, whose interests are considerably involved in any change of the method of taxation. The opinion of these gentlemen is that "mortgages and capital engaged in production or trade should be exempt from taxation, because taxes on such capital tend to drive it away, to put a premium on dishonesty and to discourage industry. Real estate should bear the main burden of taxation, because such taxes can be most easily, cheaply and certainly collected." This is one of the signs of the times that should not be ignored. If the actual wealth of Paterson could be reached and taxed to-day, we should not be worried about making municipal ends meet, and everybody who does not try to evade a just share of taxation would have smaller taxes to pay. But the "personal property" is simply assessed by guess work. No other result is possible so long as that class of property enters into the tax levy at all.

"To Tax Effort Adds to Effort."

(From the Standard.)

This, so far as we know, is an entirely new phrase which aptly describes the effect of levying taxes on the products of industry. It occurs in the leading editorial article in the Toledo Sunday Journal, which is a remarkably clear presentation of the single tax issue. The Journal says that the interest in the subject is so general that a statement of the objects and probable effects of the single tax is desirable. It therefore says:

At the onset it should be stated that it is not proposed to levy a tax on land, but on land values; a radically different thing. To tax land equally as regards area, would not tend to equally distribute the burden of taxation, for in that event the arid acres of the alkali plains would be taxed equally with the most valuable spot in the heart of New York, where the land could be covered with a layer of twenty-dollar gold pieces and still surpass the gold in value.

Two propositions are laid down in evolving this theory, each of which appeals to the thinking mind as just and fair; the first, that there is not now absolute private ownership of land, the government, i. e., the people, holding title for its use, as witness the law of eminent domain, which permits the government to take, or to delegate the power to take for public use, and benefit, the land assumed to be owned by any man, as in the case of railroads, highways, public works and the like. The second, the fact that land was always here, and will still be here when we have all passed on, and that it is always at hand for purposes of equable taxation.

It will be readily admitted that to tax effort adds to effort. The tax on a pair of shoes adds to the cost of the shoes; makes them more difficult to obtain, and lessens the use of shoes in exact proportion to such added cost. Thus, if shoes cost two dollars per pair, many can wear them who would be unable to do so if the cost were ten dollars per pair. This is true in all things where effort is required. The tax levied in the case of Col. Smead, to which reference was made in these columns some weeks since, adds just so much to the cost of each furnace he erects, or lessens the wage which he pays to his laborers. Any tax on labor, or the product of labor, thus adds to the cost of that which such labor produces, while the tax on the value of land adds nothing to the land, nor takes aught from it. There will be precisely as much land as now, whether it is taxed on its value one or one hundred per cent.

The fairness of taxing the value of land appears plain. Land, remote from population, has little, if any, value. The dense forest may contain that which will, when population has increased, become of value, but if so, it becomes valuable solely because of population, and in no sense as the result of individual effort. The corner of Summit and Madison would be worth no more than the intersection of two roads or streets in the remote suburbs, except for the population centered in Toledo. Every added family, every new house constructed, every building erected or street paved, adds to the general value of land within the city's borders. When there were five thousand people in Toledo, land here was worth proportionately less than when there were fifty thousand. Similarly, when we reached a hundred thousand population, the value of the land increased proportionately, and will again increase when we shall have reached a quarter, or half a million of souls. Admitting this simple proposition, and it appears idle to deny it, it follows that it is the people who give whatever value land may attain. When Toledo was a smaller city than now, say when she had but a tenth of her present population, suppose two men purchased adjacent lots of equal size and equally well situated. One owner builds on his lot a home. He proceeds to beautify it, to adorn it with trees and shrubs, to lay out a flower garden, to drain it, and in all manner to add to its value as a home. During all the years, as they pass, he is taxed on the improvements, and compelled to pay a tax or, more properly, a fine, for his energy. His neighbor permits his lot to lie fallow, the prey of thistles and weeds; the snow covering the walk in front in winter and the entire plat an eyesore and a public nuisance. But the fact that the other has builded on his lot attracts others again, and presently the entire surroundings are occupied with homes and adjacent land has become more valuable. In this rise in value the owner who fails to improve his property shares equally with his more enterprising neighbor, and if one were to-day to undertake to purchase this vacant lot it would speedily be ascertained that the original price had largely increased. Not that the owner had bestowed a moment's labor or developed a single line of beauty, but solely because others have worked. The value of land is solely dependent on the concentration of population. Drive all the present population out of Toledo, of Ohio, and one acre is substantially as valuable as another. Aside from arable land, all land is actually of the same value without population.

Granting thus that it is the people who give the value to land, it follows that the people should participate in such value. Is it not clear that did not the present system obtain, there are thousands who are now compelled to live in the suburbs of the city, consuming much valuable time in passing to and from their work to their homes, who would find a habitation on the vacant lots that line our streets? That many would own homes who now suffer unjust taxation in behalf of their landlords? That every man who holds land for a "rise in value" is dependent on the efforts of others for such value, and that he obtains that which belongs to the public who brought about such condition of affairs as produced the value? And this same doctrine holds as good for the farmer as for the rich landholder of a populous city. It is the value, not the acreage, that is to be taxed, and the man who has a farm which is poorly productive will pay less proportionately than the one whose farm teems with vigorous crops.

Government is non-producing. Government is always a consumer. Government must be sustained, and in order to sustain government we must all contribute our share. But this contribution should rest on all alike. Our present system of taxation is unfair and unjust. To tax effort is wrong. To levy a personal tax is to impede effort. What we make, produce, is the result of effort. Taxing effort is like applying the brake to a loaded wagon, being drawn up hill. We thus impede effort, already supporting the burden of production. To levy a tax on the value of land would prevent non-resident holding of land in the centers of population. But others would improve for themselves where present owners simply hold for gain. The land would all be occupied to the best advantage. That is, the best farms, the most desirable residence lots, the most advantageously situated business lots, would be occupied. Where now are vacant lots on Madison, on Jefferson, on Adams streets, throughout the heart of the city would spring up business blocks and homes. The sum of money necessary to conduct the affairs of the government would be forthcoming; there would be a period put to the holding of land for pure gain at other's expense, and effort would be relieved from an unfair burden.

WITH all our progress in the arts which produce wealth, we have made no progress in securing its equitable distribution.

BURNED TO DEATH.

Five Members of a Chicago Family Perish in Flames.

A Four-Story Tenement Burned—John Schalk His Wife and Three Children Are Smothered—Narrow Escape of Other Occupants.

A FAMILY'S FATE.

CHICAGO, Sept. 19. A fire at Nos. 549 and 551 Sedgwick street at 1 o'clock a. m. caused the death of six persons, all of whom were smothered in their beds by the dense smoke that filled the burning structure. The fire ran its course in less than an hour, but the fatalities resulting exceed by far the list of victims by any fire in Chicago this year. Those who lost their lives were: John Schalk, aged 45; Mrs. Schalk, aged 42; four Schalk children, two boys and two girls, aged 8, 12, 15 and 17 years respectively.

The fire originated in the rear of the first floor, which was occupied by William Keafitz as a bakery. It is thought to have caught from one of the bake ovens. It spread to a shed in the rear in which was a quantity of hay and straw. From this it ran up the rear stairway and into the sleeping rooms of the people on the second and third floors. The front rooms on the second floor were occupied by John Rondo, his wife and two children, all of whom escaped without injury. The rear was occupied by Mr. Keafitz, the owner of the bakery, and two bakers, Rugenstein and Rosefeld. The Schalk and Burns families occupied the rear of the third floor.

The other inmates of the building barely escaped with their lives. None of them had time to look after their money and jewelry and were able only to seize a few articles of clothing. One of Mr. Burns' roomers got his clothing, but lost all of it except a pair of shoes before he reached the street. The homeless people found shelter in the homes of neighbors.

The loss on the building is not over $2,000 and on stock and furniture not over $1,000; fully covered by insurance as to building and stock, but a total loss on furniture.

CHICAGO, Sept. 21.—In the death of 18-year-old Cynthia Schalk at the German hospital early Saturday morning another victim was added to the Sedgwick street fire, making the entire extinction of the Schalk family of six members.

A SLEEPING BEAUTY.

Miss May White, of Stockbridge, Mich., Has Slumbered for Ninety-Three Days.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mich., Sept. 19.—It has been ninety-three days now since May White fell asleep. During this time she has not awakened except when aroused to take nourishment. Dr. Brown, who is devoting much time to the case, has decided that her singular ailment is uræmic absorption, which, in his opinion, is curable. The girl still sleeps about as usual, and has fallen away from 140 to 90 pounds. A remarkable fact is that if any one but the doctor touches the patient she strikes out with her hands as if fighting. The doctor awakens her three times a day to administer nourishment.

In Egan's Defense.

WASHINGTON, Sept 19.—Admiral McCann publishes a defense of Minister Egan, and says he joined with the representatives of other governments in warning Balmaceda not to deal with congressionalists as he proposed. Minister Egan helped get Monti and his associates safely out of the country. All his actions were upright and wise. His assertion that Balmaceda was too strong to be overthrown was a private unofficial remark and Admiral McCann blames himself for allowing it to become public.

Horror in a Mine.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 21.—An explosion took place at the Farchies-la-Manch colliery near Charleroi, province of Hainaut. Eighteen bodies have already been recovered from the pit, and many workmen are missing. The latest reports from the scene of the explosion place the number of dead at twenty-nine. There are also eleven workmen severely injured.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Sept. 19.—The customs authorities make the sensational announcement that since the Chinese restriction act was passed in 1882, Chinese to the number of 57,000 have arrived at the port of San Francisco, and during the same period 92,000 departed for China. This is a surprise to anti-Chinese agitators.

Killed by a Boiler Explosion.

CHARDON, O., Sept. 19.—Word has been received here of a terrible explosion in Van Sandt's jelly factory at Monteville, 10 miles from here, by which three men were instantly killed, and it is thought two little girls, who were playing in a buggy in front of the place, were also fatally injured.

Made a Bold Leap.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Sept. 19.—Lincoln Person, a Pennsylvania convict on his way to the Eastern penitentiary in charge of a deputy sheriff, picked his handcuffs with a toothpick and jumped from a Pennsylvania railroad train running 40 miles an hour Friday. He made good his escape.

Boston's Birthday.

BOSTON, Sept. 18.—This city yesterday celebrated its 261st anniversary as a town and 69th anniversary as a city. The city's population is about 450,000, the legal voters number 90,000 and the valuation is over $800,000,000.

Broke a Bicycle Record.

PEORIA, Ill., Sept. 19.—W. F. Murphy, of the New York Athletic club, broke a world's record at the tournament here Friday, by making 2 miles on a safety in 4:55 3-5, the former record being 5:11 1-5.

Sentenced to Death.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 18.—A Memphis special to the Post says the motion for a new trial in the H. Clay King murder case has been overruled. King was then sentenced to be hanged on November 6.

CHEATING IN HORSE BLANKETS
Nearly every pattern of 5/A Horse Blanket is imitated in color and style. In most cases the imitation looks just as good as the genuine, but it hasn't the warp threads, and so lacks strength, and while it sells for only a little less than the genuine it isn't worth one-half as much. The fact that 5/A Horse Blankets are copied is strong evidence that they are THE STANDARD, and every buyer should see that the 5/A trade mark is sewed on the inside of the Blanket.

WHAT I SAW IN POMPEII.

A Sketch of the City, and How it was Destroyed.

Before describing a visit to Pompeii it will be well to give a brief description of the city and how it was destroyed.

Pompeii was an old commercial Greek city, founded between 400 and 500 years before the birth of Christ; it was finally conquered by the Romans. It was situated at the base of Mount Vesuvius, with its front resting on the Mediterranean sea. Pompeii, before its destruction, contained a population of from twenty-five to thirty thousand inhabitants. Its streets were laid out at right angles, and were from fourteen to twenty-four feet wide. They were paved with square blocks of stone, with stepping stones at the corners, and at the corners of many of the streets were located fountains. The city was surrounded by a wall, one and a half miles around, in which there were eight gates. Pompeii had an abundant water supply, and in this respect it differed from Tecumseh. The fashionable people of Rome came here to enjoy the sea air and to spend their money. The city was both wealthy and wicked; there is abundant evidence to prove this statement.

In A. D. 63 there was an earthquake which injured some of the public and private buildings of the city. It was on the 24th day of August, A. D. 79, that the first eruption of Mount Vesevius look place. No one previous to this date entertained the least suspicion of the volcanic nature of Vesuvius. No one dreamed of its being a slumbering volcano. On the summit of the mountain, 4,000 feet above the sea, grew the vine and the olive. On every side of Vesuvius at that time, as in the present day, were situated beautiful villas, many of them owned and occupied by wealthy citizens of Rome. There was not the least suspicion of danger; yet there were ominous signs some months before its eruption. It was reported that the water in the river which ran through the city had mysteriously boiled; a few old springs disappeared and new ones made their appearance, emitting a very strong sulphurous odor; Deep down in caves rumbling noises had been heard, and in several places fire and smoke had been seen pouring out of crevices of the earth.

It was a very pleasant afternoon and everybody was seeking pleasure in the gay city of Pompeii. Many citizens were in the theatre witnessing the plays, others were in the amphitheatre witnessing the gladiatorial combats. Suddenly a shock was felt, fire and smoke belched forth from Mount Vesevius. Clouds composed of dust and ashes hid the sun from view; an appalling darkness soon spread over the ill-fated city. The people fled from the theatre and other places of amusement. The miser lost his life in attempting to secure his bag of gold; eighteen hundred years afterwards it was found near his skeleton fingers. The servant girl lost her life while attempting to secure her employer's jewels, who already had fled from the house which contained her treasures. The greater portion of the inhabitants escaped from the doomed city. From two to three thousand persons were buried in the ruins. Ashes and lava covered the city to the depth of eighteen to twenty feet, and it remained covered with lava for seventeen hundred years.

During the past hundred years excavations have been made; the lava and debris of centuries have been in a great measure removed, leaving on exhibition the most interesting ruined city in the world.

It was a hot summer's day, on the 16th of August, that we boarded a train at Naples, which conveyed us to the ruins of Pompeii. The railroad runs along the beautiful bay of Naples; on the opposite side it hugs the base of Vesuvius. The mountain was in a state of eruption and from its huge furnace issued large quantities of smoke, lava and cinders. As we approached Pompeii the lava could be seen flowing in a stream down the side of the mountain, but not in such quantities as to do any mischief. An hour's ride brought us to the station, situated within a few rods of the ruined city. We stopped at the hotel Diomede (named after one of the first citizens of Pompeii), located just outside the walls, and as it was 12 o'clock we partook of a lunch before visiting the ruins.

We paid an admission fee of two francs (40 cents) and passed in with our guide. The guide directed our attention to a few petrified bodies, enclosed in glass cases, that were once citizens of Pompeii. The excavations have left a wall completely around the ruins. We passed through street after street, which were once bustling with life, but now nothing could be heard except our own footsteps. The streets are perfectly clean and at the corners are deep cuts worn in the block stones by the wheels of chariots which were driven over these streets two thousand years ago. There is not a building in Pompeii with the walls of the second story remaining, but the walls of the first story are preserved; yet there are a few that are destroyed to their foundation. The houses are all built of brick, and Roman brick are noted for their durability. The guide directed us to the old Amphitheatre, which held 20,000 people. Very little of it is left, but enough to give a good idea of the size of the building; the floor and a few rows of seats are all that remains. From the Amphitheatre we proceed along the silent streets, midst ruined walls, until we come to the Forum, which was nearly destroyed by the lava. We visited the Public Baths and observed the lead pipes which conveyed the water to this bathing establishment; also the old furnaces for heating water, which were very extensive. Everything about here indicates that the Pompeians knew and appreciated the value of cleanliness. We visited the Town Hall and the Temple of Augustus, both badly out of repair. We entered the Temple of Jupiter and the Temple of Venus, but we did not feel disposed to worship in either place. We visited the Soap Shop, where the large iron kettles remain since the day when the soap man left in a hurry, or was enveloped in lava. We visited the House of Faun, on Fortune street; the Barber Shop, the oldest of the kind in the world, where the tonsorial artist left on the same day with his customers; the House of the Surgeon, from which many surgical instruments were taken, such as knives, probes, needles, speculums, and other instruments, so highly finished that the surgeon of the present day would not hesitate to use them. We visited the theatre in which the people were amusing themselves on the terrible 24th of August, and the House of the Wild Boar, where travelers were lodged and fed long before the Christian era. We traversed many of the principal streets of this resurrected city, and saw on every side of us the solid and substantial architecture of two thousand years ago.

Before going to Pompeii we visited the museum at Naples, where is kept on exhibition almost everything which has been taken from these ruins. Here we saw jewelry which had been worn by the fair lades of Pompeii; scales for weighing; cooking utensils of all kinds, vases of every shape and size; dice, some of which were loaded, showing that the habit of cheating is not altogether modern; these and many other articles too numerous to mention were taken from the ruins.

We derived a great deal of satisfaction in visiting Pompeii. There were no beggars to annoy the visitor; no loafers about; no one selling curiosities; no one to attract attention, or to divert the mind from the magnificent ruins on every side.

J. F. JENKINS.

OBITUARY.

Died, on Saturday, the 19th, at her home in Tecumseh, of an organic disease of the heart, Mrs. Harriet Emeline Spofford, aged 78 years, one of our earliest and most widely known and respected inhabitants. Mrs. Spofford was earlier and better known, perhaps, as Mrs. Moses Wright. Her maiden name was Harriet Emeline Royce; her birthplace was Lyme, Conn. In her girlhood days she came to Tecumseh in the year 1834 or '35, in company with her brother-in-law, Mr. J. E. Hall. Here she made the acquaintance of her future husband, Mr. Moses Wright, to whom she was married at her old home in Connecticut, June 3, 1840. Returning to Tecumseh as Mrs. Moses Wright, her life, with but a short interval, was passed here under the same roof where she lately lived, and died on Saturday last. Mr. Wright died March 7th, 1879, a man well-known and remembered still in this community as an honest, capable business man, and an honored citizen. Six children were born to them, but only one survived the period of infancy or childhood; that one is our well-known and respected citizen Mr. C. A. Wright, his father's successor in business. Mr. Moses Wright accumulated a comfortable property which was inherited by his wife and son. February 5, 1881, Mrs. Wright was married to Mr. Sumner Flint Spofford, of Des Moines, Iowa, at her home in Tecumseh, and with Mr. Spofford removed to that city for her future home. After a short residence there, however, they concluded to return to Tecumseh as their permanent place of residence. Here Col. Spofford died April 28, 1885. His remains were taken to Des Moines for burial, and Mrs. Spofford, for the second time a widow, returned to Tecumseh after attending her late husband's funeral, where in the same old home she has continued to live until the time of her death.

In both of her husbands this good woman was highly blessed. Mr. Wright and Col. Spofford were alike men worthy of honor and esteem in any community for their noble and manly qualities, and Mrs. Spofford was equally for her gentle and woman y graces. She was indeed a woman of many personal attractions, of strong attachments and of earnest christian piety. She was by baptism and confirmation a member of the Episcopal Church; a devout and faithful communicant, and as becometh a christian ever ready to say and do those things which make for peace and charity. "Blessed are the peace-makers for they shall be called the children of God."

The services for the burial of the dead was read at the house and at the grave to a large concourse of sorrowing friends, by her pastor, the Rev. Mr. Phelps, and her remains committed to the earth beside those of her former husband.

THROWS IT OFF.

There is no disease more disagreeable and uncomfortable than catarrh. It attacks the young and the old, and it is too often allowed to take its course. In such cases it frequently becomes dangerous. The poison extends to the throat and lungs, resulting in complications that are not readily overcome. All forms of catarrh, however, disappear before S. S. S., and that medicine is now recognized as an almost infallible remedy for the disease. It regulates the liver, improves the digestion, and brings about conditions that enable the system to throw off the malady. Catarrh and its attendant aggravations disappear before S. S. S., and so do all other diseases that grow out of a bad liver and impure blood.

Chief—S. W. Bordine.
1st Asst. Chief—B. P. Anderson.
2d Asst. Chief—S. P. Hosmer.
Engineer—H. E. Stout.
Fireman—Geo. Zimmerman.

Mr. Stout has filled the position of engineer for fourteen years and he accepted a re-election with the proviso that a suitable man should be found to fill his place as soon as possible. On motion the Engineer and Fireman were empowered to appoint an assistant fireman. On motion the secretary was instructed to revise the membership list and report at an adjourned meeting in one week and all the present members of the company are requested to be present and report at said meeting.

An adjournment was then taken until to-morrow evening.

Jim Dunnigan does not take much stock in the Ontario Fairs. The Evening News of last Saturday gives his views in this wise:

"I never saw such favoritism in my life," observed James Dunnigan, of Tecumseh, Mich., talking of the Toronto exposition. "Belong to Toronto or Canada, and you were certain of a prize against your opponents. Why, it was shameful the way they worked matters. Imagine my dog, The Duchess, taking second prize in contest with a mangy bitch. People who witnessed the award actually hooted the judges. But I did not kick very much, as I could not afford to bring out these worthy gentlemen and treat them to wine suppers. The Duchess has taken prizes heretofore against the finest imported bitches. She is valued at $5,000, and although I was offered nearly that sum for her recently, I would not accept it. I had only the Duchess and Dr. H. at Toronto. The latter captured three diplomas. In my kennel there are fourteen thoroughbred dogs, and I will back them against any others in the country."

The sixth annual reunion of the Olin family will be held this year at Bennington, Vt., in October. A special excursion train will run over the Mackinaw road on Tuesday Sept 29th. The train will pass Tecumseh at 2-53 p. m that day. It will be a splendid chance to take a trip to Kent Ohio, Buffalo or Binghampton at greatly reduced rates.

Shropshire Ram Lambs for Sale.

I have ten or twelve ram lambs for sale, bred from the finest imported flocks of Shropshires in this country, ewes and sire imported by me from Scotland. All registered in the English flock book. Ewes sheared nine pounds and rams thirteen. Average weight of the ewes after shearing, 182 pounds, and they are only two years old. The stock is the finest that ever crossed the ocean.

WOMAN'S HEALTH AND LIFE

depend more on regularity than on any or all causes combined. An actual or living death is the result of derangement of functions which make woman what she is; immediate relief is the only safeguard against wreck and ruin. In all cases of stoppage, delayed, painful or other irregularities Bradfield's Female Regulator is the only sure remedy. Sold by Jno. J. Orr.

Home Seekers' Low Rate Excursions.

On September 15th and 29th. The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway will sell excursion tickets to the farming regions of the south, southwest west and northwest, at greatly reduced rates. Tickets will be good for thirty days from date of issue. Full information can be had by applying to A. J. Smith, Gen'l Pass. Agent, Cleveland, O., or to your nearest ticket agent.

The Lake Shore is the great through car line between the east and west, and offers superior advantages to travelers.

BRIEF, BUT TO THE POINT.

I had rheumatism all over my body for two years. Doctored with eminent physicians, and spent three months in Reed City Hospital. Four bottles of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup entirely cured me. The greatest medicine in the world. Charles Rowe, Baldwin Mich.

Every word of the above is true. T. Heffernan, Druggist, Baldwin, Mich.

LOST.—I lost my pocket sketch book either in Tecumseh, or on the train going to Manchester. I had the book for over twenty years and it is valuable as a keepsake. It is partly filled with pencil and water color sketches, and I think my name is in it some where. It is a small, black covered book, just small enough to stowd into the outside pocket. I think I must have lost it in Tecumseh. If it is found let me know and I will send the funds to forward it. sept24 LAVERN F. WHEELER.

NOTICE.—All accounts with the old firm of Jones & Hazlett not settled on or before next Tuesday, Sept. 29th, will be placed in the hands of Walter Burridge for collection. Please call and settle, and oblige. Yours, &c., sept24 JONES & HAZLETT.

LOST.—Near James Lowry's Grocery Store Saturday night, Sept. 12, a small parcel of money in bills. There will be a liberal reward paid by returning the same to James Lowry.

TO MY PATRONS.—I am now at my office from 8 A. M. to 5 P. M., ready to attend to calls for Dental work, and if those who owe me on account would please call and settle it would be a great accommodation. aug27 B. F. STEINHOFF.

The State crop report for September opens with this encouraging paragraph: "The returns from threshings indicate that wheat in this State is yielding far better than estimated earlier in the season. On the fifth of this month, from the returns then in, the approximate yield in the State was placed at near twenty-seven million bushels. More complete returns show that the total yield will exceed this amount. It now seems certain that it will reach, and may exceed, twenty-eight million bushels."

A. E. Chase, one of the owners of the Gratiot Journal, was in Tecumseh Saturday and Sunday, the guest of Mrs. Beamish. He was accompained by his wife who is a niece of Mrs. Beamish. The Journal is one of the best papers in that section of the State. We had the pleasure of a friendly call from him on Saturday. Mr. Chase informed us that Ithaca will soon have a fine system of water works, both for fire and domestic use. Last Saturday evening Ithaca was lit up by electricity. The issue of the Grand Rapids Democrat of last Friday contains a sermon to "Business Young Men" by Rev. W. C. Burns. It was an able discourse, reflecting much credit upon the author.

P. W. Adams has moved from Philadelphia back to his farm in Delaware. His three hundred acre farm there requires his personal attention. He still retains the agency for the Page wire fence.

Tecumseh was well represented at the fair yesterday. It was fearfully hot on the grounds but still people took it good naturedly. The exhibition was very good as a whole and in some departments it was especially fine.

We invite attention to the card of the Fayette Normal University which appears elsewhere. This institution has attained a high grade of excellence under the efficient management of Prof. Dodds and is increasing in popularity every year.

The Labadie troupe held the boards at the Opera House last Saturday evening in the old standard play of Ingomar. Mr. Labadie is a favorite with Tecumseh audiences and always takes well. He carried the leading role of Ingomar in his usual happy manner and Hattie Rowell, as Parthenia, carried her part to perfection. Their support was much above the average, and the entire play was well presented.

Mrs. Sumner F. Spofford, who has been in feeble health for some time past, departed this life on Saturday last. The obsequies were held at her residence last Tuesday afternoon. Rev. J. Phelps conducted the services and many mourning friends were present. The deceased was one of our oldest settlers and had filled the place of wife and mother as but few women could. A fitting tribute to her memory appears elsewhere.

Johnnie Brown, son of M. P. Brown, who has been seriously ill for several weeks gave up the struggle on Sunday, and joined his twin sister in the better land. He was a bright boy of more than usual promise, and his untimely death is a severe blow to his parents. The funeral on Tuesday afternoon was conducted by Rev. W. H. Babbitt. The floral offerings were profuse in number and beauty, and the services were deeply affecting. A large class of his school-mates acted as escort to the hearse, bearing beautiful flowers.

Edward Baxter Perry, the well-known blind pianist of Boston, the originator and chief representative of the Pianoforte Lecture Recital, is at present 34 years of age, and is enjoying the full flood-tide of a national prominence and popularity. Both in his personality and his profession, Mr. Perry has been the object of much interest and comment; his peculiar and difficult position having made the tax upon his talents and his exertions doubly strenuous, and his success, therefore, the more pronounced and conspicuous.

"Blykins knows all about horse races." "Why, he never goes to them." "No, it took him longer to learn that part than anything else."

One by one, the flitting shadows,
Come before your waiting eyes—
Now young man, the way is open
For the winning of a prize.
Bid your loudest, and your bravest,
That a treasure may be yours;
He who strives the most, is surest,
And the best of all secures.

At the Shadow Social, W. R. C. rooms, Oct. 2d. 1891.

It is not often that the musician and lecturer are combined in so happy a manner as in the person of Mr. Perry. His concert last night proved him to be not only successful in these two capacities, but poet and composer as well. He needs no indulgence on the score of his blindness; perhaps his art vision is all the more extended because of it, and his playing has certainly all the virility and force that the most exacting could demand. Mr. Perry can be congratulated upon having made a new departure in his concerts, and with unequivocal success. The interest excited by his remarks, so splendidly supplemented by his playing, was evidently most sincere, and found constant expression in hearty applause and many recalls.—Boston Advertiser.

TOOK HIS OWN LIFE.

Balmaceda, Chili's Ex-President, Commits Suicide.

Losing All Hope of Escape from His Enemies He Sends a Bullet Through His Brain — Rejoicing in Chili at His Death.

BALMACEDA A SUICIDE.

VALPARAISO, Sept. 21.—Ex-President Balmaceda, of Chili, shot himself through the temple in his room at the Argentine legation in Santiago at 8:30 o'clock Saturday morning. The story became known here in the afternoon and created the greatest excitement. Every part of the city Saturday evening was brilliantly illuminated and on every hand were heard sounds of rejoicing. It now seems that Balmaceda left Santiago on August 29 last in hope of making his escape from Chili, but seeing that every avenue of retreat was cut off he returned there on September 2 and went direct to the Argentine legation. His intention had been to go on board the vessel Condell, which he expected to find lying in Santiago bay. Upon arriving there, however, he discovered to his chagrin that the vessel had sailed.

Balmaceda left a letter to his mother; also a statement to the press of the United States. As almost the last declarations of a dying man they are of especial importance. He says.

"I acted during all the past eight months with the firm conviction that I was right. I had no one in the army on whom I could place any trust. My generals were false to me. They lied all through the war. Had my orders been obeyed I believe that the battle of Concon would have resulted in a decisive victory against the enemy. My heart all through this trouble has been with Chili. I sought to rescue my country from foreign domination. I strove to make her the first republic in America. My enemies say that I was cruel. Circumstances compelled me to sanction certain acts, but many bad deeds that have been attributed to my orders were never known by me until they had been committed.

"Until the final battle of Placilla I had strong hopes of triumphing over my foes. Victory was assured by my generals, Alcerecca, Barbosa and Viel. They all lied. I now know those who pretended friendship for me only because of the money that was to be gotten out of me. All the money that I have in my possession is $2,500. My wife gave it to me on the night of August 28.

"Your minister, Patrick Egan, many times offered me good advice. He urged me to make peace with those opposed to me and to retire from Chili. I did not heed his wise advice, for I thought he was under the influence of the junta's orders, who were then refugees in the American legation. All through the trouble my closest advisers were always opposed to any overtures for peace."

Another letter was found addressed to Senor Urriburia. In it Balmaceda says:

"When I saw the persecution directed against me by persons who had supported my administration I came to the conclusion that the only way to put an end to this persecution was to take my life, as I was the responsible one. Adois, my good friend. Give my farewell to my wife and children."

Since the fall of Valparaiso and the surrender of Santiago there has been many rumors about the movements of Balmaceda. It was first believed he had escaped from the capital and had made his way to the mountains. Most people thought he had gone through one of the mountain passes and that he would be next heard from in the Argentine Republic. Just before the San Francisco sailed last Monday it became known that Balmaceda had been smuggled on board the warship and would be safely at sea. It was too late to go on board the San Francisco and make personal inquiries. That vessel was just getting ready to weigh anchor. But the story of Balmaceda's alleged disguise as a drunken sailor in a uniform said to have been furnished by Admiral Brown was so circumstantial and seemed so plausible that it could hardly be doubted. Unfortunately for the now dead ex-president he did not escape on board the San Francisco, but despairing of his ability to get away, and fearing the vengeance of his enemies, took his own life.

ALLERTON IS KING

He Lowers the Stallion Record Three-Quarters of a Second, to 2:09 1-4.

INDEPENDENCE, Ia., Sept. 21.—The mark for Nelson to shoot at was placed three-quarters of a second lower by Allerton at 6:30 Saturday evening. Nelson's mile in 2:10 at Grand Rapids Friday placed them on even terms, but those who saw the king trot to the first quarter in 0:32¾, to the half in 1:05¼, to the three-quarters in 1:37¼ and the mile in 2:09¼ have full faith in its dropping still further from the Maine horse's grasp. Williams says that he will go in 2:07 this year.

HASTINGS, Minn., Sept. 18.—Fire broke out in the weighing house of Smith & Thompson at noon. The building with their warehouse adjoining and Strong & Miller's railroad elevator, all filled with grain, were burned and the electric light works were badly damaged. The loss on buildings and grain will exceed $100,000; partially insured.

Tabor's Gold Mine.

DENVER, Col., Sept. 18.—Ex-Senator Tabor has received an order from the supreme court of Mexico giving him possession of the Santa Ediwige gold mine, over which he has had three years' litigation. The mine is located at Jesus Maria, and has produced already from $10,000,000 to $[illegible],000 of gold. The ore assays $20 [illegible] the ton and is still good for millions.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—The president has appointed Francis Hendricks to be collector of customs at New York.

CHINAMEN MAY COME, NOW.

The Exclusion Act Practically Nullified by Judge Swan's Decision.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Acting Secretary Spaulding has directed the collector at Detroit, Mich., to return to Canada the Chinaman whom United States District Attorney Judge Swan on Tuesday decided to have come from Canada. This decision overturns the practice of the department and the opinion of the attorney general on the meaning of the phrase "whence he came." The law of 1888 provides that when a Chinaman is found unlawfully in the United States he shall be tried before a commissioner, and if held he can appeal to the United States district court. The decision of the United States district judge is final as to the government, no appeal under the law of 1888 being permissible. The decision of Judge Swan applies only to the district over which he presides, and other district judges may agree with the opinion of the attorney general and the treasury department in their construction of the meaning of the phrase "whence he came," but the eastern district of Michigan will now become a loophole through which Chinamen from Canada and from British Columbia may enter the United States. The decision practically nullifies the Chinese exclusion act, and in the opinion of Acting Secretary Spaulding cannot but cause the treasury department much embarrassment in administering the law excluding Chinese.

DEATH OF W. L. SCOTT.

The Ex-Congressman Passes Away at Newport, R. I.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 21.—Ex-Congressman William L. Scott, of Erie, Pa., died in this city at midnight Saturday. His remains have been forwarded to Erie for interment. Mr. Scott's trouble was hereditary, as his father died of consumption of the bowels. The illness which terminated in his death became manifest about twenty years ago, and its stubborn nature was greatly aggravated by Mr. Scott's great mental activity and his abnormal appetite at times.

Mr. Scott was born in Washington July 2, 1828. At the age of 12 he was made a page in the house of representatives and held this position from 1840 to 1846. In 1848 he settled in Erie, Pa., where he was successful in business and rapidly acquired a fortune which is estimated to be $20,000,000. He was a member of the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth congresses.

WOE IN SPAIN.

Latest News of the Terrible Work Done by the Floods.

MADRID, Sept. 18.—The number of people who perished in the floods in the province of Toledo is now placed at 2,300 and the number of lives lost in other localities at 500. In addition many were injured. The destruction of grape, olive and maize crops in the flooded districts is in itself a serious evil, coming as it does in addition to bad harvests in most of the provinces and their complete failure in Aragon and a portion of Catalonia, where the distress in the rural districts is intense. It is estimated that the total loss from the floods, including the destruction of crops, damage to property, the railways' loss of traffic, etc., will amount to little short of £1,000,000.

A MOTHER'S AWFUL DEED.

A Sioux Falls (S. D.) Woman Drowns Her Two Children and Herself.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Sept. 21.—Saturday afternoon workmen on the railroad saw a woman walk to the Great Northern bridge, throw a boy 8 years old into the river, hurl an 18-months-old baby after him and plunge into the water herself. Boats reached the scene and dragged the three ashore, but too late to save the mother and babe. The woman is the wife of a contractor named Neprosich, and had become crazed on account of her husband's business reverses.

Turkey's Flag Is First.

CHICAGO, Sept. 21.—The first flag of a foreign nation thus far raised on the world's fair grounds was floated to the breeze Sunday with interesting ceremonies. It was the flag of Turkey, the oldest government of Europe, and was raised on the site on the Midway plaisance, which has been given to the "Street in Constantinople" exhibit.

BLUE LICK, Ind., Sept. 21.—For many years Robert James, aged 70, of this place, has been blind and had given up all hopes of ever regaining his sight. Recently his wife was taken dangerously ill and in his distress he wept incessantly. Suddenly his sight came back to him and he now sees as well as he ever did.

The Treasurer a Defaulter.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Sept. 19.—The trustees of the Ulster county savings institution have removed James E. Ostrander from the office of treasurer, finding that he had misappropriated the funds. The amount is variously stated at from $60,000 to $80,000. The misappropriation will not embarrass the bank.

SUMMER HEAT.

The Thermometer Reaches 100 to 106 Degrees—Forest and Prairie Fires Sweep Over Hundreds of Acres.

THE SUN'S RAYS.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—The weather bureau says reports from Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, northern Illinois and northwestern Iowa show the occurrence in those states during the last two days of the highest temperature for the season of which the weather bureau has record.

The clear weather and high temperature in the corn region has been most favorable for the ripening of corn, and it is probable that at the close of this week at least eight-tenths of the corn crop will be safe from injury.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 19.—The intense heat continues, thermometers on Friday registering from 100 to 106 at several Minnesota points. The heat is accompanied by a wind which in places amounts to a gale and prairie fires are reported from a dozen localities.

CHICAGO, Sept. 19.—The highest point reached by the thermometer on Friday was 88 degrees about the middle of the afternoon.

HURON, S. D., Sept. 19.—Intense heat has been experienced here the last five days, being 92 degrees to 95 degrees in the shade. Several cases of prostration are reported from the country. It is almost impossible to keep thrashing gangs in the field, as men are unable to remain in the sun. Many farmers are running two sets of hands working in reliefs of three hours each day and night, the moon furnishing sufficient light to continue the work through the night. Two cases of prostration are likely to prove fatal.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Sept. 19.—At 2:30 Friday afternoon the thermometer registered 98 in the shade. O. Karleton was killed by a sunstroke.

DAVENPORT, Ia., Sept. 19.—Eldridge G. Allen, a well-known citizen, committed suicide by hanging Friday evening. During the afternoon for an hour in the excessive heat he worked on the roof of his house, and it is thought he was overcome by the effects of the sun.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Sept. 19.—The warm weather continues unabated. For several days past the thermometer has reached over 95, and Friday it registered 100 in the shade.

SWEPT BY PRAIRIE FIRES.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 19. Prairie fires are reported from many points in the northwest. Hundreds of acres of Minnesota land in the neighborhood of Willmar and Beardsley were burned over Thursday and Friday. The wind has been so strong as to make it impossible to stay the flames. A great deal of hay in stacks has been destroyed and 3 or 4 miles of the Great Northern railroad track have been burnt and made impassable.

In North Dakota the greatest damage has been done around Lisbon. At least 50,000 bushels of wheat have been destroyed there. The town of Buttzville, depot and elevators were saved after a hard fight. At last reports the fire was still spreading north and east. For miles north of Medina, Stutsman county, the prairies are all on fire and the smoke is so dense that fighters of the flames cannot get near. In Eddy county the fire burned to death four horses hitched to a plow in a field before the animals could be saved; also 150 acres of wheat for the same farmer. Other small losses are reported there.

George W. Johnson and his son, living 60 miles south in Emmons county, were burned to death Thursday while fighting one of the worst prairie fires ever witnessed in this country. The fire swept over the country from Winchester to the Missouri river for 50 miles southeast, destroying a large amount of grain, hay, buildings, etc. An estimate of the damage cannot yet be made.

CUMBERLAND, Wis., Sept. 19.—Forest fires are raging in the country immediately south and in plain sight of the city, and a strong south wind prevails. Several farmhouses and barns, two woodyards near the Omaha track and a large amount of other property have been burned. Men are now fighting the flames, and there is much apprehension in this city. The village of Perley was almost wiped out of existence by fire Thursday.

TOMAH, Wis., Sept. 19.—A most disastrous fire is raging in the cranberry marshes between Valley Junction and Norway Ridge. The fire originated on the Mills marsh from an old forest fire that had been smoldering the last three weeks. Fanned by a brisk gale from the south it spread and was soon beyond control. All the buildings on Taylor's marsh, including warehouses filled with harvested berries, were quickly reduced, the flames continuing in a southeasterly direction, sweeping everything in their path. Berry pickers ran, leaving their tents and accoutrements to the pursuing flames. The railroad track was soon crossed, and still onward swept the fire at a fearful rate. Between twenty-five and thirty square miles of marsh have been consumed, and the fire shows no signs of abatement.

SOUTHAMPTON, Sept. 18.—The Hamburg line steamship, Fuerst Bismarck, from New York, September 10, has arrived here, making the passage in six days, twelve hours, and fifty-eight minutes, breaking the record between Southampton and New York.

He Has Resigned.

With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—

Upon getting the Grand Prize intent;
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—

MOTHER'S KISS.

When downward I tumble and bump my poor head,
Then hop up quite sure I am pretty near dead,
And run to my mamma as quick as a wink,
Ah, how does she cure me! Pray, can you not think?
By kisses so sweet, to be sure!

Again and again, I may wound myself sore,
Then cry out because I have hurt me some more;
No matter how busy or tired she may be,
She always takes time to attend to poor me—
To heal me at once with her kiss.

When I am real good, or when I am real bad,
When I am quite merry, or when I'm quite sad,
When I her sweet patience so often have tried,
She will so lovingly, tenderly chide;
Then kiss me, just kiss me the same.

Ah, kisses like these! can we ever forget
The love they expressed? Nay, with eyelashes wet,
We'll yearn for them even in old, grown-up years,
Our eyes brimming over with hot, blinding tears,
While longing for them all in vain.

Alas, that her heart and her voice are so dumb,
To our yearning and cries, and no mother can come
And ease the keen heartache in our after life,
When we have got hurt in the world's ceaseless strife;
No kisses can heal us like hers!

A BAFFLING MYSTERY.

Strange, Remarkable Case of Mr. Mansfield's Wife.

All was excitement at the Mansfield mansion; its mistress, the beautiful and accomplished wife of David Mansfield, had suddenly and mysteriously disappeared. They were all ready for an evening ride. Mr. Mansfield was already at the carriage, awaiting his wife's coming. She had appeared at the doorway, but stopped, and, telling her husband that she had forgotten her gloves and would return for them, she reentered the house and started upstairs to her room.

This was the last Mr. Mansfield saw of his wife. He waited fifteen or twenty minutes, and then sent a servant to hurry Mrs. Mansfield. The servant returned and reported that the door to the lady's room was locked, and that there had been no response when she knocked.

Frightened, Mr. Mansfield hastened upstairs and tried the door of his wife's room. It was locked, as the servant had said. Mr. Mansfield called his wife's name, but received no reply. He was now thoroughly frightened, and summoning all his strength, he burst the door open. One hasty glance about the room was sufficient.

The room was empty—his wife was gone!

But where, and how, and why?

These were the questions that agitated the mind of the husband, and he could find no answer for any one of them. Still, she might be in the house, Mr. Mansfield thought, and he set the servants to searching for her. High and low, upstairs and down they searched, but no trace of the missing woman could they find.

Then they extended their search to the grounds, with the same results, and Mr. Mansfield was in despair. The disappearance of his wife was so sudden, so unexpected, so mysterious, that he was filled with a kind of nameless, numbing feeling of horror, of fear, of he knew not what.

For hours the search had been kept up, and at last, disheartened, weary, anguish-stricken, the bereaved husband ordered the search discontinued. What to do next he did not know, until it was suggested to him to send for a detective.

Mr. Mansfield caught at the suggestion at once, and telegraphed to the city for a detective. The next train brought one of the best detectives in the city of New York, and he lost no time in setting to work.

Accompanied by Mr. Mansfield, he entered the room of the missing lady, and began an examination of it.

"Is everything just as it was when her absence was discovered?" asked Mr. Ferret, the detective; "has nothing been moved or changed in any way?"

"Nothing," replied Mr. Mansfield. "Everything is just as she left it."

"Then that window was open," asserted the detective, indicating an open window at one side of the room, and Mr. Mansfield nodded assent.

Mr. Ferret crossed the room, and examined the sill and floor beneath the window. Then he looked out. The only possible means of reaching the ground, thirty feet below, was by a lightning rod, which could be reached from the window, and the detective shook his head. It would be a powerful incentive that would induce a woman to descend by means of this rod.

After examining every nook and cranny of the room, the detective sat down and studied the matter from every point of view, as he thought. At last he turned to his companion:

"Mr. Mansfield," he said, "I wish to ask you a question. It is of rather a delicate nature, but I hope you will not be angry. Did you and your wife have any trouble? Do you know any reason why she should wish to get away from you?"

"I do not," was the reply. "My wife and I were on the best terms; we never quarreled in our lives."

The detective looked puzzled. "I don't understand it," he said; "the only theory that I can advance is that she has committed suicide, though if you were on good terms there would be no reason for her doing this."

The detective spent a week searching for a clew, but could find none. A systematic search was made for miles around; advertisements were inserted in all the papers, but it availed nothing. Nothing could be discovered. The disappearance of the woman was as complete and unfathomable a mystery as ever.

Mr. Mansfield grew pale and thin. He had loved his beautiful wife as few men do love, and the uncertainty attending the disappearance of his loved one made his sorrow all the harder to bear. It was worse really than if it would have been had he known his wife was dead. He was unwilling the detective should give up the search, and the week grew into a month.

Two, three, four months the detective kept at it. He exhausted every resource, sifted every semblance of a clew, and finally at the end of five months, refused to work longer.

"It's a waste of my time and your money," he declared, and Mr. Mansfield reluctantly acquiesced in the detective's decision.

"My opinion," said Mr. Ferret, "is that your wife is dead. I think you had better accept that as a fact."

"I will not accept that as true until I know it is true," declared Mr. Mansfield, and, unable to produce proof that his theory was the correct one, the detective said no more, but bade the sorrowing man good-by and returned to the city.

A couple of months later, as he was sitting at home, turning over in his mind different cases that he had been engaged upon, Mr. Ferret's mind reverted to the Mansfield case and he gave a start, as a sudden idea occured to him.

"I have it!" he exclaimed, aloud. "I'll wager I have fathomed the mystery of Mrs. Mansfield's disappearance! Why didn't I think of it before, I wonder? Let's see," and he looked at his watch, "I have just time enough to catch the train. I believe I'll run down and put the matter to the test at once."

Two hours later Mr. Ferret stood in the presence of Mr. Mansfield. The detective was shocked at the change in his late employer. He was aged a score of years, and his hair, lately a beautiful brown, was silvered with gray. He had a hopeless expression of countenance that was pitiful to see, but brightened up a little, at sight of the detective.

"Have you—do you bring me any news?" he asked, eagerly.

"Mr. Mansfield, I wish to ask you a question or two," said the detective. "Do you know anything regarding your wife's ancestors?"

"Only that they were excellent people," quickly. "I never heard aught said against any relative of hers."

"Well, answer me this: Did you ever hear of, or know of any relative of hers being afflicted with insanity?"

This shot struck home. Mr. Mansfield's face paled, and he reeled back against the wall.

"Her uncle," he gasped, "is an occupant of an insane asylum now. My God! Do you think—do you suspect—"

"That your wife was insane when she disappeared so mysteriously? Yes, that is what I think, and now I would advise that the different establishments for the care of the insane, that are distributed throughout the country, be looked through for your wife; she might be found. Mind you, I say might be found; my own opinion is that she is dead."

"We'll begin the search to-morrow!" declared Mr. Mansfield. "Name your price to help me and consider yourself engaged."

The search through the different insane asylums began next day, and in a "private" institution of this kind, nearly a hundred miles from her home, Mrs. Mansfield was found.

She was sane, too, as anybody, but prematurely old, from confinement in such a horrible place; but how happy the two were over their reunion, after being separated for so long.

Mrs. Mansfield's story was soon told. She had been taken with a sudden insane notion that her husband hated her and wished to make away with her. She thought that, instead of going to the opera, her husband was going to take her off somewhere and murder her. With this fear to urge her on, she had returned to her room on that evening, two years before, locked the door, climbed out of the window, descended by the lightning-rod and made her escape. She had wandered away, through the timber and across the country, to the railroad; boarding a train, she rode to a town nearly a hundred miles distant. Here she left the train, and wandered again, until picked up by kind people and sent to the asylum for the insane.

She came back to her right senses a few weeks after entering the asylum, but when she told them she was sane, and gave her name and address, they laughed at her, and never even thought of writing to the address she gave them. So despairing, and almost heartbroken, the poor woman was forced to remain an inmate of a madhouse, a companion of mad men and women. It was terrible, and her joy at regaining her freedom and being restored to her home and the arms of her loving husband, can be better imagined than described.

She never had a second touch of the dread malady, and among all their many friends, there was never one who was a more welcome visitor than the man who, sitting at his home thinking, had figured out the cause of Mrs. Mansfield's mysterious disappearance—Mr. Ferret, the detective.—S. A. D. Cox, in Yankee Blade.

Evening Things Up.

Never was the old proverb illustrated better than in one of our barber shops last week. A customer came in and asked the proprietor if he could be shaved for five cents. The barber told him certainly and proceeded to lather him, then calmly sat down to read the paper. After waiting awhile the man remonstrated and received the information that he was promised a shave for five cents but was not promised when he should be shaved. He capitulated and said he would pay the barber ten cents. The paper was immediately laid aside and the man was shaved. He started to go out the door without paying, and when reminded of his lapse said: "I told you I would pay you ten cents for a shave but I did not say when I would pay." The barber promptly acknowledged the corn.—Brunswick (Me.) Telegraph.

The names of the following little girls were presented. Gertrude Mc Adam from the Catholic society; Katie Hard, Episcopal; Hazel Clark, Congregational; Bessie Corwin, Methodist; Blanche Muir, Baptist. Gertrude Mc-Adam secured the prize. A hat was given to the clergyman receiving the most votes, Rev. Reeves being the fortunate one. The society cleared $50.01 which will be used towards building a belfry. An entertainment will soon be given for the same purpose.

"DON'T CARE TO EAT."

It is with the greatest confidence that Hood's Sarsaparilla is recommended for loss of appetite, indigestion, sick headache and similar troubles. This medicine gently tones the stomach, assists digestion, and makes one "real hungry." Persons in delicate health, after taking Hood's Sarsaparilla a few days, find themselves longing for and eating the ected relish.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

WEALTH OF THE STATE.

The Assessed Value of Property Is More Than a Billion.

The state board of equalization has raised the valuation of property in the state to $1,180,000,000, as against a valuation of $945,450,000 in 1886, an increase in five years of $184,550,000. They Encourage Lawlessness.

Thirty-nine saloonkeepers were fined $40 and cost each in the circuit court at Marquette for keeping saloons open July 4. In imposing the fines, Judge Stone expressed regret that he could not in equity impose a severer penalty, as the real offenders were not before him in his official capacity. Some of the leading citizens of Marquette had guaranteed the saloonists immunity from prosecution, for violating the law regulating the liquor traffic on holidays, on condition that they would subscribe liberally to the celebration fund, thus fostering a spirit of lawlessness.

Milk Without Cows.

A stock company is soon to be formed at Kalamazoo for the purpose of supplying Chicago and that city permanently with milk, and especially during the world's fair. Mr. Parker, of Grand Rapids, has succeeded in making a preparation from corn, a pint of which added to four gallons of water and four gallons of milk makes a mixture impossible to be distinguished from pure milk. It was thought to be nutritious and could be delivered at Chicago at seven cents per gallon. The difference in taste could not be detected.

Cracked the Safe.

Cracksmen shattered the safe of J. S. Stearns, at Stearns' siding, 6 miles west of Baldwin, and secured a little over $1,000 and started south. The bills were fresh and of the new series of tens and twenties. The men were twenty-four hours too late, as the day before was pay day, and over $4,000 was paid out. The men were evidently professionals, and doubtless knew the firm had a large sum in its possession.

Wants $100,000 Damages.

Mrs. Emily T. McDonnell, of Port Huron, has commenced a suit against the Grand Trunk Railway Company for $100,000 damages. On June 30, 1890, Mr. and Mrs. McDonnell were going to Niagara Falls. When near Cape Town the parlor car jumped the track and rolled down an embankment and Mr. McDonnell was killed and his wife internally injured. Workmen were engaged repairing the track at the time.

Short but Newsy Items.

The Tittabawassee Boom Company has rafted over 200,000,000 feet of logs this season, and has 60,000,000 to 75,000,000 yet to come out.

Col. F. M. H. Holloway, of Hillsdale, died at the age of 76. He was the democratic nominee for governor of Michigan in 1888.

R. S. McKee, city treasurer of Charlotte and member of the hardware firm of Wyman & McKee, died of heart disease after an illness of five days.

Capt. Frederick S. Dodge, of Detroit, a retired army officer, committed suicide by shooting himself through the brain. He was 51 years old and had been deranged in mind for some years.

The schooner C. H. Burton, ore laden, was beached near Duncan City, having sprung a leak during heavy weather.

Alexander Neveau, living in the First ward of Bay City, shot and killed his wife and then fatally shot himself. Neveau was 35 years of age and his wife but 17. They were married July 15 last, but have never lived happily together. Jealousy was given as the motive of the crime.

The body of Tom Ellison, of Onekama, was found upon the beach near Frankfort. A small boat came ashore previous to finding, and it was supposed to have been Ellison's.

A heavy frost at East Tawas did great damage to vines, and potatoes would not be half a crop. Many fields of oats would not pay for harvesting. The hay crop was the lightest for years.

The latest returns from thrashers received by the secretary of state indicates that Michigan's total wheat crop will exceed 28,000,000 bushels, instead of less than 27,000,000 bushels, as estimated two weeks ago.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Miss Matilda McCutcheon visited at Tecumseh over Sunday.

Wm. Underwood is again able to be on the street, after a few weeks' illness.

"The Fireman" October 9th and 10th. Don't forget it. See cast of characters and full particulars below.

Mrs. C. N. Lewis, of Rochester, New York, and Mrs. Elliott Acers and son, from Ohio, are visiting at W. Lenardson's this week.

Three wheels from here were at the fair Thursday. They report a good time and say they made the run home in just two hours.

The Maccabees social last Saturday night was a success in every particular. The tent extends a cordial invitation to all eligible persons to come and be a B.

D. R. Wiggins, while at work on O. B. Lenardson's new house, was struck in the knee by a falling board, and now you may see Dick limping around with a crutch.

Osgood Bros. wish to inform their patrons that they do grinding in their feed mill every Friday till after sorghum making, then will run as usual every day.

Clay Jones, of Auburn, Ind., is now night operator for the Wabash during the absence of Mr. J. D. Smith, who was obliged to return to his home at Elmore, Ohio, on account of his ill-health.

The S. of V. dance given at the Exelby Opera House last Friday night was well attended, notwithstanding it was fair week. There were 63 numbers sold and all report a pleasant, quiet time.

A number of our young men attended the Adrian fair last Thursday and report says their legs became so tangled they could hardly walk straight. The sun was so very hot that it must have dazzled their eyes.

Dogs have been after sheep again, killing about $100 worth for farmers Curtiss and Gibson, who live west of town. If all the dogs were turned into bologna we think our wool producing farmers could have more wool in their clothes, and they would avoid the unpleasant wrangling about whose dog killed the sheep. A dog is like an Indian; good when he's dead.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society held their annual meeting at the church last week, and elected for President Mrs. Geo. L. Oliver; secretary, Miss Serene Zeluff; treasurer, Mrs. W. J. Clark. With this strong force of official backbone the community may look for a new walk to the church. Winter is approaching, so what you do, ladies, must be done at once. A good walk will insure a good congregation every Sabbath. Let us have the walk. Unless you do your pastor will have to discourse to empty pews all winter.

"The Fireman" will be played at the Exelby Opera House Friday and Saturday evenings, Oct. 9th and 10th, with the following strong cast of characters:

Frederic Jerome, the Fireman—M. L. Gillen.
Mr. Wealthy, a retired merchant—H. Cranshaw.
Ananias Stubbs, alias Captain Heathcoat—E. W. Lenardson.
Cincinnatus Blubber, a colored gemman—A. J. Lee.
Rotary Press, a Yankee in search of history, fun and matrimony—Ernest Dubois.
Morrington—A lawyer and counterfeiter—Cassius Zeluff.
Edward Truman and William Trust, firemen—F. Zeluff and Lavern Smith.
Cabman—Wm. Taylor.
Officer—Wm. Larrabee.
John Smith, Jr.—Master Bertie Gillen.
Alice Hawthorne, the beggar girl, afterwards the heiress—Miss Ella Exelby.
Mrs. Waddletongue, one of the codfish aristocracy—Miss Ella Bailey.
Mrs. Jerome, mother to Frederic—Miss Matilda McCutcheon.
Lucretia, a true daughter of America—Miss Luella Haynes.
Norah, an Irish servant girl—Miss Cassidy.
Dinah, a negro wench—Miss Cooper.
Mrs. Hawthorne—Mrs. Madden.

Note.—The noble Fireman is here represented in his true character—an honest, heroic and charitable man, fearless of danger when duty calls, and whose motto is, "Impelled by emulation, and actuated by benevolence."

Let everyone come and see this wonderful play, as a special effort is being made to make it one of the grandest ever put on the boards by the Club. Special new scenery. Admission, 15 cents; children, 10 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents.

A most cultured and distinguished audience, and one large enough to fill the Grand Opera House, did honor yesterday to Edward B. Perry, as famous a pianist as America has so far produced. He introduced a novel idea, and a splendid one, when prior to playing each number, he explained or interpreted in words the work in question. It added largely to the intelligent appreciation of the people. Mr. Perry is a charming player, poetic in the extreme in passages of tender emotion, and in movements of fancy, light and airy. His brilliancy of execution, highly developed technique and accuracy astonished and delighted the audience, who sat entranced during the exhibition of his skill at the piano.—St. Paul Globe.

DISCOVERED BY THE PEOPLE.

Many of the inventors and vendors of the various nostrums that are offered to the public to-day, only to disappear and be succeeded by something else tomorrow, make the most sweeping and absurd claims for them. They are heralded as cure-alls, and it is no wonder that the public has become suspicious. The most remarkable fact in the history of S. S. S. (for, unlike most other proprietary medicines, it has a history) is this: That a great many of its virtues have been discovered by the people themselves. It has never been advertised as a specific for skin cancer, and yet there are many testimonials going to show that S. S. S. will cure that dread disease. These testimonials are of such a character that there is no "going behind the returns."

After all, the best way to know the real merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla, is to try it yourself. Be sure to get Hood's.

Girls who allow sparking in their homes should use smokeless powder so that the engagement may not be discovered.

A Grand Success.

Pin-a-f, one of the first of the light operas written by Gilbert & Sullivan and played all over the country thousands of nights, has still its attractions and becomes more popular and interesting when the characters are taken by people whom we know. This was well illustrated last Tuesday evening when Underwood's opera house was crowded with one of the finest audiences ever seen in the city. When the curtain went up the actors seemed to realize that all of their "sisters, cousins and aunts" were watching them and therefore put forth their best efforts, which were applauded. Each and every one of the participants rendered the part assigned them in a manner that surprised their most intimate friends and they have since received many compliments and congratulations.

Mr. and Mrs. Gruendler, under whose direction the opera was presented, gave the best of satisfaction and made many friends during their short stay in Hillsdale. The former is a first class manager and a musician ranking among the best. The fact that but ten rehearsals were held previous to the presentation, speaks well both for his ability as a manager and the actors. Mrs. Cora Ferris Gruendler, as Little Buttercup, led the choruses and rendered her difficult part with great vivacity. Her presence on the stage encouraged the others and gave them more confidence. J. Rob Sutton surprised everyone with his singing and acting and a better Sir Joseph Porter we are safe to say never appeared in an amateur company. Capt. Corcoran had considerable to do and Mr. C. S. Wolcott made an excellent officer. Mr. Fred Thatcher made a handsome Ralph Rackstraw and sang his solos and duets with good effect. The difficult part of Dick Deadeye, the obnoxious sailor, was ably taken by Col. O. A. Japes, whose make up was in good keeping with the character. Jas. Davis as Bill Bobstay, sang well and Levi Smith took the part of Rob Becket, his mate, in good form.

Little Lillie Pridgeon, as midshipmite, captured the audience with her ease and grace in dancing the hornpipe. She responded to a hearty encore by dancing the Highland Fling. Miss Carrie Osgood was in good voice and her rendition of Josephine, the captain's daughter, was very good indeed. Her solos and duets were loudly applauded. Hebe, the constant attendant of Sir Joseph Porter, was the part nicely taken by Mrs. M. Lancaster.

The chorus was a strong one and the sisters, cousins, aunts, sailors and marines performed their parts well.

Shepp's Photographs of the World.

This magnificent publication of Photographs, the result of an enormous amount of money expended by Messrs. Shepp, energy enlisted, fatigues, obstacles and difficulties encountered, covering all the interesting sights of the world as they exist to-day, is a crowning success of the book-publishing business.

Its great scope, covering everything of any interest through Great Britain, from the Blarney Castle to the Giant's Causeway in Ireland, and from the Hills of Scotland to the South Coast of England; through Europe, from Gibraltar and Italy in the South to Hammerfest in Norway—the most northern town in the world—and to Constantinople and the Russian Mines in Siberia in the far East.

Through Africa, from the Suez Canal, Egypt and the Nile in the East to Cape of Good Hope in the South and Life among the Natives in the interior, West and North; through Asia and the Orient, from the Holy Land, Arabia and Persia in the West to India, China, Japan, Australia and the Islands of the Pacific in the South and East.

Through Spanish South America, from Terra del Fuego to Panama; through the Central American States and Mexico—land of the Aztecs; through Alaska, Greenland, British North America and Canada.

Through the United States, from the Golden Gate in the West to the Rocky Coast of New England in the East, and from the Lake Cities in the North to the Cotton States in the South, forming one of the finest, rarest, wealthiest, most beautiful, interesting and historic collections of Photographs ever seen.

Every Photograph is carefully explained in from four to six lines of printed matter, in an accurate, concise and most interesting manner.

The idea of adding explanations to pictures, which is entirely new, originated with the Publishers, and appears in "Shepp's Photographs of the World" for the first time, has been received with unbounded praise and admiration. So great has been the demand for Shepp's Photographs of the World that the Publisher's immediately translated the English explanations into Swedish and German, printing the book in three languages within four weeks.

Dr. E. Hause has secured the agency for Lenawee county and has already opened his canvass. The book is one of more than ordinary merit, and will have a big sale. One has only to examine it to be favorably impressed with its character. Dr. Hause has got a long row of names already here in Tecumseh in three days' time, and he ought to sell several hundred copies in the territory which he has secured.

A female applicant for aid, appeared at the office of the Director of the Poor, in Detroit the other day, with a sad and anxious look, and on being asked what she wanted replied, "I'd like some money." The barrel will play an important part in the New York campaign this year. The candidates are pretty well matched in that regard.

Philadelphia has been called a slow town, but that Philadelphian who has invented a locomotive that makes 100 miles an hour is certainly not a slow fellow in his ideas.

Gov. Campbell has challenged Major McKinley to eight joint debates, in addition to the one already arranged for October 8th. The Major ought to accept the challenge by all means.

Gov. Campbell's key-note speech at Sidney last week was a masterpiece of political oratory. It bristled with facts and figures, was dignified in tone and elegant in diction. It stamps him as a man of intellectual vigor, worthy to fill the place in Ohio politics once occupied by a Thurman and a Pendleton.

The Massachusetts republican platform contains a plank "congratulating the republican party and the country upon the firm maintenance by the present administration of the principles of civil service reform." As a clever piece of political satire this is worthy of an illustration in Puck.

In the liquor plank of their platform the New York Republicans declare in "favor of redriction by taxation in such localities as do not by option exclude the liquor traffic." Nothing restricts trade so much as taxation, that is true. But why doesn't this truth apply to the tariff as well as to the liquor question?

The workingmen of Ohio continue to enjoy object lessons in the relation of a high tariff to wages. Another large manufacturing company in that state has joined the procession of protected industries that have cut down the earnings of their men 10 per cent. Yet McKinley is still preaching to the wage-earners the virtues of his wonderful tariff bill.

The St. Louis Republic says: "The resignation of Judge Cooley of the Interstate Commission, is a misfortune for the country. Judge Cooley was not only a thoroughly honest and incorruptible man, but he was also a jurist of such acquirements as made his services on the Commission a most invaluable. It will be hard to replace him.

Governor Campbell and Maj McKinley are to engage in an old-fashioned joint debate at Ada, Ohio, on the 8th of October. The fact that the two men are warm personal friends makes it certain that the discussion will be good-natured and free from the personalities that have been indulged in by others upon similar occasions. It will be a debate worth travelling a good many miles to hear.

The Chicago Times says: "Mr. Blaine need not worry himself about Chicago's defenseless condition, owing to the treaty which prohibits the presence of of modern war vessels on the lakes. Chicago is more interested in building whalebacks than men-of-war just now, and only asks protection against politicians who are devoted to a system which seriously narrows the merchantman's field of activity.

The Dardanelles incident has called fresh attention to the danger to the peace of Europe given by Russo-Turkish relations. The historian Edward A. The Century has had in preparation for a year or two a series of illustrated articles on "The Jews in New York," written by Dr. Richard Wheatley. They deal with many phases of the subject, including occupations, festivals and feasts, family life and customs, charities, clubs, amusements, education, etc. Dr. Wheatley has gathered the materials for these papers in long and close study, and he has had the assistance of several well-known Hebrews.

ROBBING THE WOMEN.

Higher Prices For Glass Fruit Jars—The Wall of a Trust and a High Tariff—Rich Monopolists Want More Plunder.

Many a housewife has been puzzled as well as annoyed at the higher prices of glass fruit jars this year. The writer of this was recently visiting a farmer's family when the subject of canning fruit came up. The good wife had sent to a neighboring city to buy a supply of jars for her large crop of fruit and tomatoes. To her surprise a considerable higher price was charged, and the merchant, being a friend, warned her that the price was likely to go still higher.

No one in the family knew that a trust had been formed not long ago and had put up the price of these jars; and when the writer informed them of this fact they had another lesson in the effects of our high protective tariff on the farmers' pocket.

The tariff on glass jars for fruit is 40 per cent. on the best kinds and still higher on the cheaper grades. Besides this, glass jars are very expensive things to pack and ship, being very liable to break in handling; and the new law makes no allowance for glass broken in shipment from abroad, unless the part broken is as much as one-tenth of the whole.

Under these circumstances it is not singular that our imports of glass fruit jars are so inconsiderable that they are not separately named in the government reports. The domestic manufacturers, therefore, have the market entirely to themselves, and being few in number they can easily combine and force trust prices upon the people.

The high protection given these men is entirely uncalled for. The New York Tribune, the leading high tariff journal in this country, has made the claim that plain glassware can be made here as cheaply as in Europe. Moreover, it is known that the manufacturers of all kinds of glassware have been making enormous profits for years past. A gentleman having the most intimate relations with the glassware trade recently made, in a confidential way, some startling statements concerning the profits which the manufacturers have been making. The only purpose, therefore, which the present high duties on glass jars can serve is to compel our women to pay tribute to a rich and powerful trust.

It is time for such things to stop, and these monopolists must not fancy that the people are going to permit this tariff spoliation forever. The people are patient, but once aroused they are terrible in their wrath.

SENTIMENTAL TRADE.

People Will Not Pay Higher Prices at Home Than They Will Abroad Merely to Gratify Local Pride.

The attempt to get people to buy an article for the sentimental reason that it was made in their town, or state, or even in the United States, always breaks down in the end. They will perhaps buy at first with much enthusiasm, led on by local pride, but at last the moving principle of all trade will assert itself and they will buy where they can get the best for their money.

An interesting illustration of this is found in the following case: "Last year there was a big agitation down south about the use of jute for bagging, while bagging made from cotton was said to answer the purpose and would assist materially in using up the cotton crop. A procession of farmers marched into a southern city with flags flying and banners, vowing allegiance to cotton bagging. They went in a body to the leading store in the city and, with much parade, purchased supplies of cotton bagging to cover thdir cotton, and then marched out of town again to the tune of Dixie.

"The proprietor of the store was much surprised a few nights afterward to have the leader of the farmers' cotton bagging parade drive up to his store after nightfall and, after much blank blanketing, purchase a big supply of jute bagging and then implore the storekeeper to keep the transaction a dead secret. Practical experience showed him that jute was the best fiber for his purpose, even if it were a foreign product."

Once in a lifetime our protected manuracturers and their political allies may take a fancy to give a banquet at which everything shall be American, even to the wine and cigars, the table linen, knives and forks, crockery and glassware. But after their heads are cooled from the effects of champagne these enthusiastic protectionists will go on buying where they can buy cheapest, caring nothing whether an article be made in America or in Africa.

VALUES IN OHIO.

The Home Market Theory as Seen in Farm and City Values in Ohio.

The "home market" idea, with which the protectionists seek to beguile the farmer into voting for a high tariff, has received a heavy blow in Ohio.

Build up manufacturers through protection, say the high tariff crowd, and they will build up agriculture; a big manufacturing population will ensure good and steady prices for farm produce. It is a beautiful idea and is so captivating to the protectionist mind that Census Superintendent Robert P. Porter assures the farmer that "the direct benefits he receives from the present tariff are far in excess of the benefits received by any other class."

If the farmer is getting such great benefits from protection, figures ought to show it. But figures show the contrary. The most recent figures on the subject are those of the Ohio decennial board of equalization, which is a republican body. The board has just published the results of its work and its figures will be very difficult for McKinley and other "home market" theorists to explain.

The total value of real estate in Ohio is now $1,266,305,698, against $1,097,509,830 ten years ago. The valuation of real estate in villages, towns and cities has risen in ten years from $402,683,314 to $639,026,724, or over 54 per cent. This increase was made up of $93,000,000 in building and other improvements and of $129,000,000 representing more growth in value. But it is stated in Ohio that all property is assessed at only about one-third of its market value. At this rate the increase of value in cities and towns has been equal to $650,000,000.

And how have matters gone in the country, where protection has been dispensing its excessive "benefits?" Farm lands were valued at $684,826,516 ten years ago; now they are put at $627,278,974, or a loss of $57,000,000. But the farmers spent $40,000,000 in improvements in these ten years, and the actual loss is therefore $97,000,000. Even if no allowance be here made for the lower assessed valuation, as compared with market prices, it will be found that Ohio farms are worth nearly 14 per cent. less than ten years ago, while village, town and city property has gained 54 per cent. in value.

How can this be if the farmers are helped by protection so much more than manufacturers are? And how can it be if the "home market" is so much better for our farmers than the foreign market?

THE TWINE TRUST.

A Flourishing Monopoly—An Object Lesson Worthy of Great Study.

The National Cordage Co. or twine trust, which threatened last year to shut up if its protection were lowered, shows no signs of being hurt by the lower duty on twine. Not long ago it got possession of all the cordage factories in Canada, and now it has bought the Boston Cordage Co., the largest and strongest competitor of the trust.

These evidences of prosperity are exhibited, notwithstanding the fact that the lower duty on twine has compelled the trust to charge the farmers much lower prices for twine this year than last year.

This is an object lesson which ought not to be lost sight of when the tariff again comes up for revision and reform. At such times manufacturers flock to Washington and fill the air of the committee rooms with doleful tales of ruin and disaster which are sure to follow if duties are lowered ever so little. Last year the cordage trust tried this old trick when the duty on binder twine was about to be reduced a little. But, thanks to the action of fifteen northwestern republican senators in voting with the democrats, the duty on twine was put much lower than the trifling reduction which made the trust cry ruin and destruction.

What has followed? Any signs that the twine trust is going to close up? Not so. On the contrary it goes on buying up its rivals at the same time that the reduced protective duty forces it to sell twine at lower prices. It may not be earning the 40 per cent. dividends now that Senator Davis, of Minnesota, said it was earning last year, but it can live and thrive on even the small duty which the McKinleyits were able to save from the wicked democrats and the fifteen "traitor" republican senators.

Hereafter when a protected industry threatens to die if duties are lowered nobody need be frightened. It is an old trick which has been played much too often.

Giants and Grasshoppers.

When Moses sent out spies to go into Canaan and spy out the land, they came back and reported that all the people they saw in it were "men of great stature," were "giants" and "stronger than we," and one cowardly spy added: "We were in our own sight as grasshoppers."

All this has been inverted by our protectionist spies who go to Europe to investigate the condition of pauper labor. Our spies never bring back word that we cannot compete with European labor because it is "stronger than we," but because it "eats meat only once a week." Our spies do not report that they felt themselves as grasshoppers before Europe's "pauper labor," but all the same they are sure they cannot compete with it.

The climax of absurdity before McKinley's committee was reach by a button manufacturer who thought that Bohemia was "the curse of this country, so far as manufacturing is concerned." What was the reason for his alarm? Listen:—"The little girls come to the factories at ten years old, or nine years, or seven years. Do you suppose our women and men can compete against such labor?"

To such a depth of cowardice and stupidity does the protection superstition sink men that they no longer argue that they cannot meet their opponents, since they themselves are only grasshoppers and the opponents giants, but because their opponents are grasshoppers and themselves are but giants!

Still Happy Over Free Sugar.

Protectionist papers are still rejoicing over the cheapness of sugar and are lauding the McKinley law to the seventh heaven for the money it is saving the people on their sugar. The New York Tribune says: "The difference of more than two cents per pound in cost means that more than $63,000,000 has been saved to consumers in this country by a single clause of the new tariff. This is not far from $1 for every man, woman and child, and there is scarcely any other product of which the consumption per head of the working population approaches more closely that of the wealthy."

The refrain to every song which the protectionists sing is that "British free trade" means ruin to the country; yet now they never weary of praising the McKinley law for its cheapening effect at the one important point where it gives us "British free trade" absolute and unadulterated. Do they think to "float" the high protective features of the new law by continually harping upon the one bright spot of "free trade" in it? Their argument now seems to be, "Protection is a great thing—when you take it off;" just as a certain small boy once defined salt as "the thing what makes food taste bad when you don't put any in."

—"The production of figs in California increased from 90,000 pounds in 1870 to 200,000 pounds in 1890," says a trade journal; and in the latter year McKinley raised the duty to encourage the fig industry.

The Tariff on Tin.

The first fruit of the tin-plate section of the McKinley tariff law is the enrichment of the Welsh manufacturers. The second and more lasting effect will be the spoliation of the American consumers, but of that more later. It appears that immediately upon the enactment of the law the manufacturers, anticipating the rush of importers who would seek to stock up before the increased tariff became operative, advanced their prices. The advance was slight at first, but as the days of grace grew shorter, and the importers more importunate, the price went soaring until it was $2.50 a box more than before the passage of the law. The manufacturers cleared over $5,000,000 by the operation, sold out their stock, and have now shut down their mills until the glut in the American market is reduced. This shut-down in Wales will send Welsh workmen to this country, so that in the very unlikely event of any tin-plate mills being established here there will be plenty of foreign labor to man them. The American workingman will enjoy the proud privilege of paying more for his tin roof and kitchen utensils, with the consciousness that all he has accomplished thereby is the addition of a horde of foreign workmen to the already overstocked labor market of America.—Chicago Times.

DEAFNESS CAN'T BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Dyspepsia

Intense Suffering 8 Years

Few people have suffered more severely from dyspepsia than Mr. E. A. McMahon, a well known grocer of Staunton, Va. He says: "Before 1878 I was in excellent health, weighing over 200 pounds. In that year an ailment developed into acute dyspepsia, and soon I was reduced to 162 pounds, suffering burning sensations in the stomach, palpitation of the heart, nausea, and indigestion. I could not sleep, lost all heart in my work, had fits of melancholia, and for days at a time I would have welcomed death. I became morose, sullen and irritable, and for eight years life was a burden. I tried many physicians and many remedies. One day a workman employed by me suggested that I take Hood's Sarsaparilla, as it had cured his wife of dyspepsia. I did so, and before taking the whole of a bottle I began to feel like a new man. The terrible pains to which I had been subjected, ceased, the palpitation of the heart subsided, my stomach became easier, nausea disappeared, and my entire system began to tone up. With returning strength came activity of mind and body. Before the fifth bottle was taken I had regained my former weight and natural condition. I am today well and I ascribe it to taking Hood's Sarsaparilla."

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to buy any other.

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

CUT THE GYVES.

The Chautauqua Assembly Herald of the 13th of August, which has been called to our attention especially with reference to its report of an attempt of Dr. J. M. Buchley, editor of the Christian Advocate, to answer offhand a conglomerate list of questions almost cyclopedic in their range, illustrates the folly of this kind of performance for any other purpose than that of amusing a thoughtless audience. Dr. Buckley answered two of the questions correctly. He said that the first circulating library in America was founded by Benjamin Franklin, and that he didn't know who was the man with the iron mask. If the other replies were trustworthy it was accidental, for they gave but little evidence of research, and none of thoughtfulness. The one regarding which it is our duty to speak is as strange a mixture, morally, logically and economically, as a man of such reputation as a teacher could be expected to concoct.

Asked whether the single tax would abolish poverty, Dr. Buckley replied that it would not, because it makes no provision for the taxation of personal property, and leaves no stimulus to the poor man to work for a shelter for himself in life and for his wife and children should he be called away. How the taxation of personal property, which is produced by work and only by work, can benefit men who live by working, Dr. Buckley did not explain. He could not. He simply undertook to teach regarding a subject to which he had given no adequate thought. Nor did he ask himself why, though able and willing to work, poor men are now unable to get homes. Being informed that the value of a lot for which he paid $7,000, and on which his own home stands, would disappear under the single tax, his mind was impervious to the thought that if the single tax had been in vogue when he built his home, he would not have been obliged to pay such a sum for a piece of God's earth on which to build it. Neither did he consider that with the future incoming of the single tax his children and his brothers' children would be exempt from such extortion. Had he done so, he would have seen that the single tax, so far from preventing home building, will promote it. His thoughtlessness is the more astonishing when considered in the light of the words with which he began his reply. He said:

I firmly believe that the present system is not in harmony with either philosophy or religion. When I was born into the world every square foot of land was held in private ownership by some one else. I came into the world handicapped. The land was all held in private ownership by some one else, and it was, or had been, owned by unconscious infants, who never lifted a hand or did a stroke of work; and this same thing goes on all the time, and from generation to generation.

One would suppose that a moral teacher, inspired with this idea, would not sleep for thinking of how most quickly to abolish so great an injustice. But Dr. Buckley's sleep was not disturbed. Offering no remedy himself, he rejected the only one that is offered, because it would confiscate land values. That is to say, if he had the slightest apprehension of the terms he used, because it would prevent owners of land from levying private tribute upon users of land.

If some one owned a taxing franchise, say of 10 per cent. on the annual production of a given community, Dr. Buckley would object to taking away or otherwise abolishing this franchise, because that would destroy its value—would prevent the owner from continuing or empowering another to continue the extortion. If it were a slave, Dr. Buckley would object to freeing him, because that would destroy his value to the slave owner—would prevent the slave owner from appropriating the result of the slave's labor.

That we do not misrepresent Dr. Buckley, nor even exaggerate his mental and moral confusion, seems clear from his response to a suggestion that it would be no more unjust to deprive him of the value of his land than to free his slave had he invested his $7,000 in that kind of "property." Here it is:

"We do not set the slaves free under ordinary circumstances. If it had not been for the Southerners firing on Fort Sumter the slaves would not have been freed as they were; but slavery would have been abolished by the people coming together and making some kind of an adjustment. The Republican party never dared to take ground in favor of the absolute abolition of slavery; the only ground that they dared to take as that slavery should not be carried into the territories. If it had not been for the war the anti-slavery sentiment would have developed until there would have been some sort of a compromise devised so that their slaves would not have been taken away from them without some compensation."

Let it be remembered that Dr. Buckley is not considering compensation as cheaper or otherwise more expedient than abolition. He is considering the justice of abolition. And his own words leave no other inference than that, in his opinion, it is more, in harmony with justice to continue slavery until a compromise can be effected under which masters will be compensated for the loss of what in justice they can not own, than to abolish slavery regardless of the interest of masters. In other words, the legally purchased power of one man to levy tribute upon another is more sacred than the natural right of every man to retain the products of his own labor.

It may be inferred, however, as Dr. Buckley uses the following illustration, that the question of expediency, rather than that of justice, was, after all, the principal one in his mind; and we quote it for whatever in that respect it may be worth:

"It is a bad thing for a man to be round-shouldered, but that does not prove that it would be right to put him into a vise and straighten him in that way; such a process would result in the absolute injury of the heart and lungs. This single tax movement is a case of straightening up a condition of affairs that have been round-shouldered for ages."

But the illustration is chiefly valuable as showing how utterly the doctor misconceives both the disease and the remedy he so flippantly discusses. He would not put a round-shouldered man into a vise and straighten him in that way; neither should we. But if the man were bent double with gyves twisted about his hands and feet, what would Dr. Buckley do? Would he refrain from cutting the gyves, lest that "would result in the absolute injury of the heart and lungs?" Would he postpone cutting them until a compromise might be made with somebody else, whose sacred privilege of picking the helpless man's pockets would be thereby divested of its value? Or would he give his round-shouldered brother liberty, leaving nature to do the rest?

We find men bound down by artificial restrictions which Dr. Buckley must have seen when he denounced the present system of land tenure as out of harmony with both philosophy and religion, and spoke of himself as coming into the world "handicapped," because "the land was all held in private ownership by some one else." These are the gyves with which the masses of men are fettered. Some, like Dr. Buckley, may release themselves; as some slaves, by extraordinary effort and uncommon luck, were able to buy their freedom. But the great majority are helpless; and so, with deep poverty in the midst of abundant wealth and still more abundant opportunities for producing wealth, society seems to be round shouldered. Single tax men do not propose putting it in a vise. It is socialism that proposes this. Single tax men would simply cut the gyves.

The Doctrine of the Single Tax.

HOUSTON, TEX., June 19.—EDITOR EXPRESS: As Aye Bee has made an honest inquiry concerning the doctrine of the single tax on land values, I will attempt to inform him as briefly as possible, on the points he has mentioned. The doctrine in question does not propose a distribution of land, as some misinformed persons suppose, nor does it mean a confiscation of land titles. But the intention is to put an end to the injustice of the present system of land ownership by recognising and guaranteeing the equal right of all citizens to the value and use of land. The earth belongs to the people. If any have a legal right to exclude all others from a portion of it for the purpose of residence or cultivation, or to appropriate its products to his own use and benefit, he should pay the rental value of the unimproved site for the common benefit of the community. The fund so derived may be termed tax or rent, and would constitute revenue for public purposes. All values to land springing from human exertion and labor to make it productive, to improve and beautify it, would be products of labor and non-taxable. Your correspondent is confused by the terms land and land values. By the term land value is to be understood the natural value of and arising from fertility or location, or both, computed apart from all improvement bestowed on it, or buildings built upon it. This value may arise from natural advantages, such as fertility of soil, mineral deposits, water power, etc.; and such as arise from the development of society—such as the growth of towns and cities, the expansion of commerce and all internal improvements.

The two fundamental principles on which the single tax is urged are: 1. The natural value of land is the bounty of nature and not the product of any man's labor, and therefore belongs not to any individual, but to population generally. 2. The value which accrues to land from the general development of the community is the result of the labor of all and should therefore belong to all. These two values should therefore be taxed for the public good. The converse of these two propositions are wholly untenable.

Aye Bee can readily distinguish between the terms land and land values as above explained. He should see that the effect of this tax would be to take land out of speculation, for no one would hold unimproved land out of use when all or nearly all of its rental value would be taken for the public use. The site would be improved in order to produce income, or sold to another who desired to improve. This would bring much land on the market to escape taxation, with a view to put money into non-taxable improvements which would pay. Much land on the market would mean cheaper land, cheaper farms and building sites. When little or no capital could buy a site, more capital would be left to put into houses and all sorts of improvements. This would cause much building and consequently a demand for labor, for material, and for all that is the outcome of the industries. With the speculative value of land gone, the poorer land and those far from markets and otherwise isolated would not be in demand, and therefore have no taxable value. Population would become more concentrated, schools and churches and places of amusement would be more accessible and life more attractive. The landlord would reap all the benefits of invested capital, but would be shorn of the profits which he does not earn and which he exacts from the people by reason of their necessities as land animals.

The line to be drawn between lands exempt and those subject to the tax would be determined by the existence or non-existence of economic rent. Economic rent, as defined by political economists, is the margin of production arising from the surplus yield of better grades of land above that of the poorest land in use on the application of the same amount of labor. This yield is based upon pure natural fertility and in no wise includes surplus arising from the expenditure of labor and means to increase productiveness. Not to consume more of your valuable space I will leave Aye Bee's question to W. J. M. to be answered by that correspondent.—E. P. Alsbury, in San Antonio (Tex.) Daily Express.

UNDER CONTROL.

Rain Comes to the Relief of the Fire-Swept Districts.

Awful Ruin Wrought in Emmons County, N. D.—A Number of Lives Lost—Farmers Made Paupers—Work of the Flames Elsewhere.

STOPPED BY RAIN.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 28.—Dispatches from Carleton, Milaca, Hinckley and Pine City state it has been raining at all those points for the last eighteen hours and that the forest fires are everywhere under control. There has never before been a fire of the magnitude of this one in this region. The whole country has been swept by the flames, and everything has been burned outside of the towns, except that a few lumber camps were, by great exertion, saved. Thousands of tons of hay have been cut on the lowlands about the lakes and this is all destroyed. For miles and miles on every side there is nothing but a blackened waste.

A dispatch from Williamsport, N. D., the county seat of Emmons county, says the property loss there has been somewhat exaggerated, but will reach $100,000. Three persons were burned to death in that county—Henry Tabor, living near Williamsport, and George W. and Clyde C. Johnson, farmers living near Beaver Creek. A report from the Holland settlement on the Missouri, north of Bismarck, says three farm hands were burned there. The loss at that point is about $80,000. Whole herds of cattle hemmed in by the awful conflagration were burned to death. The prairies are strewn with carcasses.

Hundreds of families are homeless and penniless, and in many instances they had to flee from their abodes with only the clothes on their backs. There is certain to be great suffering this winter unless assistance comes to them from outside sources. The fire which started this great conflagration was set by a thrashing machine.

TURTLE LAKE, Minn., Sept. 28.—Word has reached this village that the family of Mr. Nesse, a farmer living a short distance out of town, consisting of himself, his wife and several small children, were hemmed in by the flames and no doubt burned to death, as no help could reach them.

BLACK RIVER FALLS, Wis., Sept. 28.—Reports from the east fork say that forest fires are raging in that vicinity. Lumbering camps, timber and hay are being reduced to ashes, and even the flooding dams on the streams are not spared by the raging flames. Bears, deer and all manner of small game are seeking the streams for a place of safety. In this vicinity fires are raging on every side and a large amount of property has been destroyed.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., Sept. 28.—Forest fires are raging all over Chippewa county and the air in this city is thick with smoke. Considerable timber land, barns containing summer crops, stock, etc., have been burned. Whole villages have been burned.

BABCOCK, Wis., Sept. 28.—An unprecedented situation presents itself in this section. For ten days fires have been burning in every direction, destroying millions of dollars worth of property. Fires of short duration, with a few thousand dollars' damage, are almost an annual occurrence, but a continuous blaze of ten days' duration, destroying three-fourths of all the cranberry marshes, millions of feet of lumber, many farmhouses, granaries and stacks, is far beyond anything heretofore known.

Brown Denies It Now.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Sept. 28.—Jacob Brown, who confessed that he had murdered a tramp in Centralia, Ill., on Saturday denied his story. He now claims that his name is J. A. Buda, and that he killed his brother-in-law; that he was tried and acquitted on the ground of insanity and sent to the asylum at Anna, Ill., where he remained a year, and then came to St Paul. He professed total ignorance of his story of Friday and claimed he had been drinking.

The Failure Record.

NEW YORK, Sept. 26.—The business failures occurring throughout the country during the last seven days number for the United States 210, and for Canada 34, or a total of 244 failures, as compared with 239 last week and 214 the week previous to the last. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 219, representing 198 failures in the United States and 37 in the dominion of Canada.

A Murder and a Lynching.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Sept. 26.—Fred Tyler (white), engineer on the West Carolina road, and one Rankin (colored), got into an altercation at a roundhouse Thursday night. Tyler struck Rankin with a lump of coal. Rankin ran off got a pistol and coming back, fired at Tyler, striking him in the abdomen. A crowd of railroad men caught Rankin, and taking him across the river, hanged him to a tree. Tyler will die.

Fell from a Balloon.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Mich., Sept. 26.—The balloon craze has claimed another victim, and as a result of a foolhardy adventure here Lewis B. Earl, of Marshall, Mich., lies dead of a broken neck and Frank Thayer is suffering from a fractured arm and severe internal injuries. They had reached a height of 80 feet when something about the balloon broke and they fell to the ground.

Ten Negroes Sentenced to Death.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Sept. 26.—The most death-dealing sentence in the legal annals of this state except in cases of insurrection was passed at Laurels Friday, ten negroes being sentenced to be hanged October 13 for the murder of another negro.

A Woman's Alliance.

TOPEKA, Kan., Sept. 25.—The National Woman's Alliance was organized here yesterday. The object of the association is to establish a bureau for the better education of the women in economic, social and political questions.

MARSHALL'S HOOF CURE

cures sand and quarter cracks, split hoofs, sore and contracted feet, corns and all hoof troubles. Stops cracking, shelling and scaling hoofs. Softens and toughens brittle hoofs. It is better than soaking with oil, meal, etc. Should be used on all horses standing on hard floors or driven on hard roads. It also cures scratches, tetter, galls of all kinds, bruises, etc.

TOLEDO, O., April 6, 1891.

I had a horse in my stables that had hoofs so brittle that it was impossible to keep a shoe on his feet. I have used one can of Marshall's Hoof Cure on his hoofs and the horse has been shod for four weeks and the shoes stay on all right. I consider it the best hoof cure I have ever used.

D. RANSOM, SON & CO., Proprietors, BUFFALO N. Y.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

THE RIDGEWAY LIBRARY.

A brief notice of some of the volumes recently added to the Ridgeway Library may not fail to interest those who appreciate the influence of good books. The volumes added have been chosen entirely to aid those who seek real culture and improvement in the advantages which the library affords. It is the purpose of the library to promote more reading and better reading among all whom it may reach, and this purpose has guided the selection of the new books.

A condition to the successful study of an author is an account of his life and work. Students of literature will find nearly forty biographies of writers who have helped to form literature, similar to the thirty-six biographies comprised in the English Men of Letter series added last spring. It is believed that these small volumes contain more information on literary topics than can easily be found elsewhere in the same number of pages. In the same department are Minto's Manual of English Prose Literature:

English Prose and Prose Writers—T. H. Hunt.
English Dramatic Poets—Lamb.
Lectures on Shakespere—Coleridge.
Shakespere as a Dramatic Artist—Moulton.
Our English—Hill, Sheridan's plays,

Stories from Homer, Virgil, and the Greek Tragedians, and the Chautauqua books in Greek, Latin, French and German literatures.

Great care has been taken in the selection of books to assist students and teachers of the Bible. The list contains:

The Life and Work of St. Paul—Farrar.
Life and Words of Christ—Geikie.
The Sermons of Robertson.
Gesta Christi—Brace.
Prayers from the Plymouth Pulpit—Beecher.
The Person of Christ—Schaff.
The Character of Jesus—Bushnell.
Who Wrote the Bible—Gladden.
Some Elements of Religion—Liddon.
Gospel Criticism and Historical Christianity—Cone.
A Study of Religion—Martineau.
Grounds of Theistic and Christian Belief—Fisher.
History of the Jews—Millman.
History of the Jewish Church—Stanley.
Martineau's Seat of Authority in Religious Belief, has been ordered.

The works on Ethics comprise:

Fairchild's Moral Philosophy.
Sedgwick's History of Ethics and Methods of Ethics.

The attention of clergymen is invited particularly to the above department. The works are some of the most suggestive and inspiring productions of modern thought and scholarship.

A few books have been added in political economy:

Theory and History of Banking—Dunbar.
Elementary Course in Political Economy—Walker.
The Works of Ricardo and Mill.

On Government there are:

Political Economy—Sedgwick, ordered.
Considerations on Representative Government—Mill.
Popular Government—Maine.
Social Institutions of the United States—Bryce.
Democracy in America—DeTocqueville.

The last work, although written forty years ago, remains perhaps the greatest work ever written on America. The only book that can be compared with it is Bryce's American Commonwealth, already in the library.

The Department of History is considerably extended, and has received

History of Roman People—Allen.
Introduction to the Middle Ages—Emerton.
History of the Middle Ages—Duruy.
The Holy Roman Empire—Bryce.
Latin and Teutonic Nations—Ranke.
The English Revolution—Ranke.
History of the Popes—Ranke.
Cæsar—Froude.
Historical Atlas—Labberton.
History of Rationalism in Europe—Lecky.
History of Mexico—Hale.
The American Revolution—Fiske.
The Critical Period of American History—Fiske.
Leading Facts of American History—Montgomery.
History of Modern Europe—Tyffe.

Philosophy is represented by

History of Greek Philosophy—Zeller.

Principles of Sociology—Spencer.

In connection with these are:

History of the Inductive Sciences—Whewell.
Early Law and Custom—Maine.
The Mind of a Child—Preyer.

The last is a study of the child's mind during the first three years, and ought to be useful to any one bringing up or teaching small children.

On Language, the addition contains:

History of the English Language—Lounsbury.
Language and the Study of Language—Whitney, and Essays in Max Muller's Chips from a German Workshop.

The last work deserves particular mention. It comprises five volumes of essays and lectures of topics in linguistic science, comparative mythology, and the literature and religions of India.

In Science there are:

Elements of Geology—LeConte.
General Astronomy—Young.
Darwinism—Wallace.

Prof. Wallace's work is an exposition of Darwin's work, but from the standpoint reached after nearly thirty years of discussion, with an abundance of new facts, and the advocacy of many new or old theories.

Shakespere's Works, edited by Hudson, with explanatory and critical notes, will be much more valuable to students than the plain text heretofore in the library.

The remainder includes:

Mythology and Age of Fable—Bulfinch.
Chesterfield's Letters.
Meditations of Marcus Aurelius and Epictetus.
Aristotle's Ethics.
History of Henry II.—Green.
The Warfare of Science—White.
The History of King Arther.

Of the addition made last spring we have not been able to take notice. It consisted principally of short historical works to introduce students to the larger histories in the library:

History of Civilization—Guizot.
The Great Religions of the World—Clark.
Short History of the English People—Green.
Chas. V.—Robertson.

We cannot insist too strongly upon our desire to aid earnest students, and the strongest support of an active library association is the interest and encouragement of such students. We offer you advantages usual only in a large city, and at considerable expense. Is it not to your interest to share these advantages?.

THE COUNTY FAIR.

The county fair held at Adrian last week was a most gratifying success. Although the weather was fearfully torrid for September, still the equinoctial, which is considered due about that time, failed to put in an appearance, and hence there was no grumbling on the score of the weather. The exhibition was creditable in all the departments and in some of them especially so. There was a fine show of all kinds of stock. The fruit, vegetable, and dairy exhibits were excellent, and floral hall was very tastily arranged. The attendance during the five days of the fair exceeded that of any previous year, and the receipts were correspondingly in excess of former years. It is safe to say that the treasury of the society will show a healthy balance on the credit side of the ledger.

It is impossible to give a detailed description of the fair, owing to lack of space, but there were some features that deserve especial attention.

One of the finest exhibits on the ground was that of the Page Wire Fence Co. A high fence enclosed a park about six rods square, the company's menagarie being enclosed therein.

This section of the county was well represented in the poultry department. C. D. Keyes, of Clinton, acted as one of the judges on poultry, and Henry F. Barnes, of Ridgeway, was the superintendent. Walt Osborn had some fine barred Plymouth Rocks, Rowen Ducks and Bronze Turkeys. Some rose comb black Bantams were shown by Ralph J. Bidwell.

In the swine sheds there was a big show from this section. Holloway and Osborn had 25 entries of Poland Chinas; LeClair Whelan had four pens of the same breed.

The best sheep flocks of Northern Lenawee were represented. William Witherell had five pens of American Merinos, Will J. Osborn had fifteen entries, all merinos. J. F. N. Bowen had two pens of the same breed, Geo. Holloway had two samples of the National Delaine breed, W. A. Marshall had three entries of Shropshires and Ed. Wilson had two fine Shropshire rams.

In the horse class Tecumseh and vicinity led the van. Marshal T. R. Kyle had four horses there; C. D. Bills, three; W. A. Cairns, three; and the following persons had one or more horses in the stables: Daniel Wiggins, Alden Rundell, Frank Davidson, R. Quackenbush, Jas. Elliott, R. B. Gillispie and William Anderson.

Among miscellaneous matters John Hialey had five entries, covering some of his best buggies. The Tecumseh Rack Co., had one of their racks on the ground. The Avery rack was also there. Loyal Lovejoy had his Advance Fence Machine on exhibition which easily walked away with all its competitors. Joe Sage was there with the Keystone wire fence. Theo Wood had his big corn popper on the ground and ran a lunch counter besides.

The school exhibit was excellent. This department was in charge of Editor Field, of the News, assisted by Prof. E. G. Walker and Prof. G. W. Walker. The city kindergarten work and specimens of free hand object drawing were on exhibition and attracted universal attention. Besides the Adrian public school exhibit, there were specimens of map drawing, essay work, penmanship, etc., from the schools in Rome, Adrian, Ogden, East Blissfield, Franklin, Macon, Madison, Riga, Medina, Fairfield, Raisin, Tipton, Lenawee Junction and Tecumseh.

The kid band, of Tecumseh, attended the fair on Friday and the boys were highly commended for their excellent playing.

The balloon ascension Wednesday afternoon was the finest we ever saw. Miss Gertie Carmo made the ascent very nicely, going up about 1500 feet. Not a breath of air was stirring and when she descended in the parachute she alighted inside of the race track, within fifty feet of the starting point. The balloon itself came down a few rods west of the grand stand.

Edward Baxter Perry.

Although matter of interest to outsiders it is unfair to Mr. Perry to dwell upon blindness in any review of his personal history or artistic career; for he has labored strenuously and heroically to obliterate this fact from his life and work, and with such success that he has fully established himself as the only blind performer ever admitted by fellow-musicians and music critics to a leading place among the virtuosi of his day. . . . . The one thing he has always urgently claimed from press and public is a fair field and no favors, the right to stand or fall as an artist, not as a prodigy. . . . . Mr. Perry's special musical studies were begun in Boston, and continued in Europe, under the direction of private masters exclusively. It is needless to state that he does not play by ear, having always memorized all music, having it read aloud from the notes. He takes everything at a first reading, having acquired great facility by practice, and has never yet been criticized for the false memorization of a single measure. While in Germany he studied with the usual list of great masters in his art, with Kullak, Pruckner, Liszt, and Clara Schumann, and played in concert in Berlin, Frankfort, Stuttgart, and other leading cities. During his sojourn in Berlin he gave, by special invitation, a recital for the late Emperor of Germany, an honor which no American pianist has ever shared.

In his remarks, Mr. Perry impresses upon his hearers, with strong and stirring emphasis, the dignity and value of music from a genuine art standpoint, and of all art from the standpoint of humanity, thus securing from his hearers a keener interest and a more profound attention. He furthermore gives in words his own interpretations of the works presented, with felicitous illustrations and suggestions, so that, for the first time in the experience of many the barriers go down between mere physical sound and the soul, and the audience catches the inspiration and the earnest mood of the artist. . . . .

Mr. Perry has always made Boston his professional headquarters, though he is equally well-known throughout the Middle and Western States by means of his frequent and extensive concert tours. By far the larger proportion of his engagements are for Lecture Recitals at leading colleges and conservatories throughout the country, and of these he has given nearly one hundred the present season. . . . .

To the many students who have come in contact with him as instructor, to his numerous audiences throughout the country, to the large class of the struggling blind, Edward Baxter Perry has been an inspiring example of the inherent capacity of the human soul, even with the odds against it doubled, to wring from life its highest worth and rewards.

OBITUARY.

Died, in Tecumseh, Mich., on Sunday, Sept. 20th, 1891, John Paul Brown, only son of Millard P. and Gertrude Brown, aged 12 years and 4 months.

The biography of a life of twelve years must of necessity be a brief one. Nothing can be found in it of public interest. And in no public records is its story told. Only in the hearts of those composing the home circle has its history been written. But there it has been indelibly recorded. The joys and sorrows of childhood had been finished. The bright period of youth had just opened before its possessor. School days had well and honorably progressed. Powers that gave promise of future usefulness had begun to be developed. But so far as this world is concerned that development has been cut short, and the hopes connected with it have gone out in disappointment. To ask why this has been permitted is to ask what cannot be answered. Faith does not insist on knowing the reason why things are thus and so, but says when all is dark, "I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, because Thou didst it." In his last illness, which was of seven weeks duration, Johnnie showed much courage and patience. He very naturally wished to live, but gave himself uncomplainingly into the hands of God. He talked with his parents, had the scriptures read to him and gave intelligent assent to petitions offered in his behalf, and when too weak to talk, responded with a cordial Amen to the prayer offered at his bedside by the visiting pastor. Afterwards referring to this prayer he spoke of being helped by it. So that cheering memories will ever be connected with those suffering days. Johnnie's young companions bore the casket at his funeral, and laid floral tributes on his grave in token of their affection for him. They are listening let us trust to the voice that has been addressed to them in his removal. Friends young and old are holding in remembrance those who have been afflicted and some are praying that out of their sorrow God may bring the fruit of peace.

Cheap Farming Lands.

Do you want to buy or rent a farm? If so, southern Nebraska and northern Kansas offer you great inducements. Yield per acre this year: wheat 15 to 30 bushels, oats 40 to 75 bu., rye 25 to 45 bu., corn will yield 45 to 75 bu. Taxes are low, climate fine, plenty of timber and good water. Good markets, land cheap and terms of payment favorable. All inquiries answered promptly. Come via "Burlington Route" and you will be met at station and shown the country whether you buy or not.

C. A. BARNARD,
Long Island, Phillips County, Kansas.

GRATIFYING TO ALL.

The high position attained and the universal acceptance and approval of the pleasant liquid fruit remedy Syrup of Figs, as the most excellent laxative known, illustrates the value of the qualities on which its success is based and are abundantly gratifying to the California Fig Syrup Company.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

The members of the Universalist Parish of Tecumseh are requested to meet at the HERALD office, next Saturday afternoon, Oct. 3d, at three o'clock, to choose delegates to the coming state convention and transact such other business as may come before the meeting. E. D. Burlingame, Moderator; L. Loana Stacy, Clerk.

The "Duchess," author of "Molly Bawn," "Phyllis," "Airy Fairy Lillian," and a host of other popular stories, contributes the complete novel to the October number of Lippincott's Magazine. The story is called "Lady Patty," and it is bright and breezy and with plenty of go in it, and compares most favorably with the other popular novels of this widely-read author.

"Mr. Beecher as I Knew Him" is an attractive title, and under it Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher begins her series of personal reminiscences of her husband in the October Ladies' Home Journal. In a delightfully frank manner she tells of her first meeting with Mr. Beecher and how he looked; their courtship and engagement; how he earned his engagement ring; his first sermon and early religious beliefs.

"Drunkenness is curable," is the title of an article in the October number of the North American Review which is destined to attract wide attention. It is written by Mr. John F. Mines, a well-known New York journalist, and a gentleman of unquestioned character for veracity. After a heroic fight for more than twenty years against the power of the drink-habit, and taking treatment in a number of institutions conducted specially for that purpose, all without success, he placed himself under the care of Dr. Keeley, of Dwight, Ill., where in six weeks he was completely cured. "The disease is out of my blood and bones," says Mr. Mines, "and I know it is out forever."

Last Saturday evening about 8 o'cock Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Hoag returned from a social tea. They unlocked their house and as Mr. H. lit the lamp he was surprised to find about fifty of his old and young friends quietly sitting around the rooms enjoying a hearty laugh at his expense. Dr. Hause called the meeting to order; Mrs. Merritt read the minutes of the last meeting; a poem by a grand-daughter, Miss Metta; a song by Miss Fowler and Metta, and the Doctor presented Mr. Hoag with a beautiful easy chair. The ladies took charge of the house and ice cream, cake and peaches were sandwiched with a good old-fashioned visit. About ten o'clock the party shook hands with Mr. and Mrs. Hoag and said they were coming again, if so willed by an all wise Providence.

Our town was thrown into a fever of excitement yesterday afternoon by a report that one section of the Olin excursion had been wrecked in a smash-up, and some of the Tecumseh passengers had been seriously hurt. Telegrams from S. P. Hosmer and Mrs. Tate assured friends here of their safety and people then breathed easier. The wreck occurred near Kent, Ohio, caused by a collision between a freight train and the fifth section of the excursion train. Three persons were killed outright and twenty-four were injured more or less seriously. Most of the injured ones were Michigan people, living in the western part of the state. A letter was received this morning from Mrs. Tate and another telegram from S. P. Hosmer conveying the intelligence that all the passengers from this vicinity escaped unharmed.

The Magazine of American History for October forcibly illustrates how a leading monthly, which keeps in touch with the highest thoughts current of the day in regard to great historical events, may become a public benefactor as well as an educator. Just as the inquiry is at high tide concerning the portraits of Columbus, one may open this beautiful number and learn all about the most important of them. The article by the editor, "A group of Columbus portraits," deals with facts and picture-pedigrees that are well authenticated, giving fac-similes of the oldest and rarest engraved prints of Columbus portraiture extant, with much other data of timely consequence. The double-headed contemporary print of the portraits of Ferdinand and Isabella, a gem of great value, is included; and Mrs. Lamb, with easy grace, adds to her essay suggestive sketches of these sovereigns and their great military triumphs in connection with Columbus and the dawn of America upon the map of the world, which is delightful reading.

After a six weeks' visit of a most enjoyable kind, Mr. Chas. Strong and wife left Thursday for their home in Lawrence, Kansas. They went by way of Jackson where they will spend two or three days with Prof. Lawton's family.

S. C. Stacy, of the Tecumseh HERALD, in last week's issue printed a column account of his wanderings "among the lakes." The same week a canvas stack cover was stolen in Rome, and a number of articles from a school-house in Franklin.—Adrian Press.

A. J. Palmer left home Tuesday for a two week's pleasure trip to Albany, Poughkeepsie and other points in New York. He went with the Olin excursion. Mr. Palmer has stuck pretty closely to business for a long time and a few days' respite will do him good.

We stop the press to announce that the Tecumseh HERALD has purchased a new job press. The press of the county, especially the Messenger, will please stop their presses to announce this new job press. In this connection we desire to state that this office received a quart of new quoins the other day.—Adrian Press.

The new Lake Shore freight house is about completed. The storage room has been used for several days and the office will be occupied this week. The building is much better in every particular than the old one. The passenger depot is receiving a new coat of paint and will sanded on the outside.

The poetic element predominates largely in Mr. Perry's playing. His accuracy might well excite the envy of a player in full possession of all his faculties. A most enjoyable feature was the explanation offered by the pianist before each number, analyzing the characteristics of the works to be heard. The example, if generally followed, would interest many in piano music who now care for nothing of the sort.—Chicago Tribune.

The ladies of the Library Association have engaged the services of Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Gruendler, of Cleveland, to present the celebrated opera, H. M. S. Pinafore, for the benefit of the Association. The entertainment will come off next Tuesday evening, Oct. 6th. Mrs. Gruendler will appear in the impersonation of "Buttercup." This will prove to be a first-class entertainment and should receive a liberal patronage from our citizens.

To-day the University of Michigan opens its doors to receive its fifty-first class of students. In 1841 it opened with two professors in the faculty, and a total registration of six students. Last year 2,420 students were enrolled, the teaching force numbered 136, and the buildings are so thick on the forty-acre campus that it is only a question of a few years when it will be necessary for the regents to purchase more land for the erection of buildings, as it has already been necessary to build the hospital on grounds away from the campus.

H. M. S. Pinafore.

Mrs. Fulton McLain, of Raisin, and Mrs. Nelson Miller, of Macon, were among the Tecumseh passengers on the Olin excursion.

B. Hurry, wife and son, Mrs. M. E. Conklin, Frank Wallinger, wife and child, started on a trip to DesMoines, Iowa, the first of the week.

Bert Waring has sold his house and lot on Logan street to R. Dunseath, but he says he is not going to leave town. The rumor to that effect is unfounded.

John F. Spafford and wife, of Manchester, and W. H. Wiggins & Son Fred of Adrian, joined the Tecumseh contingent upon the Olin excursion last Tuesday.

The Addison Courier says: It is becoming evident that Tecumseh will never rest comfortably till she has a system of water works and a fair association.

Mrs. Dr. Meeker has procured a handsome monument from Marsteller, to be erected upon the family lot in our cemetery. It will be placed in position Saturday.

Miss Albertine Brewer left home Monday for Philadelphia, where she will attend school at a young ladies' seminary. She expects to take a regular course of instruction and will remain through the winter.

Mrs. M. K. Elliott and her sister, Mrs. Mann, of Chicago, who have been visiting their mother, Mrs. Spaulding, returned home Tuesday. They expected to stay longer but their visit was cut short by a summons to hasten home.

A. P. Coddington's residence was the scene of a large social gathering last Thursday evening. Misses Etta Coddington and Rhoda Benedict gave a reception to their young friends at that time and it proved to be a most enjoyable occasion.

Among the Tecumseh parties who took in the Olin excursion last Tuesday were Capt. A. D. Lawrence, C. H. Bramble, A. K. Waldron and wife, M. Smelzer, wife and mother. Most of them will stop off at different places in New York State.

Mr. Fred Montgomery and Miss Florence Rowland were united in married yesterday, Sept. 30th, in Chicago, by Rev. J. H. Hopkins, Rector of St. James church of that city. The young couple have many friends in this vicinity who will unite in extending congratulations.

The soliciting committee for the fair met Monday evening and reported progress. About $3,000 have already been taken and the project is favorably received by everyone. From the liberal manner in which people respond the canvassers feel very much encouraged over the outlook.

The Olin excursion train which passed over the Mackinaw road Tuesday afternoon was an immense affair. The train consisted of five sections, averaging ten coaches each, or fifty coaches in all, including baggage cars. Several Tecumseh people took advantage of the low rates offered to go East.

It is seldom that our citizens have the opportunity to witness an opera of the character of Pinafore. It ranks among the very best as a musical play, and the best talent of Tecumseh will be engaged in its presentation. It will be given at the opera house on Tuesday evening, October 6th. We hope to see the house crowded that evening.

The Ann Arbor Register of last week is a special boom edition. It contains forty pages of six columns each and a very elaborate "write up" of the University City. The editorial work is exceedingly well done and the typographical execution would do credit to a Detroit office. The Register is to be commended for its enterprise in publishing this magnificent boom edition.

Mrs. C. A. Kiel, of Toledo, is the guest of John Heck's family for a few days.

Rev. O. J. Perrin will preach at the M. E. church next Sabbath, morning and evening.

Al Heesen and Misses Gertrude Fisher and Mabel Jenkins visited friends in Adrian yesterday.

The meeting of the Fire Company, called for last Friday evening, was adjourned until to-morrow evening.

Mr. Stephen Brewer and wife, of Ithaca, N. Y., are guests of A. L. Brewer for a few days. Mr. Brewer is a brother of the late Horace Brewer.

We clip the following from the Corunna Journal of September 24th:

Rev. O. J. Perrin, who has very acceptably filled the Methodist pulpit here for the past year, has been sent to Tecumseh. He was by far the ablest preacher that this society has had for years, and his pastorate for the first year has been abundantly successful, having added nearly 70 to the membership of the church. While regretting his departure we congratulate the church at Tecumseh upon obtaining such a scholarly gentleman and eloquent preacher to preside over them.

A SEVERE SHAKE.

An Earthquake Causes Great Fear in Six States.

Inhabitants of Cities in Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Tennessee and Kentucky Flee to the Streets—No Great Damage Reported.

ROCKED TO AND FRO.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 28.—A decided shock of earthquake was felt in St. Louis at 10:50 Saturday night. It was particularly noticeable in the central portion of the city and in the north and west ends. On West Pine street it was noticed that the shock lasted two minutes. Its greatest force was reached during the first minute, after which it became less and less noticeable until it died out. It is said that the shock felt here was similar to that experienced on the night of the Charleston disaster. It seemed to move from south to north.

It was not long after the shock before inquiries and reports concerning the earthquake began flowing into the newspaper offices. It seems that the shock was general and that the vibrations were slow, but noticeable and distinct. People were awakened from sleep, particularly in the west end, and rushed to the street in their night clothes.

At East St. Louis the shock was distinctly felt. Many people were aroused from their slumbers and in a few moments the streets were filled with people. No damage has as yet been reported, but the whole city felt the quaking of the earth. At Gillespie, Ill., the shock was felt very distinctly. The wave was from the southeast to northwest. At Decatur, Ill., the vibration was from east to west and lasted several seconds. It shook doors and windows all over town and awoke people who had already retired. No damage resulted, but a great many people were badly frightened. At Greenville, Ill., the shock was so violent in its nature as to cause brick buildings to tremble. A large proportion of the inhabitants were aroused from their slumbers. The shock lasted fully a minute. At Xenia, Ill., brick houses swayed on their foundations, while frame dwellings rocked to and fro. Plaster was knocked from the ceilings and vases and pictures were thrown from the walls.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 28. — An earthquake shock was distinctly felt at 10:50 Saturday night throughout this city. Windows rattled violently and the circuit court in session was temporarily interrupted. There were two distinct oscillations, closely following each other, and the vibration lasted fully one minute in each case. The direction appeared to be from southeast to northwest. Buildings were shaken, windows and stoves rattled, and suspended electric lights swayed sharply. No damage was done. The shock appears to have been general throughout this section. Mount Pulaski reports a heavy shock. At Jacksonville the shock was lighter than here, while at Lincoln it was more severe. The shock was felt distinctly at Bloomington, Decatur, Peoria, Mount Vernon and many other points.

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—Saturday night's earthquake shock was felt in this city. While the shock was not severe, it was noticeable in different sections of the city. Other Illinois points where it was felt were Galesburg, Vandalia, Albion, Sullivan, Pittsfield, Hoopeston, Moweaqua, Mattoon, Paris, Nashville, Hillsboro, Shelbyville, Virginia and Warsaw.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 28.—Indianapolis was visited by a distinct shock of earthquake Saturday night. The phenomenon occurred about ten minutes before 11 o'clock. Reports as to its duration differ, but from the best information that can be gathered it lasted about eight seconds. In the Journal office building the shock was perceptible.

VINCENNES, Ind., Sept. 28.—A very perceptible earthquake was felt here at 11 o'clock Saturday night and people in the hotels and saloons rushed into the streets much alarmed, and persons were aroused from their slumbers. Buildings vibrated and windows rattled and continued fully thirty seconds. The shake was felt at Evansville, Olney, Washington and various places in this neighborhood. The freight depot rocked to and fro so plainly that the men rushed from the building. No damage is reported.

COLUMBUS, Ind., Sept. 28.—At a few minutes before 11 o'clock Saturday night the shock of earthquake was felt here. Large rockers in residences swayed to and fro, lamps were overturned from stands and many of the inhabitants rushed from their dwellings into the streets. In the city hospital patients were panic stricken, while in the county jail prisoners were frightened almost to death and some of them into prayer. Southern Indiana never experienced such a shock before.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 28.—Louisville had a good shaking Saturday night. A severe earthquake shock was felt at 10:58, and, although no serious damage was done, it caused considerable excitement all over the city. The bell in the city hall tower was rung by the vibrations of the building and the watchman in the tower thought his last hour had come. At the Galt house and other hotels the bells were rung, water-pitchers were overturned in the upper stories and guests came hurrying downstairs in a panic, it requiring much persuasion to induce the more timid to return to their quarters. Several drug stores suffered a slight loss from broken bottles and prematurely mixed drugs. In the residence part of the city the shock caused much alarm, the people rushing into the street.

KEOKUK, Ia., Sept. 28.—Three distinct shocks of earthquake were felt in this city about 11 o'clock Saturday night. The damage done in this city and the surrounding country was not serious, so far as learned.

Burglars cleaned out every store and the post office in San Antonio, Mo.

NEBRASKA REPUBLICANS.

Nominations Made at Lincoln for State Officers.

LINCOLN, Neb., Sept. 26.—The republican state convention was held here Thursday. The following ticket was nominated: For associate justice of the supreme court, A. M. Post, of Platte county; for regents of the state university, H. P. Shumway, of Dawson county, and Charles Marple, of Douglass county.

The platform renews its devotion to the principles of the party; congratulates the people on the marvelous prosperity attending the development and growth of the state; approves the administration of President Harrison as eminently wise, loyal and courageous; pats Blaine on the back as America's favorite son; approves the silver coinage act of the present administration; demands the maintenance of the American system of protection; eulogizes McKinley; commends the workings of the interstate commerce and regards the World's Columbian Exposition as one of the most important events in the world's history; denounces the state democratic platform as weak, vacillating and cowardly; demands an equitable adjustment of freights, fair alike to the farmer, the shipper and the railroads. The victories achieved by the state and agricultural departments in the admission of American pork into France and Germany are viewed with gratification. The rest of the platform relates to state matters.

FAST TIME BY NANCY HANKS.

The Game Kentucky Mare Does a Mile in 2:09 1-4 at Cambridge City, Ind.

CAMBRIDGE CITY, Ind., Sept. 25.—Nancy Hanks demonstrated the fact Thursday that she is as good as the very best. She trotted a mile in 2:09¼, by fourths 32¾, 1:04, 1:36, making half the distance without the help of a "pusher." At the half mile post the runner, driven to urge the mare, fell and broke his neck, but the driver fortunately escaped injury. Bud Doble, who drove Nancy Hanks, says he knows positively that but for the unfortunate accident at the half the mile would have been made in 2:08¼.

CRUSHED IN THE RUINS.

Nine Firemen Seriously Hurt in a Fire at Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Sept. 25.—At 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon fire broke out in the five-story frame building of Moore & Co's machine shop, located on Tenth avenue South and Third street, and in a few moments the building was destroyed. Nine firemen were badly injured by falling walls. Elevator C, the warehouses of the North American Beef Company, owned by Cudahy Brothers, and the old Ames homestead and other dwellings in the vicinity were burned. The total loss is about $300,000.

KILLED WITH A CORN KNIFE.

An Insane Man Murders His Wife and Her Sister and Commits Suicide.

PORTSMOUTH, O., Sept. 25.—Thomas Carr, a farmer living near Quincy, Ky., prompted by jealousy, killed his wife and sister-in-law with a corn cutter Thursday morning. He wounded his mother-in-law with the same instrument, so she will probably die, then slashed his own throat and was found dead leaning with his back against a post. Carr told his wife that he had three other living women and that he intended to kill her. Her sister and mother then came to the rescue and he went at them all with a corn knife.

A Millionaire's Bank.

NEW YORK, Sept. 26.—The Plaza bank, Plaza hotel, 58th street and Fifth avenue, will open for business October 15. It will be as distinctly a millionaires' bank as the Metropolitan club is a club of millionaires. I t has on its list of stock-holders a greater number of millionaires than any other similar institution in this country. The combined wealth of the men backing the new bank is probably $500,000,000. The wealthiest of its stock-holders are William Rockefeller, the oil king; C. P. Huntington, the railroad magnate and John J. Astor.

Can Not Be Odd Fellows.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 28.—In the sovereign grand lodge, I. O. O. F., the constitutional amendment providing for admission into the order of youths of 16 years was defeated by a vote of 107 to 58, the necessary three-fourths vote not having been obtained. The lodge also decided to postpone for a year consideration of the liquor question. The effect of this will be to leave saloon keepers eligible for a year to come.

An Extra Session Called.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Sept. 26.—Gov. Pattison has issued a call for the senate to convene in extra session in this city October 13. The governor thinks that the grave charges against Auditor General McCamant and State Treasurer Boyer in connection with the Bardsley stealings in Philadelphia should be acted upon by the senate with a view to their removal from office if guilty.

Three Killed by a Boiler Explosion.

TIONESTA, Pa., Sept. 25.—The boiler of Roslin's new sawmill at Bear creek, 12 miles from this place, exploded Thursday morning, completely demolishing the mill and instantly killing J. Elva Berlin, James Conger and Charles B. Crove, all well-known lumbermen. The bodies of Crove and Berlin were horribly mangled, while that of Conger, although blown fully 200 feet, was but little bruised.

Confessed a Double Murder.

DES MOINES, Ia., Sept. 25.—Two years ago James Robertson and his son Jasper, dairymen of Harlan, Ia., mysteriously disappeared. J. K. Cumberland, arrested in St. Joseph on suspicion, confessed that he murdered both men. He was taken to Council Bluffs for safe keeping, as great excitement prevails at Harlan.

A Warehouse Burned.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Sept. 26.—S. G. Webster's warehouse, the largest in the city, was burned Friday night. Loss estimated at $200,000.

UNCLE SAM'S BOYS.

Statistics of Interest from the Pension Bureau.

An Aggregate of $118,548,959.71 Paid to Pensioners During the Past Year—Operations of the Public Land Office.

MILLIONS PAID FOR PENSIONS.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 26.—The annual report of Commissioner Raum, of the pension bureau, submitted to the secretary of the interior, shows that on June 30, 1891, there were 676,160 pensioners borne on the rolls of the bureau, being 138,216 more than were carried on the rolls at the close of the last fiscal year. They are classified as follows: Widows and daughters of revolutionary soldiers, twenty-three; army invalid pensioners, 413,597; army widows, minor children, etc., 108,537; navy invalid pensioners, 5,449; navy widows, minor children, etc., 2,568; survivors of the war of 1812, 7,590; survivors of the Mexican war, 16,379; widows of soldiers of the Mexican war, 6,976.

The aggregate annual value of the 676,160 pensions on the roll June 30, 1891, was $89,247,200 and the average annual value of each pension was $189.99 and the average annual value of each pension under the act of June 27, 1890, was $121.51.

The total amount disbursed on account of pensions, expenses, etc., during the fiscal year was $118,548,959.71, as compared with $106,493,890.19 disbursed during the preceding fiscal year; so that it appears that 138,216 pensioners were added to the rolls during the fiscal year just closed, at an increased cost to the nation of $12,055,069 as compared with the expenditures for the previous fiscal year, and said expenditure includes $4,357,347 paid upon vouchers remaining unpaid at the close of the year.

The loss to the pension rolls by the death of widows and dependent mothers and fathers was at the rate of 35 per 1,000 in 1891. It is estimated that of the soldiers who served the country during the late war 1,004,658 were killed in battle or died during and since the war. On June 30 last 124,750 of these deceased soldiers were represented on the pension rolls by their widows or other dependents.

There are about 1,208,707 soldiers of the union now living, and 688,549 survivors who are not pensioned and 879,908 deceased soldiers not represented on the pension rolls.

The commissioner says that on an average about 30,000 pension certificates are being issued each month, and that during the current year he expects that as many as 350,000 claims will be adjudicated, for which he believes the present appropriation of $168,478,085 will be sufficient.

OPERATIONS OF THE LAND OFFICE.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 26.—Land Commissioner Carter has given out a report from which is taken the following, showing the vacant public lands in each of the public land states and territories.

HEIGHT OF CRUELTY.

Nervous women seldom receive the sympathy they deserve. While often the pictures of health, they are constantly ailing. To withhold sympathy from these unfortunates is the height of cruelty. They have a weak heart, causing shortness of breath, fluttering, pain in side, weak and hungry spells, and finally swelling of ankles, oppression, choking, smothering and dropsy. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is just the thing for them. For their nervousness, headache, weakness, etc., his Restorative Nervine is unequaled. Fine treatise on "Heart and Nervous Diseases" and marvellous testimonials free. Sold and guaranteed by Baker and Hall.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent;
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

OUR HOME.

Beloved! when we pass away
From this familiar spot,
I wonder who will come and stay
In the deserted cot.
Beneath these elm trees who will stand
And think that home is sweet,
When we have gone into that land
Where parted households meet?

Oh! who will walk beside the stream
Or sit beneath the pine,
To dream again life's little dream,
When 'tis not yours, nor mine.
Will some one fell my favorite tree,
Pull down the mossy wall,
The things so dear to you and me
Will they destroy them all?

Whose name will be on yonder door?
Whose pictures deck the walls?
Whose feet press roughly on the floor
Where your dear footstep falls?
And when the years to centuries swing,
Till all we love are dead,
Will any echo backward bring
The words that we have said?

I hope the brook down there will miss
An old familiar tune,
When in a happier home than this
We talk with all our own.
For oh! this little home is sweet,
Each corner is so dear,
Can Heaven without it be complete?
I would that Heaven were here.

I almost think that from the skies
If I this home can see,
I shall watch those with envious eyes
Who live here after me.
"Hush! hush! we shall not care," you say;
Dear heart! it may be true;
We shall not then, but oh, to-day
My life is here, with you.
—Julia H. May, in Good Housekeeping.

A SET OF VIEWS.

They Go to Make Up a Romance in Real Life.

I.

AN INTERIOR.

"Going to the seaside? In November!"

Emily had stooped to pick up her truant thimble, but now, like the good Æneas, she stood amazed, with eyes fixed on her companion as if she were an unexpected omen.

"Yes—it is odd," said Clara, gazing out of her window over the smooth western stretch of the lake; "but we must leave Chicago; and Uncle David has given mother and me the use of the town house in summer and the seaside cottage in winter. It's exceedingly good of him, but it is funny!"

"Dear! and Massachusetts! You'll be just lost to our crowd. Well, that rose is finished; how does it strike you?"

Clara felt chilled. Emily had been "no end sorry" that she and her mother had lost every dollar; had wept real tears when the time of separation had begun to seem near; and now she was smilingly asking her opinion of an embroidered rose.

With a girl's quick pride, however, she flung back two rising tears, and smiled responsively. "It is a dear—like you," she said; and no one would have guessed that she was disappointed. But in her heart was born a new need.

II.

TRAIN LEAVING CHICAGO.

"Hulloa! Brown! Wasn't aware you were aboard! Going east?"

"Good-morning, Mr. Willis; one doesn't go to California via the New York Central."

"Phew! Cynical bacteria in the air. You'd better come into the smoker and smoke them out."

There was something so irresistible in Harry Willis' good humor that most people yielded to it, more or less consciously. Some amiability is exasperating and seems to say: "See how cool I keep. Don't get excited!" But Harry seemed absolutely unaware that there was any sting in a spiteful remark. His mother had once said of him that he was like a lightning rod, a safe conductor for dangerous currents.

"That's all right!" Mr. Brown spoke less irritably, or, rather, as if his irritation had not been meant for Harry, but directed against the world in general. "But people do say so many things without any aim whatever—or with more aim than is apparent," he added, as if a new idea had struck him. "Did you really want to know if I took an east bound train in order to go east, or do you ask my destination?"

"Oh! pshaw!"—Harry made an effort to speak quite carelessly—"what's the use of shamming? You're bound for a certain point on the Massachusetts coast, and so am I. There's another point, figuratively speaking, that we're both bound for, too."

"Yes," responded Mr. Brown; "this train makes connections so that we reach Gloucester at eleven to-morrow morning. It's about five miles out to the Point of View. Which of us will get there first?"

"I think it would be a fair arrangement for us each to send Miss Klein a note, asking her for an interview. Then the choice of order would lie with her. See?"

"Very well, that's fair enough. But it's hardly necessary for us to torture each other in the meantime. I'll take the next section."

"Wait a minute. We will send the notes by mail when we reach Gloucester—start even?"

"Yes."

Mr. Brown strode into the next seat, and knit his black brows over a blank sheet of paper, on which he finally wrote with a lead-pencil which he handled quite firmly:

"DEAR MISS KLEIN: You promised me an answer this week. I could not be content to take it from the mails. I must see you. Please let me have an hour with you as soon as you can. Send to the Grand hotel. Very sincerely,
"M. H. BROWN."

Harry, after summoning the porter and contradicting each order once or twice, besides squandering a very unnecessary number of silver quarters, settled himself with a lap table and a stylographic pen, and wrote; the final version was finished just as the afternoon waned into gray:

"DEAR CLARA: This stylograph is disgraceful, but circumstances make it impossible to do say better. That bear of a—no, I beg his pardon—but a certain gentleman is running a race with me to see you. Of course it must be a fair race, and you must decide which shall have the first chance; but, Clara, don't you see I can't live without you? Do keep that in mind. But still, if you'd rather have him, why—I won't pain you by saying anything brutal—so good-by till we meet. You and your mother must be lonely out there—oh! dear little girl, give me the right to make you both comfortable. Send me just a little note, please, at the Grand. Yours in dire suspense, HARRY."

III.

THE POINT OF VIEW.

The cottage stood on a little perpendicular bluff, and commanded the bay on one side and the ocean on the other. As Clara sat out on the little three-cornered balcony and watched the water, she felt as if there were something ridiculously suggestive in her environment—Harry and Mr. Brown, the bay and the ocean, and she between them.

The sun was bright and warm for a November day, but the wind was fresh; and in one of its whiffs it carried off a little pile of letters that lay in the girl's lap, and whirled them over the sand.

She ran down, pursuing them; and, having captured them with some trouble, perched herself on a rock more shielded from the wind and began to reread some of the pages:

"Easily prejudiced in judgment, enthusiastic, uncritical, undiscriminating, but excessively loyal in love, determined in hate. Little artistic power. Good humor under circumstances irritating to most men; occasional spurts of bad temper in unexpected places."

"Stern and uncompromising in habits of thought and emotion; unyielding in will; gloomy disposition, tendency to extremes, arising from narrowness of view; self-centered and utterly unsympathetic; 'crabby' in action combining with a general independence a singular moral cowardice before the opposition of some one person—probably of the opposite sex!"

"Well, I suppose that's Harry and Mr. Brown. There's a sort of magnificence about Mr. Brown's air of reserve and importance, but I believe he is 'selfish and unsympathethic.' I wonder if it was a mean trick, getting their 'characters' read from their handwriting? It's a funny business, anyway, for that man—but he's remarkably clever at it; and fifty cents apiece—well it's cheap for the fun there is in it; but I don't know now which I like best. Mr. Brown is so distingue, and Harry is such a dear—but he's only a boy. Sometimes I think I love neither one, and sometimes I think I love them both."

IV.

ANOTHER BALCONY SCENE.

The afternoon was sunnier and milder than the morning, and only the Indian summer haze betrayed the fact that it was not June.

Clara was sitting again in the three-cornered balcony, and directly in front of her stood a young man, grasping the railing with twitching fingers. His hair was brown, but with more color in it than brown hair usually has; his eyes were bluer than most blue eyes; and his fair skin had a flush like a girl's.

"I asked you to come first," spoke Clara, calmly, "because I have made up my mind to say no to you."

Harry's color grew fiercer, and his hold of the railing tenser.

"Won't you tell me why?" he said, with a mixture of beseeching and bullying in his tone.

"Oh, you are so 'prejudiced,' so 'undiscriminating,' and you have 'occasional spurts of bad temper in unexpected places,'" laughed Clara. The imperiousness of his voice nettled her, and she would not answer seriously.

Not being aware of the "character read by chirography," Harry failed to appreciate the joke, and replied quite seriously:

"Well, I don't see how you can call a fellow undiscriminating that chooses you; and if I'm hot-headed, it's in a good cause."

"Yes, it said you were enthusiastic and loyal," Clara went on, smiling faintly.

"It said! Well, I'm obliged to it, whoever it is. But Clara, my love can't be for nothing when it's my life just given to you;—and you do love me—I can see it your eyes. Let me kiss you, and you'll be sure of it, yourself!"

And as Harry bent over her, Clara thraw her arms around his neck, and said:

"Yes, I believe I do."

V.

THE TAIL-PIECE.

The Indian summer had vanished with the afternoon, and it was November again; but the sea was not so sullen or so lonely as the man that stood at its edge and gazed with aimless directness on the vanishing line of the horizon.

"She is right. I am a bear, too harsh and unsympathetic to enter into her life. These fellows, like Willis, warm-blooded and gentle, always work it better with women. I'll just let them alone in the future."

And the last afterglow seemed to die out of the sky, as the tense figure strode away into the night.—J. M. Anderson, in N. Y. Independent.

A Skillful Flatterer.

Bob Van Slyck called on a Madison avenue family, in which there were two old maiden sisters of about fifty years of age. Van Slyck is an old friend of the family, and one of them being in a bantering mood said:

"Mr. Van Slyck, which of us do you think is the oldest?"

Van was in a dilemma. He did not like to hurt the feelings of either. He looked from one to the other, and asked:

"You want me to say which of you two girls is the oldest?"

"Yes."

"Neither of you looks older than the other. Each of you girls looks younger than the other."—Texas Siftings.

He Wanted to Know.

"Excuse me," said Mr. J. Hay Seed to the stranger who had so cordially shaken hands with him; "excuse my askin', but air you a regular professional or jist a amatoor?"

"Eh?"

"I mean air you a bunco man or merely a candidate for office?"—Indianapolis Journal.

The Laugh Was on Him.

She—How big did you say the hailstones were that you saw in Dakota?

He—Some of them were three inches in diameter. Why (trying to be funny), when I wanted to treat a girl to an ice all I had to do was to hold two plates out of the window.

She—But we are not in Dakota now.—Jury.

Beauty.

Young man, don't marry a girl because she is pretty. Will beauty satisfy you through the life-long journey, to the exclusion of those moral qualities, mind and heart? Will beauty alone cook your dinner, train your children and prove a true solace in the hours of weary toil and trial—the lot of every man on earth? The poet has said:

Lost, faded, broken, dead within an hour."

Wed not yourself to that which time will surely snatch from you, leaving the faded eye, withered cheek and vacant mind. Study well the character and capabilities of your choice. See to it that she possesses a mind capable of grasping the ordinary questions of the day; and that a portion of her time is spent in reading something besides fashion notes and novels. And above all, be assured that she is well disciplined in those virtues without which, home is wretched. Sweetness of temper is not incompatible with firmness or moral courage, and a woman possessing these attributes will not belong to the vapid, "wishy-washy" sort; but on the contrary the class who develop into noble wives and mothers, faithful in friendship, and devout Christians, capable of exerting both at home and in society, the best of an influence for the right and for virtue.

If to these high and independent qualities is added beauty, then your choice is indeed blessed of God. Take such a one to your heart, and while loving and cherishing, fail not to prove yourself worthy to be the possessor of such a priceless gem.

On one occasion while the English naturalist Gould was wandering along the banks of the Thames with a party of friends, a rare laugh was created at his expense. He had climbed a tree for the purpose of exploring the contents of a nest. On suddenly looking down at a hollow formed by two branches of the tree, and which at the time contained a pool of water, he exclaimed: "As I'm a living man, if there is not a large owl here in this hole, looking straight at me." The excitement was intense, but was instantly turned to a shout of merriment, when the naturalist on putting down his hand to seize the supposed owl, discovered that it was simply the reflection of his own image in the water.

A terrible triple murder took place at Bay Port in which three Indians—John, Dan and Bill Squanos—were killed. The men were in a saloon where they got into a quarrel with Charles Atherton. A man named Bradshaw was also mixed up in the affair. The latter struck John Squanos on the head, crushing his skull. The other Indians in company with Atherton started for their cabins, a mile distant, and their dead bodies were found in their homes.

Health in Michigan.

Reports to the state board of health by sixty-eight observers in different parts of the state for the week ended September 19 indicated that typhoid fever, inflammation of the brain, cerebro-spinal meningitis and measles increased, and typhod-malarial fever, cholera morbus and scarlet fever decreased in area of prevalence. Diphtheria was reported at thirty-three places, scarlet fever at twenty-seven places, typhoid fever at sixty-eight and measles at nine places.

Hasn't a Hair on Its Body.

There was on exhibition at Menominee a remarkable freak in the shape of a hairless horse. The beast is 6 years old and hasn't the sign of a hair on its body. The horse is splendidly built and was foaled on the farm of a Belgian near Sturgeon Bay, Wis. For several years after its birth crops failed in the vicinity and the superstitious foreigners concluded that the hairless horse was a "Hoodoo." Menominee parties obtained it for $40 and have been offered $5,000.

A Michigan Skunk Farm.

A skunk farm has just come to light in Jackson county. The gentleman who runs the skunkery is T. P. Vining, of Columbia township. He says that it it is easier, pays better and is pleasanter than plowing. The skunkateer has started breeding with five female skunks. He figures that by the old problem, relative to the nails in the horseshoe, he will have in five years 10,239 skunks, whose skins will be worth to him $17,958.25.

Crawled Into a Tree and Died.

A party of hunters discovered the badly decomposed body of a man hidden in the hollow of a fallen tree on Elander Macle's farm, near Woodmer cemetery. Beside the body lay a five-chamber revolver, containing four exploded shells. The corpse was clad in a light colored coat and vest and striped pantaloons. A slouch hat was crushed down over his head. A pair of kid gloves, a pipe and some tobacco were in the pockets.

Three Miners Killed.

Peter Folleste, John Gilbert and Eric Jarvoia were taking down two pillars of ore directly over the mouth of No. 6 shaft at the Republic mine near Marquette when the ground gave way beneath them and they went headlong down the shaft. Another fall of ground from the foot wall covered the shaft again. It would be weeks before the bodies could be recovered as this shaft was a wreck from the recent fire.

About twenty kegs of cider blew up Tuesday night at the cider mill. The preparation failed to hold the cider and it began to work, with the above result.—Clinton Local.

Under the act passed by the last Legislature, a person living outside a district, but paying taxes inside, may send his children to school and deduct the amount of school tax from the tuition.

The street car conductors on the Adrian electric railway were kept more than busy during the fair attending to the travelling public. Thursday the number of persons carried by two cars was 5,234.

Will Burch, of this city, was found by Sheriff Baldwin in Toledo and brought here Monday accused of robbing Wesley's hat store. The young man plead guilty and will stand the consequences.—Messenger.

The Adrian and Jackson fairs are both being held this week, and naturally enough, Adrian is drawing the largest crowd from here. Why? Because Adrian advertised here and Jackson didn't.—Brooklyn Exponent.

The attempt to form a stock company for the manufacture of Church Bros.' hydraulic wind mill regulator has proven gratifyingly successful, the required $38,000 stock (3,800 shares at $10 each) having been fully subscribed. Now the work of regular organization will actively proceed.—Morenci Observer.

The Detroit Tribune remarks that the hot weather which has prevailed for ten days past in almost every section of the country has probably been duplicated but once in the last twenty years at this season. Stebbins at the County fair, to be given to the person who guessed the nearest to the number of chairs which he kept in stock, was given to Mrs. Brown, of Blissfield, whose guess was 1,221. The number of chairs by actual count was 1,218. The guesses ranged from 25 to 50,000.

The old Tecumseh fair association is about to renew its grip on life. It was born very young, several years ago, and soon fell into a comatose state. Spasmodic jerks of its legs indicate that an awakening will take place. Probably not in time to be of any use to itself this fall, but subscriptions to its stock are being taken and next year Tecumseh may have a fair.—Adrian Press.

We see from our exchanges that a small worm is denuding the forest trees of their foliage in many parts of the state. The woods near the West Michigan Fair grounds at Grand Rapids are stripped as bare of leaves as though in midwinter, and a little observation proves that the worm is getting in its destructive work in the vicinity of Addison.—Addison Courier.

Burt Walker is surely a "dare-devil." He made a most risky ascension at Adrian Thursday night, thousands witnessing it. The balloon was badly burnt before the start was made, but nevertheless he grabbed the trapeze and shouted "Let 'er go!" A light breeze was blowing and he floated two miles north of the city before dropping. The trip was illuminated by Roman candles, which he fired during the ascension.

An exchange talks good sound sense as follows: "It is a duty, and a solemn duty, that every parent owes to his child to see that that child is in school. The street is a school of vice and crime, and those educated therein soon become criminals. It is a sad fact to notice that in spite of good free schools and teachers, the boon of education is passed by with indifference. Let every child of school age be in school where he ought to be."

The successful establishment and holding of the Dundee fair teaches our citizens that they can have anything in the line of improvements or business enterprises that they desire and are willing to work for with a determination to succeed. How easy a large canning factory might be secured, with capital ample for a most prosperous and successful business, if a proper effort was made therefor. A large canning factory in Dundee would be one of the most valuable enterprises that can be established.—Dundee Reporter.

A correspondent writes to ask us whether the members of the Hudson band are always as attentive to the ladies as they were at the picnic last Saturday. We think we speak truly in saying "yes," the boys are ardent lovers; they love their horns, they love a pair of laughing eyes, and above all, they love to eat watermelon. A picnic is just what pleases them.—Hudson Post.

Mr. Collins, who resides a few miles south of Adrian, was in the city one day last week, with his two children. While stopping at the fountain in front of the South Branch school house to water his horse, the animal became frightened and ran away, tearing the buggy to pieces and injuring Mr. Collins quite severely. The children escaped with a few bruises. Mr. Collins talks of bringing suit against the city for damages, as he claims the accident was caused by some hooks about the fountain catching the bridle rein and pulling the bridle off, thus frightening the horse.—Messenger.

How they Meet and Part.

A gentleman lately took down verbatim the conversation of two fashionable ladies during a morning call—viz: "How do you do, dear?" "Pretty well, thank, you." (They kiss.) "How have you been this age?" "Pretty well. How have you been?" "Very well, thank you." "Pleasant to-day." "Yes, very bright, but had a shower yesterday." "All your family quite well?" "Quite well, thanks. How is yours?" "Oh, very well, thank you." "Have you seen Mary B. lately?" "No, but I have seen Susan C." "You don't say so! Is she quite well?" "Yes, very well, I believe." (Rising.) "Must you go?" "Yes, indeed; I have seven calls to make." "Do call again soon." "Thank you; but you don't come near me once in an age." "Oh, you shouldn't say so, dear; I'm sure I'm very good." "Good bye." "Good bye, dear."—Exchange.

"Yes! and after writing that the gentleman discovered the strain upon his mental faculties had been so severe, he went out to "brace up." Just as he reached his destination, met a friend from out of town, when the following conversation was overheard and taken down by the writer, as an example for women, of men's "wit and wisdom." "Hello! old fellow, how are you?" (They shake.) "First rate, how are you?" "Tip-top!" "When dy'e get in?" "Just now." "Have something?" (significantly.) "Well—yes, don't care-fi do." (They step into a saloon, after cautiously looking around to make sure no outsiders are about, to see they are breaking their pledge—pause—they emerge, innocently wiping their mouths, before putting into them their lighted cigars, and being "primed," resume:) "How's yer folks?" "All well; how's yours?" "All flourishing now; youngest boy had diphtheria, but all right now." "Crops good up your way?" "Well, yes, pretty fair." "How do politics look?" "Bad—very bad—all democrats up our way; big democratic majority. (Takes out his watch.) Thunder! ten minutes to 12,—must be off—got to see a man at 12." "Can't you come up to the house and take dinner?" "No, guess not to-day—got several pressing business engagements. Good-bye." "Good-bye." They again wring hands, and then rush away from each other as if fearing they might have to stand another treat.

The life of a true Christian is like a beautiful river; it flows on in a steady, even course the storms of life may ruffle its surface, but the deep undercurrent moves on undisturbed.

W. Lenardson & Son sold 101 cases of eggs to C. E. Williamson Monday. That represents some American home industry on the part of our feathered providers at least, and eggs are not as cheap as they might be, either, as last year they were only a shilling at this time. What can we say to that? Let our farmers here make the five cents every time.

Our citizens were quite surprised the other evening at the first trip of the Ridgeway electric motor to Britton. Some said it was only a box car, but we think it must have been our neighbors coming down to see "The Fireman" in their special car. They got quite a gait on, however, to get here a week before time, but it is a good plan to come early, as the house will be crowded clear to the galleries.

THE DANGER SIGNAL.

When nature raises the flag of distress in the shape of sores, ulcers, boils, pimples and blotches, the signal should be promptly heeded. As cities threatened with disease are disinfected, so should the human system be treated. No more powerful or more successful disinfectant and purifier than S. S. S. has ever been discovered. It has accomplished wonderful results, and there are thousands of people in this country to-day who regard the proprietors of S. S. S. as benefactors. What it has already accomplished it will continue to accomplish. It is already established as a staple family medicine.

I can recommend Ely's Cream Balm to all sufferers from dry catarrh from personal experience.—Michael Herr, Pharmacist, Denver.

The stakes in the American Derby that year are to be $500,000; in the "Queen Isabella" one mile for three-year-old fillies, $25,000; in the "Columbus Handicap" for three-year-olds and upwards, $25,000; in a race for two-year-olds, $25,000; and large stakes will be provided for a number of other races. The track is close by the World's Fair grounds.

There are three articles in the Atlantic for the month of October to which the reader will at once turn. First to Oliver Wendell Holmes's tribute to James Russell Lowell, a poem touching alike for the public sentiment of grief that it expresses as well as for the personal note of sorrow at the loss of a friend and fellow-poet. The next article, Henry Stone's account of General Thomas, will be of great interest to the many people who like and the few who did not like, the much talked-about paper on General Sherman by Mr. John C. Ropes. The third contribution which will command attention is the paper by Colonel Thomas Wentworth Higginson on "Emily Dickinson's Letters."

In its November number the Cosmopolitan will publish a series of letters writen by Gen. W. T. Sherman to his young daughters, between the years 1859 and 1865 and covering most of the important events of the war of secession. These letters present graphic pictures of a great soldier amid some of the stirring scenes in which he was a giant figure, and in them the patriotic spirit of the Federal general is seen to have been most attractively tempered by a strong affection for the Southern people. The fraternal feeling which glows in these letters is in refreshing contrast to the sectional bitterness which characterised the period, and they will constitute an interesting and important contribution to the literature of the war.

H. M. S. PINAFORE.

A Splendid Entertainment for the Benefit of the Library Association.

Among all the light comical operas, which have been produced in recent years, none have gained a stronger hold upon the popular heart than Pinafore. It has become well known in all smaller towns and cities and has had a wonderful run in all large cities, both in America and Europe. The full name, "Her Majesty's Ship Pinafore," is seldom seen in print, but the play has been dubbed "H. M. S. Pinafore" for short; and by that nickname it is universally known.

The Library Association have been in the habit of getting up one or two public benefits every winter and having an opportunity to secure the assistance of Mr. and Mrs. Gruendler, of Cleveland, they concluded to give our citizens a taste of comic opera. The play is admirably adapted to amateur talent. The scenery is within the compass of an ordinary theater, and the characters can be mastered by good singers in almost any town. At the same time the plot and details are sufficiently difficult to challenge the best efforts of those who engage in it. Rehearsals were begun about ten days ago and the opera was presented last Tuesday evening at the opera house. The play was cast with rare tact and good judgment; the four leading gentlemen characters were taken by persons from abroad who had previously assumed the same role elsewhere. The leading lady character was taken by Mrs. Gruendler. The remaining characters and the chorus were made up from home talent. The ship scene, which was remarkably true to life, remained as the stage setting through the entire play. The gentlemen comprising the chorus were all attired in sailor suits, consisting of a blue blouse, white pantaloons and flat top cap. The ladies were dressed in light costumes of different styles.

Prof. Gruendler himself presided at the piano. He is not only a first-class pianist but also an excellent drill master, and these qualifications combined form a superior operatic manager. The play was thoroughly rehearsed and both acts were promptly played without the least hitch to mar the program. Mr. Robert Sutton acted Sir Joseph Porter with proper ease and dignity. Mr. Chas. Wolcott as Capt. Corcoran acted the stern father to perfection. Ralph Rackstraw, the young lover, was finely portrayed by Mr. Fred Thatcher. The saucy, awkward, Dick Deadeye could'nt have been better carried by a professional than it was by Mr. Sanford Hunt. Bill Bobstay, the boat swain, was very nicely handled by Mr. Harry Tansley, and the same can be said of Mr. Will Eccles, in his role of Bob Becket, the boatswain's mate. Mr. Levi Hayden and Mr. Bert Baker filled their parts admirably as sergeants of marines. Florence Eccles was just cute as the little midshipmite. Miss Grace Stevens as Josephine, the Captain's daughter, surprised her friends. She has a voice of rare melody and softness, which captivated the audience, and she carried the heroine's part with the tact and good taste of an old experienced singer. Miss Etta Thorpe added new laurels to her previous reputation, as Hebe, Sir Joseph's cousin, and her part was beautifully rendered. No words can suffice to describe Little Buttercup, the character assumed by Mrs. Gruendler. Miss Cora Ferris was a fine singer when she lived in Brooklyn before her marriage and she has improved of late years. She personified the rollicking, happy boat woman in a superb manner, and was the central figure of the entire play. The choruses were made up of about twenty young men and an equal number of young ladies, comprising the very best singers of Tecumseh and these general passages were sang in a manner that carried the audience by storm. The interest was kept up to the highest pitch from the rise of the curtain to the close of the last act. We do not utter a mere formal compliment, but state the simple truth in saying, that in the line of musical dramas it was the finest entertainment ever given in the Tecumseh opera house. The house was packed and the auditors were richly rewarded for their time and money expended. The expenses were quite heavy, but the net proceeds amounted to about $85.00.

The U. S. Pension office is again in a turmoil. And it is likely to remain in a turmoil as long as Commissioner Raum remains at the head of the Bureau.

Water has been selling in Oklahoma at twenty-five cents a drink. This is pretty rough on the fellows who have been accustomed at home to paying only five cents for a schooner of beer.

Gov. David B. Hill and Jones, "who pays the freight," are at loggerheads down in New York. If the effect would be to eliminate Gov. Hill from national politics it will be a happy stroke for the New York Democracy.

Cincinnati averages things up in a delightful manner. No sooner was it announced that every sample of milk analyzed in the city contained more or less water than a complaint was posted that its beer was suffering from the same complaint.

The wool grower is beginning to ascertain the fact that protection does not protect. He was promised a higher price for his wool by the passage of the McKinley law. He is actually receiving a lower price for his wool, while woolen goods are higher than before.

Gov. Campbell was very happy in answering Mr. Hoar's claim that the increase of duty on certain farming implements had made them cheaper. The Governor replied by asking this simple question: "How high would the tariff have to be to enable you to get your tools free?"

The Chicago Times says: "A New York newspaper has discovered that opium is sold on almost every street corner in that city. To read the editorial columns of several of the New York papers one would think that the editorial writers of Gotham were taking advantage of this situation.

In New York and Ohio the Republicans have it in their power to shift the campaign from the tariff to local issues, much to their advantage. But in Iowa they have no such alternative. They are pinned down to the tariff issue in that state. Gov. Boies is making a rattling campaign with fair prospects of a re-election.

The Chicago Times gives currency to this rumor, which is doubtless founded on fact: "It is now reported, with some measure of plausibility, that the retirement of Judge Cooley from the Interstate Commerce Commission was due not so much to failing health as to his disgust with the President's policy of making the commission a body of practical politicians rather than men fit to adjudicate upon railway law.

The Detroit Free Press says: "The landing of 95,000 bushels of wheat at Liverpool in unbroken bulk from Chicago is an interesting event in the history of international transportation. It saves elevator charges at Buffalo, canal or railroad freights to the seaboard and the heavy terminal charges there. If the exploit of the Wetmore could be repeated safely and reliably throughout the season of navigation there would certainly be a field for a fleet of such vessels, and the effect upon the Liverpool wheat market would be pronounced. The Wetmore is a credit to Michigan enterprise and to the skill of her builders.

The St. Louis Republic says: "The cotton growers have been caught this year in the McKinley trap, a-coming and a-going. They have to pay more for staple grades of bleached and unbleached cotton goods as a result of increased duties; and they get less for their raw cotton, largely because the proscriptive tariff has helped to demoralize the business of Europe. And yet, eloquent Republican orators are always climbing upon the stump and shaking the bloody shirt at the cotton growers because they won't vote the Republican ticket! If Washington legislation were framed to crush and rot New England in the same way, there would be loud threats of secession and war in the Northeast Corner.

"So you burned all of Miss Jilton's letters? They must have made a very hot fire." "No; I can assure you they did not. They produced simply stationery temperature."

THE TARIFF AND THE FARMER.

What a Protectionist Professor Thinks on That Subject. Fresh Adulation That the Tariff Hurts the Farmer—Says It Must Be "Improved"—Let Robert P. Porter Consider.

Prof. E. J. James, of the university of Pennsylvania, who enjoys the distinction of being one of the very few able teachers of political economy in this country who are advocates of the protective system, has recently made an address before the American Association for the Advancement of Science on the subject of "Taxation and the Farmer."

This protectionist professor has something to say on the farming situation which does not exactly square with Robert P. Porter's extravagant and foolish claim that the former gets more advantage from protection than any other class. Prof. James, on the other hand, sees that the farmer is falling behind in the race for wealth and comfort. He says:

The remarkable phenomena occurring in connection with the Farmers' Alliance movement shows at once how deeply the iron has entered into the soul of the American farmer, and how thoroughly he has become aware that for some reason or other he is not keeping pace in his material, intellectual and social progress with other classes in the community.

Porter's nonsense about the farmer's great advantages over other people is effectually exploded in the following words:

As a matter of fact the wealth of the United States is flowing away from its farms into its factories and railroads, from the country into the city, from the rural into the urban districts. The policy of our railroad companies has borne hard upon the individual farmer and upon the farmer as a class. It has altered all the conditions of agriculture in many sections of the country, and in nearly all of them in such a way as needlessly to burden and embarrass the farmer. Our system of taxation as a whole rests most heavily upon the farmer. There is little doubt that under the method of a general property tax, now prevailing in this country, the rural district is relatively speaking, far more heavily taxed than the city, the farmer pays more than the merchant or the railroad owner.

The American farmer has a grievance—a real and true grievance—one that will not become less by pooh poohing it, but one which must be carefully studied by students of economics and statistics to ascertain, if possible, how far it is justified and whether it can be remedied, and, if so, by what means.

Coming down to the tariff question itself this Pennsylvania protectionist professor shows that he is not blinded by the delusions which prevail among nearly all other protectionists. He goes on:

Nor is there any doubt that the financial policy of the country, using that term in the broadest sense, as including the whole system of monetary transactions, built up by the combination of government action and private initiative, discriminates directly and keenly against the farmer and the farming class, or at least that it discriminates in favor of other classes, which amounts to the same thing. Nor can it be said that the tariff policy of the country has been managed at least directly with an eye as much to the farmer's interest as to that of other classes. I am aware that this is a much mooted question, but I do not believe that anyone who has taken pains to study our tariffs will claim that the farmers, as a class, have had such immediate influence in fixing given rates of duty as the manufacturer, for example.

Notwithstanding the immediate bright outlook for the farmer in this year's large crops and good prices, Prof. James concludes that "the American farmer is in a bad way and likely to be in a worse one."

Among the remedies he suggests are the following:

The system of taxation must be readjusted and the farmer relieved of unjust burdens. The tariff must be improved; the banking and general monetary policy of the country changed in many respects.

Pretty good for a protectionist professor.

ENGLAND'S OLD CLOTHES.

Our So-Called "American System" of Protection Is an Old English Idea Now Discarded.

There never was a greater misuse of a name than to call protection the "American system." The fact is, as every intelligent man knows, that England followed this system long before it was ever introduced into the United States and abandoned it only forty or fifty years ago.

A. B. Farquhar, the great free trade manufacturer of agricultural machinery at York, Pa., has called attention to this matter in the following words:

"Fifteen thousand men starved to death in the West India islands near our coast, for want of food, that our citizens were anxious to sell them but could not deliver on account of the custom houses, and it was at this period that Lord Sheffield opposed in the English parliament an appropriation for putting down the pirates of the Mediterranean, upon the ground that they injured American commerce more than they did British; and certain counties in the neighborhood of London petitioned parliament against the extension of the turnpike roads in the more distant counties, on the ground that this would enable other producers to compete in the markets of London, leaving them less profit.

"But the world has grown since then. Newspapers, steam and electricity have united the nations of the earth in a common brotherhood of mutual interests; but who can read the petition of these English countrymen and not be reminded that the 'American' system of protection is the same thing that was prevalent in Britain over a century ago, and that the garments we are asked to strut about in are nothing but her cast-off old clothes. How few the changes necessary to fit this petition into harangue by James G. Blaine, or a New York Tribune editorial. And when will our fellow-citizens learn no longer to vaunt as American a foible old as human folly?"

ABOUT WAGES.

How Wages Have Risen in England—Our Wages Under Protection Have Gone Down in Some Places—A Case For Protectionist Lying.

That wages in general are lower in England than in the United States is a well known fact; but it is one which gives our protectionists occasion for much downright lying. They pretend that it is the system of "British free trade" which has made wages lower in England than here; whereas the fact is that wages have not been made lower in England at all, but have constantly tended upward since England adopted her present policy.

A recent session of the Royal Commission of Labor in London was devoted to an examination into the condition of labor in the cotton spinning and weaving industry. Among the many witnesses examined was Mr. Albert Simpson, of Preston, a cotton spinner, cotton manufacturer and East India merchant, who said that during the last thirty-five years the wages of cotton operatives had increased from 25 to 50 per cent., and at the same time a fall in the price of commodities had taken place.

There is doubtless much poverty among the working classes in England; but the above statement does not look as if "British free trade" had any part in causing that poverty. It is not enough for our protectionists to point out that wages in England are low; the decisive fact is that wages there are becoming higher.

But how is it with us? Wages have gone up here to some extent in thirty years, but not so much as the wages of the English cotton spinners and weavers just referred to; and in some states, where protected industries are most numerous, wages have actually gone down. Here, for example, are the wages in the chief industries of Massachusetts in 1860 and 1880, as given by Carroll D. Wright in his report for 1883 as labor commissioner for the state of Massachusetts:

	Average Weekly Wages
	1860.	1880.
Boots and shoes	$ 1 42	$ 9.10
Carpets	6.[illegible]	5.87
Clothing	8.26	8.81
Cottons	6.50	7.37
Furniture	11.77	9.95
Leather	10.01	9.93
Linen and jute	4.63	4.82
Paper	8.63	8.17
Silk	5.[illegible]1	5.87
Worsteds	6.10	5.66
Average in all industries	$8.00	$7.52

From this table it will be seen that wages in the cotton industry rose from $6.50 to only $7.37 in twenty years, or only 13 per cent., against a rise of from 25 to 50 per cent. in England in thirty-five years. But this official report shows that wages in the ten leading industries of Massachusetts were actually lower by 6 per cent. in 1880 than in 1860, before high protection began.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.

A Case Showing the Falsity of the "Infant Industry" Argument—Rapid Growth of Southern Cotton Manufacture.

One of the main arguments put forth in behalf of protection is the so-called "infant industry" argument, that manufacturing enterprises cannot spring up in a new country in competition with those well established and in successful operation in older countries, unless these young enterprises are protected from such competition.

The falsity of this assertion is now being proved in our own country in a most conspicuous case, that of cotton manufacturing in the south. During the past ten years the south's cotton manufactures have more than trebled the number of spindles, showing an increase from 667,000 to 2,130,000. The gain in the number of spindles there has been very much greater than the gain in the country at large, the total number of spindles in the United States being now 15,497,302, against 10,653,435 in 1880. The rate of increase in the country at large was 45 per cent., while that for the south alone was 223 per cent.

But, the protectionist will ask, what has all this to do with the infant industry argument? Are not the cotton mills of the south protected just as much as those of the north?

From foreign competition, yes; but the competition which the cotton mills of the south have had to meet has come, not from across the ocean, but from northern mills. This is the only competition which needs to be taken account of in this case, since no cotton goods of the kinds made in the south are imported. The young cotton mills of the south have had to compete with the long-established mills of the north and with these alone; yet they have much more than held their own in the struggle. They have succeeded in wresting the spinning and weaving of coarser goods from the north almost entirely, and are now turning their attention to the production of the finer grades of goods.

And this has all been accomplished without a particle of protection against their strong northern rivals.

Thus we are proving in our own country the shallowness and falsity of the "infant industry" argument.

Smuggling Pearl Buttons.

The enormous McKinley duty on pearl buttons has given rise to efforts to evade its payment. Button forms, or buttons finished as to everything but the boring of the eyes, have been brought in under the claim that these were not buttons and could not be taxed as such. The matter, however, has been decided by the officials, and button forms must now pay the same duty as the finished buttons.

The old duty on pearl buttons was 25 per cent.; the McKinley compound duty is equal to 400 per cent. on the cheapest buttons.

With such an enormous duty the temptation to smuggle becomes very great. A trade journal warns the customs authorities to "look out for buttons masquerading in the shape of potatoes and stealing over the border in other disguises." The same authority points out how great the temptation to smuggle is, since "the article in question is so portable, and the gains from illicit entry are so large."

But how could there be any temptation to smuggle if the domestic manufacturers had carried out their promise made before the McKinley committee that "home competition will insure low prices to purchasers and consumers of our products?"

By the way, [illegible] buttons such a harmful article that the very poorest American consumer must be made to pay a tax of four dollars on every dollar's worth of them used?

—The aggregate capital represented by the various "trusts" in the United States amounts to more than $2,000,000,000, or more than two-thirds of our entire manufacturing capital.—N. Y. Merchants' Review.

Ben Butterworth on the Tariff.

Ex-Congressman Butterworth returns from Europe more than ever convinced that the Republican party made a mistake when it boosted the "import taxes" under McKinley's leadership.

"My travels in Europe," he said, "have satisfied me that we as a people have been too much given to retrospection. We have thought so much about ourselves that we have forgotten the remainder of the world.

"We have overlooked the fact that throughout Europe, in Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Hungary, even in Russia and Poland there is unrest and a resulting spirit of change, of progress. Every day rulers and leaders are called upon to face changed conditions.

"They are on the alert to solve new questions growing out of these conditions. Steam and electricity are everywhere bringing the men of different nations closer together, and this is true not only in commerce, but in thought and sympathy.

"The horizons of rulers and subjects alike are no longer confined to the borders of their own countries. The world is becoming less tribal and more and more a believer in the broad humanity of the world, a universal brotherhood.

"When we go abroad we see that over there they look upon this republic as the one nation which is standing rather aloof from this movement that is slowly, silently going on everywhere else.

"We are, in their opinion, more exclusive, more selfish than we ought to be; and when they asked if it was not illogical in us to put another layer on our tariff wall, and then ask the nations of the world to come to us with their wares for display, we could not help seeing the point.

"It is my belief, at least my hope, that we have gone as far as we shall ever go in that direction. We must get in step with the movement of the world.

"I do not believe the Republican party will ever pass another McKinley tariff bill."

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT

THE SINGLE TAX WEDGE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

VANCOUVER, B. C., August 31, 1891.—The single tax cause in British Columbia is by no means at a stand still, though seldom heard from; but on the contrary, is becoming a strong factor in shaping public opinion and influencing the provincial and municipal governments.

Indeed, during the present year our cause may be said to have gained some decided and signal victories, both in the legislature and in our various municipalities.

A year ago all the public lands at the disposal of the provincial government were withdrawn from sale, in consequence of the strong pressure brought to bear on the executive, resulting from the agitation showing how the public domain was being monopolized by mere speculators, thus checking the settlement and development of the country, producing general stagnation and dull times. The consequence was that at the last session of the provincial parliament, after a hard fight with the "moss-backs," an amended land act was passed with a clause changing the wild land tax from eight cents per acre to two per cent. ad valorem. As some of this wild land has become very valuable, though unimproved, the difference is no small one. The significant fact about this is, that the tax is not on the land as formerly, but on its value, and the recognition of this principle in taxation is the first step towards a total reversion of the land policy in this province and probably throughout the Dominion.

An important amendment has also been made to the pre-emption law. Before this all that was needed to get a deed for a pre-emption of 160 acres was to employ an "agent" (generally Chinaman) to burn off a few acres, and then get two witnesses to swear in the application that $80 worth of improvements had been done on the claim. The patent was then issued on payment of one dollar per acre. Now, in addition to the "improvements" a house must be erected, and cultivation and residence proved before a patent is granted. This alteration has effectually put a stop to speculators pre-empting land, selling it, and then repeating the performance.

An act was also passed authorizing municipalities to levy a tax on land within their jurisdiction up to two and a half per cent., and permitting the taxing of improvements to be optional.

Here, again, is the thin edge of the single tax wedge that before long will split and break up speculation in town lots, the curse of every city and village on this coast. As a result of this enactment, the municipalities of Surrey and Langley have already adopted the exemption of improvements from taxation, and as these two districts are chiefly agricultural, the farmers are to be congratulated for their clear sightedness in taking the initative in this important movement, and for knowing in which direction their best interests lie. It is only a question of a very little time when the taxing of improvements anywhere in British Columbia will be very much reduced or abolished altogether.

So far as this city is concerned, the influence of pronounced single taxers, and the growing body of those who dimly observe a glimmer of the "cat," is producing a marked effect. A year or two ago our best streets were cheerfully given away for nothing to an electric street railway company. Just now there is another railway company building a track—at the expense of the property owners along the line—to connect the cities of New Westminster and Vancouver. The company wished this city to grant them "terminal facilities." This means three miles of streets to be opened and graded free, the company deciding on the route which offered it the largest bonus. The scheme of this enterprising corporation to capture a valuable franchise—as the possession of these streets in a few years would undoubtedly be—was promptly squelched by the city council. An arrangement has now been concluded between the city and the company whereby the latter get their terminal facilities, but the city retains full control of the streets, with power to tax the company for their use, and the expense in opening and grading them. This agreement will be submitted to and voted on by the taxpayers next month, and no doubt will be carried with little opposition.

A by-law for the city to purchase the water works will be voted for at the same time; and, as the terms are advantageous to the city, there are small fears of it, too, being passed.

The present Electric Light and Street Railway Co. has been approached with a view to the city buying it out also; so the probabilities are that before long Vancouver will own and operate its water works, electric light and street railway. There has been some hard and persistent fighting in the council to accomplish this much, and to our single tax friends there, headed by Alderman Brown, the credit and honors are directly due.

We have a powerful friend and ally in our morning paper, the News-Advertiser. It is on the people's side in all municipal matters, and admits single tax communications freely to its columns. Its editor, Mr. F. C. Cotton, is our senior member to the local legislature and has done excellent service there in helping to frame and pass the acts referred to. Altogether we feel encouraged by what has been done, and feel hopeful for the future. That our influence is enlarging and being felt in quarters that generally pretend to ignore it, is evidenced by the remark of a well known large real estate owner and speculator here, who, in answer to a friend's inquiry as to how things were going with him, replied: "Oh, there's too many of those d——d single tax fellows around here to suit me."—W. A. Wilson, in the Standard.

THE best and surest subject of taxation is the thing that perforce stays in one place; that is land.—N. Y. Sun.

Rent as Part of Cost.

In analyzing the cost of producing commodities, rent is often named as an element. It is said, for example, that cost includes wages of labor, wear and tear of capital, interest on capital, taxes, interest on taxes, and rent. This is a mistake, and, for single tax advocates, a dangerous one to make. If rent were an element of cost it would enter into the price of commodities, thus shifting taxes on rent to the consumer; and a shrewd adversary, by pointing out the deduction, might easily confuse the single tax advocate who was guilty of this false analysis.

A little reflection will make it perfectly clear that rent is no part either of cost or price. The only distinctive elements of cost are wages of labor and, using the term in its original signification, blackmail. The former includes wear and tear of capital and interest on capital; the latter includes taxes on labor, interest on such taxes, and the exactions of monopoly. But normal rent is neither wages nor blackmail. It is the difference in value between the least profitable opportunities to which labor resorts, and better opportunities. It is not part of cost, because at this least productive point there is no rent; and it does not enter into price, because price is determined by cost of production.

The farmer who tills soil naturally fertile gets in the same market no more for his grain, bushel for bushel, than the farmer who produces equally good grain from less prolific soil; his advantage is his ability to produce more grain with equal labor, and the value of this advantage determines the difference in rent between the two farms. The merchant who occupies a choice location in the heart of his business district can charge no more for the same goods than one whose store is on cheaper ground; his advantage is his ability to sell more goods in given time and with given labor, and this advantage determines the difference in rent between the two places. The smoker who buys his cigar where rents are high pays no more, if as much, than one who buys the same quality of cigar where rents are low. The higher rents of the former place are paid, not by means of higher prices, but in consequences of quicker sales. Wages, house hire, value of furniture and interest are lower, relative to the volume of business done, in places of high rents than in places of low rents; and the accumulation of these advantages constitutes the difference in rent.

It is obvious that rent in these illustrations is no part either of cost or price. Supposing the poorer land in all the illustrations to command no rent, rent can not possibly be part of the cost of producing from it, or selling on it; and as produce sells at cost (cost of selling included), rent can be no part of the price. And since this is so of produce from the poorer land and of goods sold at the poorer locations, it must be so of those produced from and sold at the better. Or, as equal commodities sell in the same market at equal price, rent can not enter into the price of one unless it enters into the price of all; but it does not enter into the price of produce from land bearing no rent, and, therefore, it can not enter into the price of land bearing rent. And, inasmuch as no product can sell continuously below cost, the absence of rent as an element of price proves its absence as an element of cost. For simplicity, we suppose the poorer opportunities in these illustrations to be rent free; but the principle would be the same if they were not, provided they commanded lower rent than the better opportunities, as they undoubtedly would.

Mr. Edward Atkinson, of Boston, is one of the men who makes this mistake of regarding rent as an element of cost, and proclaims rather than argues that a land value tax would be shifted. Because merchants and manufacturers charge up their rent as one of the items of their business expense, he infers that rent as well as wages is part of the cost of produce, and that they embody it in the price of their goods. If any man knows less about economic principles than Mr. Atkinson, the average merchant or manufacturer is that man; it is, therefore, quite appropriate that Mr. Atkinson should offer as proof of one of his vagaries the form of bookkeeping adopted by merchants and manufacturers. It is a modern instance of the blind leading the blind.

When Mr. Atkinson shows that merchants and manufacturers whose rent charges are high, habitually sell the same quality of goods for more than is got by competitors whose rent charges are lower, his proof will be pertinent. That which he now offers would be ruled out as irrelevant and incompetent in any court above the grade of a backwoods justice of the peace.

Good Roads Without Taxation.

The chairman of the New York State Road Improvement association has written a tract, "The Gospel of Good Roads," in which, among many other interesting facts, he shows that in Union county, N. J., where sixty miles of Telford road have been recently built, farm lands have advanced in value from $50 and $75 to $200 an acre. The authorities of that county state that the increase in land values there caused by new roads would pay six times over the cost of every foot of such roads in the state. This is more than single tax men would claim, though they recognize the principle and their agitation is based upon it. Every new fact that comes to light goes to prove both the justice and the efficiency of the single tax, and we are glad to recognize in the Road Improvement association a new auxiliary. If the bicyclists of the state would co-operate with the Road Improvement association, New York might soon have the best highways and the most valuable farm lands in the union, without adding one penny to the tax burden.

WE have no hesitation in declaring our belief that the ideal of land taxation lies in the single land tax, laid exclusively on the rental value of land, independent of improvements.—N. Y. Times.

Massacre in a Newly Settled District of Mexico.

Indians Kill White Settlers Because They Encroach on Their Territory—No Quarter Shown to Anyone.

A TERRIBLE REVENGE.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Oct. 5.—John H. Parton, an American, who for the past two years has been engaged in the mining business near Metztillan, situated in the state of Hidalgo, Mexico, arrived here Sunday. He brings information of a bloody Indian outbreak which has for some time been in progress in the district of Tulemengo, in that state. The trouble is an outgrowth of a dispute between several colonies of Spaniards and Germans and the Indians, the new settlers attempting to settle on the lands of the natives. The Indians resisted their attempt to evict them and much bloodshed has resulted. Mr. Parton says that a few days before his departure a settlement of whites was attacked by the Indians and nearly 200 people massacred, including men, women and children. The colonists have appealed to the government for protection and several battalions of troops are on their way to the scene of the trouble.

The attack was entirely unexpected. On the day of the massacre the Indians had entered the town in small numbers until there was quite a crowd of them collected. When the blow finally descended they came down so rapidly that the men of the place had no time to arm.

To those in easy reach of the bloodthirsty savages there was no quarter shown. Men, women and children were shot and cut down wherever they were found. The Indians attacked them indiscriminately, making their way meanwhile toward the center of the town, where a semblance of a fort had been erected. As soon as the firing began a number of the residents of both sexes hurried into this house and there entrenched themselves. They had arms and ammunition and gave the reds a strong fight. This was continued until far into the night and then the savages drew away.

A FINE EXHIBITION.

THE FARMERS' SOCIAL CLUB FAIR AT THE FARM OF JOHN FISHER.

Capping the Climax in Neighborhood Fairs —A Few Notes About the Show.

It has passed into a proverb that the Farmers' Social Club never do anything by halves. Whatever they undertake is well done. It is the pioneer club of Northern Lenawee county, and has an honorable history covering ten years of faithful work in the field of agricultural education. When the club determined, two or three weeks ago, to get up a fair of their own, people regarded it as quite an undertaking, but the members of the club, after the project had been once decided upon, went to work with a will, and the outcome was a most gratifying success.

The location selected could not have been bettered. John Fisher has a very commodious suite of barns upon his farm, one mammoth hay and grain barn, and two smaller structures for horses and cattle. The main hall was situated in the large barn, which contained the fruits, vegetables, fine arts and other domestic articles. The secretary's office was located in an anteroom adjoining the main floor. The horse barn was transformed into a dining hall where tables were spread to accommodate nearly one hundred people.

We arrived on the scene about ten o'clock in the forenoon and found a large crowd already gathered and every one hustling around, getting the exhibits in shape. The secretary had to have assistance in entering the exhibits on the roll and marking the tags. Mrs. Rector called to her aid John Boyce and the two were busy as bees from eight a. m., until noon, before the entries were all properly recorded. The entries in all the departments aggregated over five hundred.

Precisely at noon, the members of the club and outsiders who had arrived, were invited to the dining hall where a sumptuous dinner was in waiting. We venture to say that no farmers' gathering ever enjoyed a dinner any better. It was a meal fit to set before Prince Albert and the hungry hustlers of the forenoon did it ample justice. The tables were set twice to accommodate all who were on the grounds at that hour.

At one o'clock teams began pouring into Mr. Fisher's yards from all points of the compass, and at two o'clock there must have been at least five hundred visitors about the grounds. The main exhibition hall was filled with spectators; a large crowd was gathered under the shade trees upon the lawn to witness the show of horses on the highway and many more were scattered about the grounds viewing the sheep, cattle, poultry and other exhibits. In both number and quality of exhibits the show surpassed all expectations. There were over twenty entries of wheat and other grains in good proportion. The table running along the east side of the main hall was filled with grain and vegetables. Mammoth cabbages and beets, big potatoes, monster tomatoes and melons overflowed the table and covered the floor. We have attended many county fairs which had an inferior show of vegetables. The show of bread, cakes, canned fruits and jellies was especially fine. These were arranged on the table along the south side of the main hall. It was evident that the Social Club contains among its members some of the best housekeepers in Lenawee county. The board partition on the west side of the main hall was covered with paintings and other works of art. Oil and water color paintings, tidies, needle work, mineral specimens and numberless fancy articles of household use, made up what was rightly called the "fine art department." On the north side of the hall, next to the large doors, were arranged a fine show of woolens from the Cinton factory, a lot of crazy quilts, coverlids, and other articles of domestic use; among these were a quilt, owned by Mrs Mathews, over 100 years old, made from curtains that George Washington slept behind; a red coverlid made by the mother of Mrs. Coddington in 1833; a cap made by A. VanValkenburg in 1864, while a sailor on the Mississippi. The long center table in the middle of the hall was loaded down with house plants, fruits and a fine lot of celery. The foregoing will give a birds-eye view of the exhibition in the main hall.

There was a large and fine collection of horses. At two o'clock the judges in that department called the horses out on the highway and for nearly two hours the owners of equines were parading the stock before the crowd of spectators. This was one of the most interesting features of the fair. The show of sheep and cattle was also good. Will Osborn and J. F. N. Bowen had some of their choicest merinos on the ground. John Fisher's herd of ten Durham cows challenged a good deal of attention. In one year, from Oct. 1, '90 to Oct. 1, '91, this herd produced 3046 pounds of butter, being an average of nearly 305 pounds to each cow. The cream was sold to John Clark, netting Mr. Fisher about $50 each for the herd. There was a fine show of poultry. Dr. Waldron, Jones & Jackson and Mr. Coddington had some of their best coops there, and there were fine birds shown by others. A caged coon had a place among the poultry coops, which made lots of sport for the little folks.

At five o'clock the crowd began to scatter but it was after sundown before Mr. Fisher's premises were vacated.

The weather was delightful. It was a warm October day with a nice breeze which kept the atmosphere in balmy condition. The crowd was collected from ten miles away in all directions. F. M. Palmer, of Bridgewater, George Holloway, of Holloway, Holdridge, Colvin and Bickford, of Raisin, Walter and Will Osborn, of Franklin, Warren Jones, of Ridgeway, were among those present from a distance, while the farmers of Tecumseh and Clinton were there en masse. No cash premiums were given, but simple awards consisting of blue and red ribbons with the letters "F. S. C., '91" printed thereon. These awards can be kept by the recipients as souvenirs of the occasion.

The committees in charge of the affair are entitled to special credit for the perfection of their arrangements and the admirable manner in which the exhibition was conducted. To sum it all up in two words it is certainly no flattery to say that the entire show from first to last was an unbounded success. Below we present a full list of the awards as given by the different viewing committees:

Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Gruendler were guests of Mr. and Mrs. T. S. Applegate yesterday. Mr. and Mrs. Gruendler will produce "Pinafore" by local talent at Tecumseh, to-morrow evening, and quite a number of Adrian people are planning to attend. It is their intention to present the opera in Adrian in the near future.—The Times of Monday.

Clinton is talking again of building a new opera house. This same talk crops out e. o. w., top column next to reading matter, with scrupulous regularity, and will probably continue to crop until some one enterprising business man starts out to do all the work in order to get the thing into tangible shape.—Adrian Times.

C. S. Burroughs, of Clinton, has built a nice building on his lot and equipped it with the necessary machinery for manufacturing gum. He has a one horse power gasoline engine, which affords sufficient power to run the mixer and roller and with this steam power one day's work will keep twice as many jaws wagging as before. The business is panning out into a lucrative one. Charlie has earned the thanks of all the girls in this section.

Mrs. Gladstone has contracted to write a series of articles for The Ladies' Home Journal, of Philadelphia, especially intended for American women. The series will be called "Hints From a Mother's Life," and in it the great English statesman's wife will tell the method which she adopted in bringing up her children. As Mrs. Gladstone is one of the most practical women in England, and her children have all attained positions of eminence, her articles for the Journal will have a peculiar interest to every mother in the land.

Mr. Perry's performance was not only thoroughly enjoyable, but highly instructive, and his programme illustrated the whole field of piano music. He combines in a singular degree the gift of easy, fluent speech with the felicitous choice of words that precisely express his meaning, and is one of the few musicians who can talk as well with their tongues as with their fingers. Mr. Perry played with the most exquisite delicacy of touch, and was specially happy in his interpretation of Chopin. His playing of the firey and impetuous closing number was brilliant in the extreme and displayed, not only a fluent and rapid manipulation of the keys, but tremendous strength; and when he finished the stupendous climax, there was a perfect thunder of applause. There are apparently no technical difficulties to Mr. Perry. His visit to Louisville left the impression of a delightful talker, an enthusiastic artist, and a master of piano technique; a musician so permeated with a love of his art, as to kindle appreciation in the coldest audience.—Louisville Courier Journal.

Mr. Snedicor lived in Ridgeway when a boy and has many old acquaintances there.

The table factory is crowded with work now. They are finishing this week one thousand toilet boxes to be shipped to New York City. They frequently have orders for special work. They are now making over an old mahogany table for a resident of Palmyra, that was made by the man's grandfather 120 years ago. They will modernize the style of the table, using the same old material.

Mr. Perry, in a country where nearly everybody plays the piano, is teaching something not so well known, how to listen to the grandest of all musical instruments and understand its meaning. Previous to each number he gave a short talk upon it, interpreting what he considered the author's predominant thought in the composition. The pieces were played with rare skill and expression, marking the player as a refined and cultivated musician.—Minneapolis Tribune.

The reputation of the Whitney Family was sufficient to fill their tent to overflowing last Thursday, both in the afternoon and evening. The Whitneys are slowly but surely coming to the front and it will not be long before they will have one of the largest tented shows on the road. Their entertainments are varied and of a high order. The slack-rope, horizontal bar and high and lofty tumbling acts could scarcely be equalled by the larger shows. The Whitneys will always draw a large crowd in Tecumseh.

HIS LAST ACT.

Boulanger Closes His Career with a Pistol Bullet.

He Takes His Own Life at the Grave of His Mistress in the City of Brussels—Great Excitement Over the Tragedy.

BRUSSELS, Oct. 1.—Gen. Boulanger committed suicide yesterday on the tomb of Mme. De Bonnemain, who died recently in this city. The general came to this city from London a few months ago. His friends say that he had been inconsolable since the death of Mme. De Bonnemain, and that he had aged perceptibly. He was 56 years old. The affair has caused great excitement in the city and some commotion among the general's followers in Paris.

Mme. de Bonnemain has been known as the mistress of the dead general. She accompanied him to England, after his flight from France, and early in July last she was dangerously ill in Brussels, suffering from consumption. A Paris physician went expressly to treat Mme. De Bonnemain by a new system, consisting of inoculating the person affected with the germs of phthisis with gayacol, which is obtained from creasote. However, in spite of the efforts made to save her, Mme. de Bonnemain died during the evening of July 17.

Mme. de Bonnemain, at the height of Gen. Boulanger's career, two or three years ago, lived in the Rue De Berri, Paris, where she was continually visited by the general. Spies kept track of their movements and soon discovered that the two persons referred to were very intimate. Mme. Boulanger was informed of these facts but refused to apply for a divorce. It was greatly through Mme de Bonnemain's favor that Gen. Boulanger was able to carry on his political intrigues, for madame had inherited a fortune of $1,500,000, all of which sum she devoted to the cause of the then popular leader.

To such an extent did Gen. Boulanger carry his infatuation for Mme. De Bonnemain, that when the French government determined to arrest him, he could not be persuaded to pose as a martyr before the French people by going to ja preferring to fly with his mistress from France to England, and eventually to Brussels, where they both met their death.

Revelations made by M. La Guerre, the well-known Boulangist member of the chamber of deputies, subsequent to Gen. Boulanger's flight, show that he had held friendly relations with the Count de Paris, with Prince Jerome Napoleon, and that the Duchess D'Uzes, one of the most ambitious and active members of the royalist party, had spent 3,000,000 francs in advancing the cause of the man who has just taken his life over the tomb of his mistress.

PARIS, Oct. 2.—Mme. Boulanger is residing at Versailles. On being informed of the tragical death of her husband at Brussels Mme. Boulanger fainted. Since then she has been in a state of deepest dejection and is apparently overcome with grief.

FIFTY HOUSES WRECKED.

BUTTE, Mont., Oct. 3.—At 7 o'clock Friday evening an explosion occurred in the southeastern part of the city in the hoisting house of the Ground Squirrel mine. The hoisting engine and boiler near the shaft were covered by a small frame house. A good deal of giant powder is used in sinking and since cold weather set in the boxes containing it have been kept behind the boiler to prevent freezing. There were several boxes of caps on hand and six oxes of giant powder. The roof of the hoisting works caught fire Friday evening and in spite of the engineers' efforts the flames got beyond control. They soon burned down to the caps, which exploded, and the concussion discharged the giant powder in the boxes. The result was the most complete wreck of the houses in the neighborhood, about fifty being more or less damaged. Though many were more or less hurt, no lives have been lost as far as learned.

IRELAND'S CAUSE.

The National League in Convention in the City of Chicago.

CHICAGO, Oct. 2.—The Irish national league convention met in Central music hall at 11:45 a. m. Thursday. It was called to order by Secretary Sutton, President Fitzgerald and Vice President Martin being unable because of sickness to be in attendance. About 350 delegates were present. The secretary read the call for the convention, which declared the objects of gathering to be as follows:

First, to receive and consider the reports of the present executive of the Irish national league of America; second, to examine into the present and past relations between the league in America and the leaders of the national movement in Ireland, with a view to placing them on a better and more satisfactory basis; third, to revise and amend the constitution of the league where it may be deemed necessary; fourth, to pledge once more our inviolable fidelity to the cause of Irish liberty, and to adopt such measures in support thereof as may be considered wise and justifiable.

CHICAGO, Oct. 3.—The Irish National League of America in session in this city yesterday heard the report of the secretary, which scored Parnell and the parliamentary party and declared that Parnell and his followers were more anxious for American dollars than anything else.

The report of the committee on constitution declared that it would sustain all national movements in Ireland with moral and material aid; testified to the primary allegiance owed by Irish-Americans to the stars and stripes; and resolved to "hurt the enemy where he will feel it most by refusing to purchase any article of English manufacture and by using all legitimate influence to discourage tradesmen from keeping English manufactures on sale."

The following were then elected officers by acclamation:

M. V. Gannon, of Omaha, president; Patrick Boyle, of Toronto, first vice president; M. D. Gallagher, New York, second vice president; E. J. O'Connor, Augusta, Ga., third vice president; James Quinn, Davenport, Ia., treasurer.

President Gannon announced that he had selected J. P. Sutton as secretary of the organization and the following as his cabinet:

Daniel Corkery of Illinois; George Sweeney, of Ohio; John J. Donovan, of Massachusetts; M. Mangan, of Wisconsin; Hugh J. Carroll, of Rhode Island; Nicholas Ford, of Missouri, and A. P. McGuirk, of Iowa.

CROOKED METHODS.

Chrisman, Ill., Almost Ruined by the Standiford Bros.' Failure.

CHRISMAN, Ill., Oct. 3.—This little town is still in a furor of excitement over the absconding of the Standiford brothers, bankers. Nothing else is talked about. It is now thought the brothers are ahead all the way from $150,000 to $300,000. The county will offer a reward of $500 for the arrest of the brothers, and to this the losers by the bank failure will add a like amount if they can scrape together that sum from their depleted exchequers.

The Stanifords treated friend and foe alike in their fleecing game. They spared neither the rich nor the poor, the old or young, and among the victims are the rich farmer, hard-working tenant, school-teacher, servant girl, widow and orphan. It is a severe blow to Chrisman, and it will be years before the town will recover from it. In July last the west side of the square was swept by a fire and the work of rebuilding has been going on for several weeks. The major part of the insurance money in the burned property was placed in the Standifords' bank, and now that it is gone the work on the buildings will be stopped. Among the heaviest losers are: Samuel Kenton, $10,000; John Caraway, $10,000; Mel Metheny, $10,000; Peter Williams, $5,000; William Musselman, $5,000; E. Thomas, $4,000; J. W. Elder, $3,000; Cy Lewis, $4,000, and Jesse Lowther, $3,000. There is a long list of those who have lost sums ranging from $200 to $1,000. W. F. Gilkey, the druggist, loses $20,000, mostly in papers.

Mortgages in Illinois.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3.—The census office has made a statement showing that the real estate mortgage debt in force in Illinois January 1, 1890, was $384,299,260, of which $165,289,222 was on acre tracts, and $219,010,038 on village and city lots. The debt of Cook county, containing Chicago, was $191,518,209, of which $14,065,305 was on acres and $177,452,904 on lots. The per capita debt of Illinois is $100, while that of Kansas is $165, and that of Iowa $104.

War and Hurricane in Tanna.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 3.—Advices by the steamship Monowai say the island of Tanna has been visited by a hurricane and devastated by civil war. Fierce fighting is going on and two villages have been wiped out of existence. In the midst of the fighting came a fearful hurricane. The German ship J. W. Gildemernsten was wrecked in Dianerna bay. The cutter Hilda was driven ashore and a canoe containing nineteen natives lost.

Many Perished at Sea.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Oct. 3.—Two vessels, the Parze and the Amazon, returning from Labrador laden with fish, were overtaken by the recent violent storm, driven ashore and totally wrecked. The captains and crews, numbering ten or eleven men, were all drowned. In the same gale the Blossom, another Labrador vessel, struck on Gull island, Notre Dame bay, and went to pieces. Four or five men perished.

LOST THEIR LIVES.

Fatal Collision Between Trains Near Kent, O.

Three Persons Killed Outright and a Great Many Others Badly Hurt—The Ruins Take Fire—Agonizing Scenes Witnessed.

VICTIMS OF A WRECK.

AKRON, O., Oct. 1.—A wreck occurred at Kent, 13 miles from Akron, Wednesday morning, by which several people lost their lives. The sixth section of the Olin family excursion train for the east, bound for Bennington, was run down by fast freight No. 35. The killed were: W. H. Maxwell, road foreman of engines; Fireman Glass, and Mrs. Dervey, of Richland, Mich. The following passengers were injured:

S. G. Allen, Bangor, Mich., left leg crushed; Rebecca Clark, Bangor, Mich., one leg broken and hurt internally; H. F. Cash, Richland, Mich., scalp wound; Anna M. Johnson, Muskegon, Mich., both feet badly crushed; Lodena Van Kearow, McDonald, Mich., arm broken; Miss Van Kermer, McDonald, Mich., foot hurt; George C. Thompson, Montague, Mich., head, arms and shoulder hurt; Mrs. Thompson, Montague, Mich., head, arms and shoulder hurt; F. M. Caldwell, Burlington, Ind., scalp wound and ankle hurt; Miss Ellis Friend, Kalamazoo, Mich., slightly hurt; Edward M. Moody, Shelby, leg and ankle sprained and injured internally; H. R. Fanning, Bangor, leg broken; Charles McKinsley, Kalamazoo, Mich., hurt badly by stepping off train after the collision and falling off trestle; Alice Sedgwick, Parma, injured quite badly; Mrs. Nellie Standfield, Galesburg, Mich., hips badly crushed; Mrs. B. A. Buel, Shelby, Mich., leg broken and hips injured; Mrs. Edith Sales, Grand Rapids, Mich., one leg broken; Mrs. Thomas Richards, Muskegon, Mich., back and ankle sprained; daughter of Mrs. Richards, Muskegon, Mich., slightly hurt; J. A. Merrill, Charlotte, Mich., scalp wound; R. G. Rummer, Battle Creek, Mich., hand hurt.

The second coach was occupied by women and children. Mrs. Willoughby Deway, of Richland, Mich., aged 45, who sat in the forward part of the coach, met instant death, the heavy timbers crushing her head. Other passengers were buried in the pile of seats and timbers. The stove was overturned and timbers took fire, flames bursting out in an instant. Shrieks of women and children who were wedged in close to the burning timber summoned workers to that part of the wreck, and a score of men were soon cutting away through the debris. Mrs. Alice M. Sedgwick, with both legs broken, lay close to the red-hot stove, pushing against it with all her might to keep it from crushing and burning her little daughter, who lay just by her. The mother's clothing was burned off and one side of her body was roasted. Close to her lay Laura Van Anken, a frail girl of 11 years, who was doing a like service for her mother, lying almost under the stove, her arms pinioned and broken. Breaking into the car from the rear, the men brought water from the drinking tanks and passed it to the imprisoned women.

CAPT. FOSTER DEAD.

One of the Men Who Dug Libby Prison Tunnel Passes Away.

CHICAGO, Oct. 5.—Capt. Eli Foster, who has been a guide at the Libby prison war museum for the last two years, died early Sunday morning at his residence, No. 119 Thirty-third street. During the war he was a prisoner at Libby for six months, and the exposure and hardship which he underwent then undermined his constitution to such an extent that he has been a partial invalid ever since. Capt. Foster was one of the original thirteen men to dig the famous tunnel at Libby through which 109 men passed, fifty-eight of whom made their way to the union lines. Thirty days were occupied in digging the tunnel, only two men being able to work at one time, a third keeping watch. Capt. Foster's work was to haul the dirt out in a small box.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5.—The president has directed that Chong Sam, a Chinaman, be deported to China as the country from "whence he came." In taking this action the president upholds the treasury department and the construction placed upon the Chinese exclusion act by Attorney-Gen. Miller and ignores the protest of the British government.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent;
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing-machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

SLUMBER SONG.

Adown the twilight river we float,
Baby and I together,
Gliding along in our little boat,
Baby and I together.
Down to the wonderful land that waits
Where the river flows through the sunset gates,
While the silvery stars keep watch and ward
As we drift beneath their loving guard,
Baby and I together.

Adown the river we softly glide,
Baby and I together,
As the day goes out on the ebbing tide,
Baby and I together.
The twilight river is broad and deep,
So close to the shadowy banks we keep,
While drowsy poppies nod and sway
And sleepily beckon us to stay,
Baby and I together.

To Slumberland our craft we steer,
Baby and I together,
Slowly but surely our port we near,
Baby and I together.
Where the Dream tree spreads its branches wide,
And scatters rare fruit on every side,
Down the twilight river we float along
While lapping waves croon a tender song,
Baby and I together.

The fair little head is drooping low,
Baby and I together,
Gently into the harbor go,
Baby and I together
Have reached the shores of Slumberland
By whispering breezes softly fanned.
Amid the fleet that are anchored fast,
Hush, we are safely moored at last,
Baby and I together.

HIS AUNT'S LEGACY.

It Serves as a Stepping Stone to Fortune and Matrimony.

Charles Eames stepped into the office of his friend Bowles, editor of the Glenville Courant.

"How are you, Eames?" asked the editor.

"I ought to feel happy, I suppose," said the young man, a little ruefully, "for I've just received notice of a legacy."

"Indeed! I congratulate you."

"Wait till you hear what it is."

"Well, what is it?"

"My Aunt Martha has just died, leaving fifty thousand dollars."

"To you? I congratulate you heartily."

"No; she leaves it to a public institution. She leaves me only her silver watch, which she carried forty years."

"How is that?"

"She didn't approve of my becoming an artist. She wished me to be a merchant. If I had consulted her wishes I should, doubtless, have been her sole heir. This small legacy is meant more as an aggravation than anything else."

"But you can make your own way."

"I can earn a scanty living at present. I hope to do better by and by. But you know my admiration for Mary Brooks. If I had been Aunt Martha's sole heir I could have gained Mr. Brooks' consent to our marriage. Now it is hopeless."

"I am not so sure of that. This legacy may help you. If you will agree for one calendar month not to mention or convey the least idea of the nature of your aunt's bequest I will manage the rest."

"I don't at all know what you mean, Bowles," said the young artist; "but I am in your hands."

"That is all I wish. Now, remember to express surprise at nothing; but let matters take their course."

"Very well."

In the next issue of the Courant the young artist was surprised to read the following paragraph:

"We are gratified to record a piece of good luck which has just befallen our esteemed fellow citizen, the promising young artist, Charles Eames. By the will of an aunt, recently deceased, he comes into possession of a piece of property which has been in the family for many years. Miss Eames is reported to have left $50,000."

"Really," thought the young man, "anybody would naturally suppose from this paragraph that I had inherited my aunt's entire property." He put on his hat and walked down the street. He met Ezekiel Brooks, president of the Glenville national bank. Mr. Brooks beamed with cordiality.

"My dear sir, permit me to congratulate you," he said.

"You have read the Courant?" said Eames.

"Yes; and I am delighted to hear of your good fortune. Can I speak to you on business a moment?"

"Certainly, Mr. Brooks."

"You'll excuse my advice, but I know you are not a business man, while I am. My young man, do you want to make some money?"

"Certainly, I should be glad to do so."

"James Parker has five hundred shares of the Wimbledon railway. It stands at fifty-six, a figure much below its real value. But Parker is nervous and wants to sell out. I want you to buy out his entire stock."

"But, Mr. Brooks—"

"I know what you would say. It may go down, but it won't. I have advices that a speedy rise is almost certain. Buy him out, and you'll make a handsome thing of it."

"But how shall I find the money?"

"Of course you haven't received your legacy yet. I know there are delays. No trouble about that. Give your note at ninety days and I'll indorse it. You'll sell out before that time at a handsome advance."

"I will place myself in your hands, Mr. Brooks, but you must manage the business."

"Certainly; I shall only want your signature when the documents are made out. By the bye, come round and dine with us, or have you another engagement?"

Another engagement! If Eames had fifty engagements he would have broken them all for the privilege of meeting Mary Brooks. This was the first time he had been invited to the banker's table. The fact is, until this morning Mr. Brooks had scarcely vouchsafed him more than a cool nod on meeting. But circumstances had changed, or appeared to, and his behavior altered with it. Such is the way of the world! It was a very pleasant dinner. The young artist remained afterward.

"I have an engagement, Mr. Eames," said Mr. Brooks; "a meeting of the bank directors; but you mustn't go away. Mary will entertain you."

The young man did not go away, and apparently was satisfied by the entertainment he received. He blessed his aunt for her legacy if only to had procured him this afternoon's interview with the young lady he admired. But it gained him more. Every few days he received a similar invitation. The young artist could not fail to see that Ezekiel Brooks looked with evident complacency on the good understanding between his daughter and himself.

"What will he say," thought the young man, "when he finds out what sort of a legacy I have received from my aunt?" Occasionally, too, he felt nervous about his hasty assent to the proposition to buy five hundred shares of railroad stock at fifty-six when he hadn't fifty dollars ahead. He reckoned up one day what his purchase would amount to, and his breath was nearly taken away when he found it amounted to twenty-eight thousand dollars! Still, it had been in a manner forced upon him. He asked no questions, but every now and then the old gentleman said: "All going well. Stock advancing rapidly."

With that he was content. Indeed, he was so carried away by the love of Mary Brooks that he gave little thought to any other subject. One day Mr. Brooks came up, his face beaming with joy.

"Wish you joy, Eames," he said. "Wimbledon has gone up like a rocket to par. Give me authority and I'll sell out for you."

The artist did so, hardly realizing what it meant till three days after he received a little note to this effect:

DEAR EAMES: Have sold out your five hundred shares of Wimbledon at 101. As you bought at 56 this gives you a clear profit of forty-five dollars per share, or twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars. You had better take the tide and reinvest your surplus. Call at my office at once. Yours very truly,

EZEKIEL BROOKS.

Charles Eames read this letter several times before he could realize its meaning. Could it be that without investing a cent he had made over twenty thousand dollars? It must be a dream, he thought. But when he called at the old gentleman's office he found it was really true.

"Mr. Eames, how about this money? Shall I reinvest it for you?"

"Thank you, sir. I wish you would. I should like a little in hand, however."

"Certainly. Will that answer?", and the old gentleman wrote a check for five hundred dollars and placed it in the young man's hand. It was more money than he had ever before possessed at one time. This was convincing proof of the reality of his good fortune.

The next day he went to the city and ordered a handsome suit of clothes at a fashionable tailor's. The fact was his old coat was getting threadbare and his overcoat decidedly seedy. While he was about it he bought a new coat and boots, as well as other needed articles, and still returned with money enough in his pocket to make him feel rich. He changed his boarding-house, engaging a handsome room at a much nicer place.

"It seems to me you are dashing out, Eames," said his friend the editor.

"You know I've had a legacy," said Eames, laughing.

"I begin to think you have," said the editor.

When Eames appeared on the street in his new suit it was taken as a confirmation of the news of his inheritance. His removal to a fashionable boarding-house was additional confirmation. It was wonderful how he rose in the estimation of people who had before looked upon him as a shiftless artist. All at once it occurred to him:

"Why shouldn't I propose for Mary Brooks? With twenty thousand dollars I could certainly support her comfortably. There is a very pretty cottage and tasteful grounds for sale at five thousand dollars; this would make a charming home." One morning, with considerable trepidation, young Eames broached the subject to Mr. Brooks.

"No one I should like better for a son-in-law, if Mary is willing," was the prompt answer. Mary was willing, and, as there seemed no good reason for waiting, the marriage was celebrated within a few weeks.

"Charles," said the father-in-law after the young people returned from their wedding journey, "it is time for me to give you an account of your money affairs. I have been lucky in my investments, and I have thirty one thousand dollars to your credit, or deducting the amount paid for your house, twenty-six thousand dollars. By the way, have you received your aunt's bequest?"

"I received it yesterday," said Charlie.

"Indeed."

"Here it is," said the young man, and he produced a battered silver watch.

"Do you mean to say that is all she left you?" asked his father-in-law, stupefied.

"Yes, sir."

Ezekiel Brooks whistled in sheer amazement, and his countenance fell. For a moment he regretted his daughter's marriage, but then came the thought that his son-in-law, through a lucky mistake, was really the possessor of quite a comfortable property, which, under his management, might be increased, so he submitted with good grace and is on the best of terms with his daughter's husband, who is now in Italy with his wife pursuing a course of artistic study. Charles Eames carefully treasures the old watch, which he regards as the foundation of his prosperity.—Jewelers' Weekly.

A CANARD.

The New York Press Exposes that "Important Bill" Business.

The article credited to the New York Press going the rounds of the papers, in which it is alleged that unfavorable action has been taken in the New York Legislature against the Royal Baking Powder, proves to have been a canard, gotten up and circulated by competition baking powder makers for purposes quite apparent to every one.

The New York Press, in exposing the fraud, says: "No such legislation as that stated in this article has ever been had in this State—or in any legislature, to our knowledge." The lie is made from whole cloth. The Press disclaims any responsibility for the publication and objects to being made a party to such methods adopted by some baking powder manufacturers in their efforts to substitute their goods for others now in use.

Last April she was taken down with Measles, followed with a with a dreadful Cough and turning into a Fever. THE POMONA GRANGE.

The County Convention held at Macon Grange Hall October 1st.

The Pomona County Grange was held at Macon Grange Hall Thursday, Oct. 1st, and surely no more beautiful autumn day in all the season could have been selected for the social event.

According to the program for the convention, the "fifth degree" session was to have been held at 11 o'clock a. m., but owing to the usual delays it was impossible to carry out this arrangement. The morning hours were therefore spent in welcoming the delegates, getting acquainted and arranging the dinner.

By twelve o'clock delegations from three Granges besides the Macon Grange had arrived. Onsted Grange was well represented by ten delegates, including Charles Greenleaf, steward; Mrs. Charlotte Maxwell, chaplain; Mrs. Z. Richards, Flora; Mrs. E. A. Taylor, ass't steward; John Maxwell, treasurer; Frank Darling, overseer.

Fruit Ridge Grange was represented by Geo. B. Horton and wife, whose names were an all-sufficient introduction to those who never had had the pleasure of meeting the estimable gentleman and wife before. Mr. Horton is a representative farmer of the southern part of the County and is thoroughly interested in all branches of the profession.

Madison Grange was represented by ten delegates, including the secretary, treasurer, chaplain, and Miss Mary Allis, the county lecturer. Miss Allis is one of the brightest young women of the County, alive to the interests and questions of the day, and gives promise of becoming one of Lenawee's representative women.

The County Pomona Grange is composed of thirteen local organizations and meets every two months. Michael J. Martin of Macon, is Master, while the venerable J. L. Rennington, of Tecumseh, has been chaplain ever since the Grange was organized. This institution, the same as the State Grange, holds itself aloof from politics, its object being to build up interests of special moment to the farmer and his pursuits.

At 12 o'clock delegates and guests were invited to the dining room, where a most tempting dinner was spread. All the delicacies and luxuries which the season affords were lavishly provided and as hastily dispatched. The dinner, in truth, was one of the most enjoyable features of the day, and will be pleasantly recalled by many participants.

At one o'clock the meeting was called to order by Master M. J. Martin. In the absence of secretary Wayland Dowling, Geo. B. Horton, of Fruit Ridge, was elected secretary pro tem., and the program was put in the hands of the county lecturer, Mary Allis.

After a song by the Macon choir Rev. J. I. Gulick gave the address of welcome. The response by Geo. B. Horton was brief, but spicy and to the point. He assured the Macon Grange that they knew they would receive a hearty welcome, as they had been there before—had helped dedicate the hall, in fact.

Following another song Dr. George Howell, of Tecumseh, gave a ten minutes talk on the all-important subject, "The Germ of Disease."

The next was a violin solo by Miss Emma Bailey, Miss Nettie Miller playing the organ accompaniment. Miss Bailey executed with skill and ease, evincing an inherent talent which, when fully developed, will lift her to the front rank of lady violinists.

The solo was greeted with a round of applause, after which came the address by A. J. Crosby, of Novi, Oakland county, State lecturer of the State Grange. Taking up the subject of the Grange, its individual interests and the importance of its growth and maintainance, the speaker said:

"The farmers, as a people, are drifting apart. Fifty years ago, during the days of pioneer life, farmers were all alike; their industries were interwoven, ambitions kindred, social natures mutual. In those days, if a neighbor's interests were trampled upon, the entire community was quickly aroused. But the days of the primitive mechanic have forever passed. Manufactures have sprung up, interests have become centralized, men are bent upon individual prosperity, and thus the relative interests of neighbors have changed. The result is that each industry has its own altar, around which it gathers to promote and further its individual interests. A sentiment prevailed that farmers were organized in the Grange to combat all other organizations. This is wholly erroneous. The creed of the organization is "To better manhood and womanhood." Touching upon politics the speaker claimed that farmers were wholly to blame for not being able to effect legislation through their representatives. Elect men who are familiar with the needs of the farmer, and the difficulty will be removed. The Grange is not respected as it should be. Farmers who have not joined have helped to put the yoke on their own shoulders in the way of political grievances, as the Grange is an educational institution, and political economy would become an all-important subject under prosperous circumstances. Farmers were appealed to bring in the children, support and encourage the organization, and thus centralize and promote mutual interests and benefits.

Mr. Crosby is a ready and fluent speaker, alive to his subject, honest in his convictions. His address closed the public exercises of the day and was received with applause and a rising vote of thanks. After the public exercises a short session in the "4th degree" was held, when the meeting was adjourned for two months.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

Village of Tecumseh, Mich.
Council Room, Sept. 21st, 1891, 7:30 p. m.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

NEW BUSINESS.

The following bills were read and referred to the finance committee.—A James, purchasing agent, $9.10; Milan Sage, lumber, $60.00; Moreland Bros. & Crane, oil, $7.02; Tecumseh Table Co., lumber, $49.62; Richard Holdway, street labor, $1.25; A. Hyde, street commissioner, $24.00.

PETITIONS AND APPLICATIONS.

The petition of A. L. Brewer, H. E. Stout, H. Heesen and 89 others, asking the council to take into consideration, without any unnecessary delay, the subject of establishing a permanent system of water supply for use in this village, was presented by Mr. Brewer, and a delegation of citizens. After remarks by Messrs. Brewer, O. P. Bills, H. S. Lee, S. W. Anderson and others, a motion was made and supported that the chair appoint a special committee of four, to consist of two members of the council and two of the petitioners, to take the subject of the petition into consideration and report to the council as soon as possible. The motion was carried.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The finance committee reported favorably on the above bills as read and on motion orders were directed drawn on the treasurer for the several amounts.

The marshal's report on sidewalks was then taken from the table, and on motion the recorder was instructed to make out the proper notices on the persons named in the marshal's report and present them at an adjourned meeting.

The petition of W. W. Marsh and eleven others asking for an electric light on Maumee street at the east of James street, was taken from the table. A motion that said petition be granted was then made and lost.

On motion the council then adjourned until Thursday evening Sept. 24th, at 7:30 p. m.

The October Arena.

There are a number of noteworthy papers is The Arena for October which magazine readers will appreciate. Such for example as Dr. Geo. Stewart's paper on Lowell,— it is critical, yet very entertaining; a fine portrait of Lowell taken from the last photograph of the great poet forms a frontispiece of this number. Henry Wood, author of the "Natural Law in the Business World," "Edward Burton" and other able works, writes on "Healing through the Mind." Hamlin Garland contributes a brilliant and entertaing paper on Mr. and Mrs. James A. Herne. His contribution deals largely with the dramatic work of Mr. Herne, especially the play "Margaret Fleming." This paper is illustrated by ten finely executed photogravures. Theo. Stanton discusses "Some Weak Spots in the French Republic." Moncure D. Conway writes on "Madame Blavatsky at Adyar." Thaddeus B. Wakeman defends Nationalism H. C. Bradsby discusses our present political outlook under the caption "Leaderless Mobs." Will Allen Dromgoole furnishes the story of the month which is entitled "A Grain of Gold." It deals with the convict lease system of Tennessee. The editor contributes two strong editorials, one dealing with our present social conditions, the other discusses religious persecution. The contents of this issue of The Arena are as usual marked by variety in subjects, while all the papers given are able, entertaining and in touch with the living thought of the hour.

Cheap Reading.

We have made arrangements whereby we can furnish the HERALD and Detroit Weekly Tribune four months for only fifty cents, and we can make the same terms for the HERALD and Weekly Free Press. That is, the HERALD and either of the Detroit Weeklies, two papers, four months for fifty cents. This offer will be held open but a short time. Now is your chance to secure cheap reading.

I remarked to an old farmer back in the country, whom I had not seen for several years, and whose farm, in the meantime, had improved wonderfully, that his place was so changed I hardly knew it. "Yes," said he, "I've been fixin' up a little. The old woman pestered me to death about the garden, and so I slicked it up a little, and fixed about the house, and it looked so nice I went at the farm fences and the brush, and saved more manure, and kept killing the weeds, and the crops got better, and so I kept going on, and things do look pretty good now. Wife takes a paper, and I take one, and I get time to read it too, and I used to think that I hadn't time for anything." And so he ran on, seemingly much pleased with what he had done, and his life and his home without doubt the happier for it. Examples of a like kind may be found all over the country.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

White's Fatal Error.

A sensational shooting occurred in Norton township, near Muskegon. Farmer White had been missing grapes from his vineyard, and, loading an old musket with fine bird-shot, laid in wait for the poachers. He heard them finally and discharged his gun in the direction of the voices. Scores of the shot took effect in the face and neck of Mrs. Lincoln Beach, the wife of a well-known farmer and neighbor, who, with her sister, was passing through the vineyard.

Health in Michigan.

Reports to the state board of health by sixty-eight observers in different parts of the state for the week ended September 26 indicated that inflammation of the kidneys, smallpox, whooping cough and dysentery increased, and typhoid fever, measles, pneumonia and inflammation of the brain decreased in area of prevalence. Diphtheria was reported at thirty-one places, scarlet fever at thirty-one, typhoid fever at sixty-two and measles at four places.

Dickinson County Officials.

Gov. Winans has appointed the following officers for the new county of Dickinson:

Sheriff, Patrick O'Connor; county clerk, John Fredericks; register of deeds, Hugh McLaughlin; treasurer, A. F. Wright; commissioner of schools, E. L. Parmenter; prosecuting attorney, August Cook; coroners, David Bergeron and Alexis Patenade, of Iron Mountain; judge of probate, V. Patrick Flanigan, of Norway; circuit court commissioner, Donald Cameron, of Norway; surveyor, J. L. Buel, of Quinnesec.

Commissioners Appointed.

The governor has appointed A. C. Maxwell, of Bay City, John W. Champlin, of Grand Rapids, and Sullivan M. Cutcheon, of Detroit, members of the commission authorized by the last legislature to confer with the representatives of other states with a view of securing greater uniformity of laws relating to marriage and divorce, settlement of estates, execution of deeds, etc.

He Bought "Green Goods."

A man who gives his name as Brown and his residence as Resena, Huron county, was victimized by a "green goods" man from New York to the amount of $550. Brown received a package supposed to contain $10,000, for which he paid $550, but it contained only old newspapers and a letter of advice to say nothing about the episode, as publicity would bring him trouble.

Fell from a Balloon.

The balloon craze has claimed another victim, and as a result of a foolhardy adventure at Mount Pleasant Lewis B. Earl, of Marshall, lies dead of a broken neck and Frank Thayer was suffering from a fractured arm and severe internal injuries. They had reached a height of 80 feet when something about the balloon broke and they fell to the ground.

Michigan's Prison Board.

Francis Palms, of Detroit, Orlandy M. Barns, of Lansing, Edward Duffy, of Ann Arbor, and Milo D. Campbell, of Coldwater, have been appointed by Gov. Winans members of the new consolidated prison board which will assume charge of all the penal and reformatory institutions of the state.

Short but Newsy Items.

Ishpeming is to have twenty-eight letter boxes and six letter carriers.

While witnessing a bicycle contest at Eaton Rapids H. P. Onderdonk was run into and perhaps fatally injured by a wheelman.

Lightning struck a barn belonging to a man named Muir, near Almont, burning it with its contents.

LUCINDA H. HAYDEN.

The following is clipped from a late issue of the Hartford Courant. Wm. Hayden, Esq., of this village, belongs to that branch of the Hayden family.

There was a pleasant family gathering at the residence of Miss Lucinda H. Hayden at Hayden's, in Windsor Saturday, the occasion being her ninetieth birthday. Oliver Hayden and wife, of East Granby, Jabez H. Hayden and wife, of Windsor Locks, H. Sidney Hayden and wife, of Windsor, and a sister, Sarah N. Power, who resides with her, were present. Their respective ages are 84, 80, 76 and 72. Another brother, Augustus H. Hayden, of Charleston, S. C., aged 74, who was present on a like occasion ten years ago, is still living.

Miss Hayden has always lived in the house in which she was born and where her father, the late Levi Hayden, was born. The house was built 154 years ago and a portion of it remains unaltered. It is overshadowed by a forest oak, whose trunk is four feet in diameter, and its branches spread ninety feet.

On her first birthday she had ten living ancestors—two parents, four grandparents, and four great-grandparents. She saw her great-grandfather, Deacon Nathaniel Hayden, when she was two years old, and he was 94, and he when four years old had climbed the knees of his grandfather, Daniel Hayden (born 1640), the first Hayden born in Connecticut—the three lives overlapping each other and covering a period of 250 years—from the first settlement of that neighborhood to the present time. She traces her descent from nineteen of the original, or very early, settlers, of Windsor, among them the pastor, his two deacons and several others (besides William Hayden) of the original members of the Windsor Congregational Church, which was organized in Plymouth, England, in 1630. She has had ancestors in that church every generation since, and is herself a member of it.

Physically she was never strong, but is still able to spend most of the day about the house and occasionally rides out. Her mental powers are but little impaired and she still reads with interest THE DAILY COURANT, from the weekly edition of which she learned the letters of the alphabet when about two years old, by searching out the letters one by one and carrying the paper to her mother to learn their names. From childhood she has been a constant reader of THE COURANT. Have you another subscriber who has read it as long?

Mr. Fassett, who is running for Governor of New York, probably wishes by this time that he had let the World's Fair issue alone. The front-page cartoon in Puck of October 7th shows how nicely he, together with Messrs. Depew and Platt, have been caught in the Democratic rat-trap.

The beauty of American women is proverbial, and the distinction is well merited; it is doubtful whether any country could show a more notable bevy of perfectly lovely women than those whose portraits are given in the November number of Demorest' Family Magizine, just received. Exquisite pictures of a score of "famous beauties of the south" afford a feast of beauty that everyone should enjoy, and may, by simply procuring a copy of this splendid number of this always excellent family magazine.

We noticed that quite a number of ladies in attendance at Pinafore Tuesday evening removed their hats during the performance. A very wise move, certainly; we hope the fashion will become general, and we are glad to see that the ladies who inaugurated the new custom have the courage of their convictions. At an old fashioned Quaker meeting it would doubtless be very appropriate for both ladies and gentlemen to wear their hats during the services, but to an unsophisticated old bachelor it seems like an antiquated custom for ladies to wear their hats at a place of amusement. Let the ladies persevere in this reform. They will have the countenance and good wishes of the gentlemen, at all events.

Neighborhood News.

BRITTON BUDGET.

J. B. Coller, our former druggist, was in town Saturday.

Miss Edith Crane is visiting at Miss Martha Ackley's this week.

Report says there are orange blossoms in the air. Who can it be?

Miss Nell Easterly, of Ypsilanti, is visiting at Macon and Britton for a few days.

M. D. Britton returned last night from a few days' visit with relatives at Cambria and Hillsdale.

Elias Oliver's youngest daughter aged 14 years, died quite suddenly Monday morning, of quick consumption.

Earl Lenardson will sell his new Gendron safety bicycle cheap, as he starts for the west the 23d of this month.

A daughter at Wm. Britton's Monday morning. Please come around with that box of cigars, Will, as we all smoke.

The frame for Matthew Yates' new house is up. This is the fifth dwelling now under construction in our town. Let Britton boom.

Anyone wishing to purchase a cheap and serviceable horse will do well to call on Lenardson & Son, as they have one they will sell cheap.

John Britton has a new walk in front of his place. Let all his neighbors follow suit and then see how much more we resemble a town. The walk just across the Wabash railroad, in front of the Daykin block, is the worst and ought to have been dumped into the road months ago and the owner obliged to build a new one. Dear old Joe, give us a good walk and we will not say another word; but these walks must be fixed and soon, too.

The play given at the opera house last Friday and Saturday nights was a grand success in every particular. The entire cast rendered their parts admirably, as all who saw the play can verify. The Club has added new glory to its already wide-spread reputation for presenting the difficult dramas, and in justice to its members we think the price of admission is entirely too low in accordance with the amount of time and labor expended. The Club wishes to apologize to its patrons for the lack of proper seating accommodations. It did its best to get Mr. Exelby to provide more chairs, but through negligence on his part, we are sorry to say, about one-third of the audience were obliged to stand up. Really, the proper thing for the citizens to do is to build a town hall—a good large one for the accommodation of all public meetings, with a large, roomy stage. Ridgeway township requires a town hall, and as our village is nearest the center of the township why would it not be well for some of our enterprising and influential citizens, to take hold of this suggestion and see what can be done. Consult the proper authorities and bring the town hall question up for a vote at our coming fall election. Let something be done at once.

RAISIN VALLEY SEMINARY.

Misses Laura Sheffield and Mabel Tooker and Chancey Graves, all of '91, visited us last week. Miss Sheffield is teaching in Raisin township and Mr. Graves in Adrian.

The Seminary has shown its progressive spirit by introducing vocal and instrumental music, which step is proving quite popular. A permanent musical director will soon be announced.

A recent issue of the American Agriculturist has a fine portrait and lengthy biography of Dr. Beal, professor of botany in the State Agricultural College at Lansing. Dr. Beal was one of the students of ye olden time at the Seminary and his love for the practical is due in great part to his early Quaker teaching.

Miss Grace Spalding has been spending a week in the family of her uncle, A. Easlick, of Lake Ridge.

A very young man put in an appearance at James Woodward's Friday. He was made welcome and the family ask nothing better than to keep him for the next twenty-one years.

Arthur Slater's team indulged in a lively little runaway Tuesday, starting at the railroad, beyond Mr. Hurry's. The first thing they did was to deposit Art on the ground, unhurt, then ran to Mr. Langton's, turned into his lane and went over a closed gate, taking the wagon with them. Here they were met by Roy Langton, who, fortunately for himself, succeeded in stopping them. The horses were uninjured, with the exception of a few scratches, but the wagon was badly demoralized.

Sale of the Mackinaw Road.

The sale of the Cincinnati, Jackson & Mackinaw railroad Tuesday, appears to be badly mixed. The C. H. & D., it was thought, would purchase the entire line, but the income bondholders, represented by Gen A. V. Rice and G. L. Marble, stepped in and gobbled up the middle or Van Wert division.

They paid for it the sum of $1,642,000. The Herald has the following regarding it:

Gloom lies over the camp of the Reorganization Committee of the Cincinnati, Jackson & Mackinaw railroad company, which is in the hands of Receiver Walston H. Brown, of this city, and which was sold on Tuesday under foreclosure.

It had been nicely arranged by the committee that after the road was bought in it should be leased to the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton, which was to guarantee, by indorsement, principal and interest of $4,800,000 fifty year four per cent gold bonds.

Opposition to this scheme, however, had been developed among the holders of $137,700 second mortgage bonds on the Cincinnati, Van Wert and Michigan division and they "lay low" until the day of the sale.

Mr. Fred Brown, son of the receiver, attended the sale as representative of the reorganization committee. The property was put up in two divisions. The northern division was bought by Mr. Brown. When the central division was offered Mr. Brown offered to sell the property to the income bondholders for $1,337,000, the amount of the bonds with accrued interest, but this was refused.

Then he offered to buy for $1,362,000. Thereupon Gen. A. V. Rice, for the bondholders, bid $1,642,000.

"It was an absurd bid," said Mr. Brown to me yesterday, "and of course I would not bid more. The division was sold and $15,000 was paid down.

"The object of the bid, I believe, was to compel me to secure the property at an extravagant price and thus create a fictitious value for the bonds held by the bidders. They will not pay it and they will only lose their money. Judge Ricks will be asked to give them 20 days to pay the forfeit. No one believes they can pay, and the road must be sold again."

Securities of the road held by the reorganization committee amount to $2,095,000; of the Van Wert division $1,164,000; besides $125,300 out of $363,000 of the Van Wert division income second mortgage bonds; $50,463 preferred bonds and $94,763 common stock.—Toledo Bee.

THE FIGHT FOR PURE FOOD.

Success of the Efforts to Scotch Bad Baking Powders.

The aggressive war waged by the Royal Baking Powder Company upon the hosts of adulterated and impure baking powders sold throughout the country is having a desirable effect. The scandalous attacks upon the Royal company by the manufacturers of the impure goods (which are made doubtless both from a spirit of revenge and in the hope of breaking the effect of the damaging exposures) show that they are hit, while the official reports which have come from various public authorities fully corroborating the statements made by the Royal company, have awakened a wholesome public sentiment in favor of repressive laws, which means mischief to the illegitimate traffic.

The Royal Baking Powder company set out some time ago to expose the character and to break up the sale of adulterated baking powders. Having found from an examination of many specimens that there was a large number of actually injurious powders in the market, they brought the matter before the public and denounced the makers by name in the press and to the health authorities. The affair was taken up by physicians, Boards of Health and Legislatures throughout the country, chemists were employed to test the various powders in the market, and the government itself directed analyses to be made before it would purchase the supplies needed for army, navy and Indian uses.

The result justified the charges made by the Royal company. Not only were the majority of baking powders in the market found to be largely adulterated, but many of them were ascertained to contain alum and other poisonous ingredients to such an extent as to render them positively unsafe for use in human food. In making the charges the Royal Baking Powder company did not hesitate to enter into competition with every other baking powder in the country, and it is a public satisfaction that in the official tests by the Government and State chemists and by Boards of Health, the Royal Baking Powder has been declared to be the superior of all others in strength, purity and wholesomeness, and absolutely free from all inferior or detrimental substances.

From recent official reports it is evident that the alum and otherwise impure goods have again come upon the market in dangerous quantities and their old enemy, the Royal, is again upon the warpath. In continuing its warfare against these goods the Royal is meeting with the old-time opposition and abuse. The public, however, will appreciate, as heretofore, both the object of the abuse and the action of the Royal company, and award full justice to the company that so fearlessly stands up for its protection from such adventurers.

WEATHER WHISTLE SIGNALS.

The U. S. Weather Bureau has issued a circular explaining the flag and whistle signals used by the bureau. The latter have lately been established and we reproduce them in full for the information of our readers:

The warning signal, to attract attention, will be a long blast of from fifteen to twenty seconds duration. After this warning signal has been sounded, long blasts (of from four to six seconds duration) refer to weather, and short blasts (of from one to three seconds duration) refer to temperature; those for weather to be sounded first.

One long blast indicates fair weather.

Two long blasts indicate rain or snow.

Three long blasts indicate local rains.

One short blast indicates lower temperature.

Two short blasts indicate higher temperature.

Three short blasts indicate a cold wave.

INTERPRETATION OF COMBINATION BLASTS.

One long, alone, blast indicates fair weather, stationary temperature.

Two long, alone, blasts indicate rain or snow, stationary temperature.

One long and one short blast indicates fair weather, lower temperature.

Two long and two short blasts indicate rain or snow, higher temperature.

One long and three short blasts indicate fair weather, cold wave.

Three long and two short blasts indicate local rains, higher temperature.

By repeating each combination a few times, with an interval of ten seconds between, possibilities of error in reading the forecasts will be avoided, such as may arise from variable winds, or failure to hear the warning signal.

Baby McKee is under a cloud. The popular pulse will beat for little Ruth Cleveland now.

We have always been an admirer of Grover Cleveland, but he has made a bad mistake this time. The universal verdict is that it should have been a boy.

Gov. Campbell means business. All the newspapers that published the recent slanderous attacks upon him, which fail to make a proper retraction, will be prosecuted for libel at once.

The trial of Dr. Briggs will proceed, and it is likely to be an ecclesiastical trial of great interest and far-reaching consequences. The final decision will bring much of weal or woe to the Presbyterian Church.

The personal attack made upon Gov. Campbell has turned out to be a boomerang of large dimensions. This kind of warfare did much to elect him two years ago and it is likely to have the same effect this fall.

The Speakership contest is practically at a standstill and will remain so until after the state elections. The unpledged members, who will decide the contest, prefer waiting until after the state elections before committing themselves.

An analysis of Major McKinley's Piqua tin, made at the Ohio State University, showed 9 per cent of tin, 8 per cent of lead and 83 per cent of iron. Not a particle of steel did it contain. The Major will have to start a tin factory somewhere else.

The latest illustration of how protection protects the laboring man is to be found in Major McKinley's own home at Canton. The Deuber Watch Case Company of that city have ordered a cut in the wages of their employes of from twelve to twenty-five per cent. These workmen ought to whoop it up for the Major on election day.

The republican organs are exceedingly touchy this fall. They are not easily pleased. They abuse Flower in New York because he is rich, and they abuse Gov. Campbell in Ohio because he is poor. They berate Campbell because he talks and they berate Flower because he doesn't talk. Their tribulations, however, will soon be over.

The McKinley-Campbell discussion at Ada, Ohio, last week was a rousing affair. Gov. Campbell proved himself more than a match for his opponent and he carried the war into Africa on the tariff question. The Republicans have declined the challenge to eight more joint debates. Campbell has developed into the best stump orator that Ohio has produced since the elder Tom Ewing.

The Free Press says: "Gov. Campbell has the sympathy of every honest man in his determination to hunt down the slanderers who have made the fact of his being engaged in a political campaign an excuse for vilifying him in the most shameless way. The originators of the late slanders are said to be the same who came so near the penitentiary in connection with the Wood ballot box scheme. If this is true, it is a little remarkable that they did not learn wisdom by experience; and it is even more remarkable that the newspapers which were "pinched" in the affair referred to should be again caught with their fingers in the crack of the door."

The Philadelphia Times says: "Mr. Gladstone's speech at Newcastle shows that when a man loves liberty and humanity, age which weakens others makes him stronger. This man of over 80 years is in the van of the column that is marching into the Twentieth Century, and among them all there is not a firmer step or a stronger voice than his. What he says now is heard round the world within less than a day after he has said it, and it will continue to be heard for many years to come. This kind of "success in life" is worth having, for it lasts through life and long outlasts it. Gladstone is a young man yet. He has lived only eighty years or so, while the life of his mind, made great by benevolence, has many centuries before it."

WHO MADE THE TARIFF?

Hon. H. G. Turner Tells From the Record Who Did It—Monopoly Manufacturers Went to Washington and Dictated McKinley's Taxes on the People—Their Demands Literally Embodied in the Tariff Law.

During the preparation of the Mills bill it was falsely charged by republican leaders that a hearing was denied to the advocates of protection by the democratic members of the ways and means committee.

The charge was a very serious impeachment of the energy and activity of these hustlers of the tariff, as the aforesaid democratic members had occasion to know. Republican politicians insisted at the same time that "the tariff should be revised by its friends."

How the McKinley bill fills that arrogant assumption a few samples will suffice to show.

WOOLLEN GOODS.

Mr. William Whitman, president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, appeared before the committee and said [Hearings, p. 290] that "he had framed two clauses" for the bill, which are as follows: "Women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, bunting and goods of like description, comprised wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, and not otherwise especialy enumerated or provided for, 12 cents per yard, and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem" with a blank proviso.

"Women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths and goods of similar character or description, of which the warp consists wholly of cotton or other vegetable material, and the remainder of the fabric is composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca or other animals, 8 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorum." with a blank proviso.

The curious student will find these views of Mr. Whitman quite literally reproduced in the act [paragraphs 394 and 395], with the blanks in the provisos as to extra weight, filled and double-shotted. The oppressive character of these duties, including as they do great increases of existing rates, is too apparent to require comment. It is difficult to contemplate them without indignation.

CLOTHING.

The compound duties then existing on clothing (40 cents per pound and 35 per cent., and 35 cents per pound and 40 per cent. respectively) would seem to have been high enough to keep all interlopers from abroad out of the market, and to subject our people to such taxation as our manufacturers should chose to inflict. But Mr. Isaac N. Heidelberger, "in behalf of the wholesale clothing manufacturers" [Hearings, p. 281], submitted a memorandum of the wishes of his association, and the committee quite fully embodied Mr. Heidelberger's views in the bill [paragraph 396 of the act].

By this subservience the committee raised the taxation of the people on their clothing, at the demand of the manufacturers, to 49½ cents per pound and 60 per cent. ad valorem. And the next paragraph of the act shows that the committee thought that the women and children could bear the same rate of taxation on their ready-made garments.

The men who pluck the American people seem to be making their laws, too.

WOOD PULP.

This is the raw material for the papermaker, and the existing duty upon it was 10 per cent. The ad valorem basis, and the definition in their existing law, did not suit the manufacturers, and Mr. E. L. Embree, representing the pulpmakers of all the country, proposed the following statement: "Mechanical ground wood pulp $2.50 per ton, dry weight. Caemical wood pulp, unbleached, $6 per ton, dry weight; bleached $7 per ton, dry weight" [Hearings, p. 725]. The same language reappears in the act [paragraph 765].

The average value of this article, Mr. Embree said, was $30 per ton of 2,000 pounds.

SHOTGUNS.

The committee found these articles taxed at a single uniform rate of 35 per cent. The manufacturers appeared on the scene, and presented their views of the matter in a written proposition [Hearings, p. 255]. It can be found now in the law [paragraph 170]. And so, too, the tax of 35 per cent. on guns, a specific duty on a graduated scale, running up to $6 on each gun, was added. These duties would have left all purchasers of plain guns at the mercy of the manufacturers had it not been that these gentlemen forgot to provide technically "for parts of guns." They are now said to enter the country in pieces.

TIN PLATE.

By the law previously existing this article of universal necessity was taxed 1 cent per pound. Mr. William C. Cronemeyer, of Pittsburgh, representing the American Tin Plate association, appeared before the committee and recommended that this tax be more than doubled [Hearings, p. 98]. The committee accordingly raised this duty to 2.2c per pound. [See paragraph 143 of the present law.]

TABLE CUTLERY.

Mr. Charles S. Landers, of New Britain, Conn., one of a committee of table cutlery manufacturers, appeared, and indicated what these gentleman wished to tax the American people on these indispensable articles. Not content with the great increase of duties on these articles proposed by the senate bill of the last congress, this gentleman urged a new exaction, which he submitted in words and figures as follows: "All carving and cooks' knives and forks of all sizes, finished or unfinished, valued at not more than $4 per dozen pieces, $1 per dozen; valued at more than $4 and not more than $8, $2 per dozen pieces; valued at more than $8, and not more than $12, $3 per dozen pieces; valued at more than $12, $5 per dozen pieces, and in all the above named 30 per cent. ad valorem." The duty then existing on these articles was 35 per cent. The reason which Mr. Landers gave for this enormity was that "the importation of this class has nearly doubled in the pass twelve months." [Hearings, pp. 77, 78 and 79.] And the committee framing the McKinley bill proceeded to double, and more than double, this tax upon the people.

The new imposition suggested and even formulated by the manufacturers was embodied in the bill just as the manufacturers wrote it. [See paragraph 167 of the act.]

POCKET CUTLERY.

A "committee representing American pocket cutlery manufacturers," with Mr. W. F. Rockwell, of Connecticut, at its head, stated, in writing, before Mr. McKinley's committee [hearings, p. 65], the views of the cutlery combination, as to the taxes which they would levy on all the people of the United States. They said that their business was not prosperous, although they had, under the existing law, the advantage of a 50 per cent. duty on their competitors abroad; and therefore they insisted on prohibitory duties upon their foreign competitors so that they could tax the American people at their pleasure, when it was known that prosperity among the people had become a vague tradition. These manufacturers proposed the following amendment: "Pen-knives or pocket-knives of all kinds, and erasers or parts thereof, wholly or partially manufactured, valued at not more than 50 cents per dozen, 12 cents per dozen; valued at more than 50 cents per dozen, and not exceeding $1.50 per dozen, 50 cents per dozen; valued at more than $1.50 per dozen, and not exceeding $3.00 per dozen, $1.00 per dozen; valued at more than $3.00 per dozen, $2.00 per dozen, and in addition thereto, on all the above 50 per cent. ad valorem." [Hearings, p. 65.]

An examination of the McKinley bill, now the law (paragraph 165), will show that the proposition was literally adopted. And so the tax upon pocket-knives was more than doubled, being made highest ad valorem upon the cheaper kinds.

REVISED BY "ITS FRIENDS."

Similar instances, showing who made the McKinley bill, could be multiplied ad nauseam.

The insolent demand that "the tariff should be revised by its friends" became mockery in view of what actually happened.

The tariff was revised by its beneficiaries, to put it mildly. In fact, the revision was a scheme of robbery devised by the robbers. And the victims were denied even a hearing in the house of their friends.—H. G. Turner, in St. Louis Republic.

DISCRIMINATION.

How the McKinley Tariff Discriminates Against the Cheaper Articles.

The comments on the effect of the McKinley tariff upon English exports, which we quote from English newspapers, agree with the results of the investigation undertaken a few weeks ago by the associated press. They show that, while the total exports of Great Britain to the United States have not fallen off sensibly, there has been a great diminution in the shipments of low-priced goods. It has been often pointed out that the McKinley duties bore much the most heavily upon articles of large consumption among working people, and now we see the natural result of that fact in the more complete control of the home market by our manufacturers, and the consequent higher prices they are able to exact. As the Daily Chronicle observes: "It is not very evident how a home market will be developed by making living less easy for the masses." And the Manchester Courier very justly concludes that one result of the McKinley bill has been to deprive the poorer people in the United States "of a source of supply for their wants, which must henceforth be met at greater cost." Consul-General New puts an ingenious gloss upon the situation by saying that "the exports of the materials for manufacturing the cheaper grades of goods which are used by the workingmen have not decreased, but have increased." That is to say, the reason our manufacturers need higher duties on cheap goods, and need to charge more for them, is that they are getting their raw materials in greater abundance and at lower cost. The consul-general adds, though evidently not for use in the Ohio campaign, that the exports of "unmanufactured wools have largely increased."—N. Y. Evening Post.

Protection's Profit.

The protectionists always deny indignantly that our protected manufacturers and mine owners make undue profits out of the tariff. The following from the Baltimore Manufacturers' Record, a prominent protectionist trade paper, will throw some light on the subject:

"Iron ore mining in the Lake Superior region must yield extraordinarily large profits. The Lake Angeline Co., par value of the stock $25, pays a monthly dividend of $2 a share, nearly 100 per cent. a year. The Champion Iron Co.'s stock, par $25, is quoted at $87.50. The Chandler Co., par $25, is quoted at $37@39. The Jackson Co., par $25, with $90 bid for it. The Lake Superior, par $25, with $31 bid. The Lake Angeline, par $25, with $132.50 bid."

Companies whose stocks are selling at such figures are making fortunes out of the tariff, and they need "protiction" no longer.

—Competition cheapens goods, say the protectionists, and they are right. But how can the tariff cheapen goods, since its very purpose is to cut off competition? If it is competition that they want, they can have that in fullest measure by inviting it from every nation on earth. The tariff wall shuts out competition and gives the domestic manufacturers the opportunity to get rid of it entirely by forming trusts and combinations. And they do it.

—There is a duty of 45 per cent. on pickles, and a combine of twenty-five pickle manufacturers has just been effected at St. Louis and prices fixed for the season. What a pickle these tariff trusts would be in if there were no protective tariff to give them full control of the American consumer!

The Case of Dr. Briggs.

The very slight majority of 64 to 62 by which the New York Presbytery voted that Dr. Briggs should be brought to trial seems to indicate that if the Presbyterian Church were to divide upon the issue which Dr. Briggs represents it would divide about in the middle. It is tolerably clear also that the younger and more active minded of the ministers are on the Briggs side, which may be called the modern side, as opposed to that which takes its stand unalterably upon the doctrine of the Westminster divines of the seventeenth century.

Dr. Briggs is accused of teaching doctrines which conflict irreconcilably with the standards of the Presbyterian Church, specifically in his declaration that "there are historically three great fountains of divine authority, the Bible, the church and the reason," and that the temperaments and environments of men may determine their means of access to God; and further in his statement that Moses is not the author of the Pentateuch, that Isaiah is not the author of half the book which bears his name and that there are instances of predicative prophecy that have not and never can be fulfilled.

It will be observed that the questions here are not so much of doctrine as of fact. It is plain historical truth that through many centuries, including the earliest age of Christianity, men gained their knowledge of Christ through the agencies of the Church rather than from the written word, so that, if Dr. Briggs is wrong, we must assume that a great majority of all supposed Christians, and particularly of those who lived in the world before the invention of printing, never attained a saving knowledge of God at all. As to the authorship of the books of the Old Testament, Dr. Briggs knows at least as much as any of his accusers and more than anybody knew two hundred years ago.

It is not unreasonable to assert that if Dr. Briggs were ruled out of the Presbyterian Church on such grounds as these, a great many devout men who are students of history and sacred literature would have to go with him. But it is by no means certain that he will be ruled out. Representing, as he evidently does, a large and influential body of thinking men, with the tolerance, if not with the positive support, of one-half of his own Presbytery, it is much easier to believe that the expected trial will not go against him. In that event it will be the Westminster Confession that will have to give way.—Philadelphia Times.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Purify The importance of keeping the blood in a pure condition is universally known, and yet there are very few people who have perfectly pure blood. The taint of scrofula, salt rheum, or other foul humor is heredited and transmitted for generations, causing untold suffering, and we also accumulate poison and germs of disease from the air we breathe, the food we eat, the water we drink. There is nothing more conclusively proven than the positive power of Hood's Sarsaparilla over all diseases of the blood. This medicine, when fairly tried, does expel every trace of scrofula or salt rheum, removes the taint which causes catarrh, neutralizes the acidity and cures rheumatism, drives out the germs of malaria, blood poisoning, etc. It also vitalizes and enriches the blood, thus overcoming that tired feeling, and building up the whole system. Thousands testify to the superiority of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a blood purifier. Full information and statements of cures sent free.

ALFRED JAMES,

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

WHAT THE SINGLE TAX WOULD DO.

W. J. M. writing to the San Antonio Daily Express, says;

For the information of Aye Bee and other opponents of the single tax I will answer my question: "Why is it that the more you tax houses, hats, sugar or any other product of man's labor, which all comes from land, the less people have of these things to use, while the more you tax land values the more land there is available for use?"

Aye Bee seems to question the correctness of this proposition, hence it is necessary to prove its truth.

The effect of taxation on the products of labor is to increase their cost to the consumer, thereby restricting consumption. If we impose a tax on houses the users of houses must finally pay it and the production of houses will cease until rent becomes high enough to pay a regular profit and the tax besides. At one time in France a tax was levied on every window. It was claimed that this tax could not be evaded and would fall most heavily on the rich and tend to allay the angry murmurs of a discontented populace already groaning under a multiplicity of taxes. The effect of this tax like all other taxes on the products of labor, restricted the production and use of the thing taxed. It even did more. In order to evade the tax, thousands of house owners walled up their windows, which remain closed to-day--a monument to the past folly of French legislation. If we levy a tax on hats, the manufacturer will charge it in a higher price to the jobber, the jobber to the retailer, and the retailer to the user, who will pay not only the original cost plus the tax but a profit on every exchange that has been made. Is it not plain that taxes of this nature do not remain where they are first placed but are shifted to the consumer; and so is it true, that all taxes levied on the products of labor tend to restrict production, consequently the more you tax these things the less there is for people to use. Tax manufactures and you check manufacturing, tax improvements and you lessen improvement, tax commerce and you prevent exchange, tax capital and you drive it away, but the whole value of land may be taken in taxation and the only effect will be to stimulate industry, free labor, open new opportunities for capital and increase the production of wealth and prevent its concentration.

It is beyond a question that taxes increase the cost of the product of labor, consequently restrict their production, and it remains to be seen what is land value and the effect of its taxation. In the first place, what is land? Aye Bee seems certainly mixed, and, in an effort to define it says that land is measured by the acre and land value by dollars. This is a misconception. The term land includes not merely the surface of the earth, but the whole material world outside of man himself, and it is only by having access to land from which his very body is drawn that he can use the forces and materials of nature. Land embraces, in short, all natural materials, forces, and opportunities. You can not measure opportunities by the acre, neither can you in like manner measure the forces of nature. This, then, is the meaning of land. What is it that gives it value? Something outside of and distinct from labor.

Imagine the first settler camping on the site of the present town of Llano. The soil, locality and resources of the country suiting him, he determines to make that his home. Nature in her most generous mood has stored untold wealth at his door, inviting him to apply his labor to the land or the natural opportunities which lay at his feet. By toil and labor he erected his humble home and planted a crop to supply him with food for the coming year. Has his labor increased the value of the land? No! for soon another pioneer moves in and locates near the first. There is no land value yet, but soon another and another comes, till a settlement is clustered around the first pioneer, and the nucleus of a city is started and there is a competition among the settlers to obtain some more favorably situated piece of land, and then begins to grow with the needs of a community, land value, which is created by the presence of population and the demands of labor for the raw materials of nature.

The land owner anticipating the needs of labor, monopolizes the natural opportunities, and then has the power to say to labor, before you can use land which a few years past was free to all, you must pay me for my permission, and as population increases, bringing with it new markets and means of exchange, the demand for land increases and the land owner stands at the mouth of the mine, at the door of the workshop, claiming his pound of flesh, or he may say and does say to labor and capital: "This you must not touch. It is true I do not want to use the wealth stored in this land waiting the magic touch of labor, neither will I permit you to do so. He looks ahead a few years and sees a busy, toiling population crowding around his vacant land and knows that this means enormous in value. The effect of taking this value in the shape of taxation would be virtually saying to labor and capital: "The earth and its fullness thereof is yours." Delve and dig, build and plan, wrest from nature her most hidden force and with the magic wand of freedom open up vistas of human progress that seers and prophets and poets have seen only in visions.

Space forbids dwelling on the possibilities of human progress, and in conclusion I would say that by taxing land to its full rental value there would be no incentive to hold land idle. Under this system there would be no valuable land devoted to raising weeds and mosquitoes in the heart of the city such as we see at present. Single tax does not contemplate the changing of human nature, but aims to place all men on an equal footing with an equal right to the earth, the common inheritance of all, and vesting the sacred rights of property with the only perfect title, the right of creation.

How Tyler County, Tex., Paid for its Courthouse.

James Charlton, of Houston, Tex., writing to the Standard, says: The third party convention which met recently at Dallas adopted a platform which would indicate that there were a number of single tax men there. After going over the usual ground, showing how unjustly the farmers have been treated in the matter of taxation, and how heavy burdens have been placed on the poor and taken from the shoulders of the rich, and after advocating in strong language the Australian system of balloting, it comes down to the land question as it affects the state of Texas. The plank which will especially interest single tax men is as follows:

We demand and pledge ourselves to support a law requiring that wild or uncultivated lands belonging to private individuals or corporations, in large or small bodies, be rendered for taxation at the same valuation per acre as improved lands of the same county and district.

Your article in The Standard of the 12th, entitled "Delightful Simplicity," recalls a case in an adjoining county of this state, which thoroughly refutes A. B. K.'s second proposition and sustains the single tax position. Here are the facts as related to me:

Some people of Tyler county were desirous of having a new courthouse and jail, but the plan to raise the money for that purpose brought about a storm of opposition from all the taxpayers of Tyler county, except, possibly, the immediate landowners at the county seat. Tyler county's principal product is pine lumber—farming and merchandising being secondary and more or less dependent on the milling industry. The farmers, merchants and mill men away from the county seat kicked against any increase of taxation, claiming that they were already overburdened, and the courthouse scheme was about to fall through, when a single taxer, Mr. David Russell, came to its rescue, and asserted that the idea could be carried out and the benefits secured to the residents of Tyler county without any increase of taxes to them. Of course that kind of an assertion, coming from a person of Mr. Russell's standing, went from individual to individual until it got to the county commissioners, sitting as a board of equalization, who sent for him and asked him to explain his plan, which he did.

Tyler county's natural wealth, said he, is in pine lands, which are principally owned in large tracts by non-residents, and which are valued on the tax lists at $1.20 per acre. It was well known, he said, that the millmen were paying these same landowners $2.00 per thousand feet for stumpage, while after the land had been cleared of the timber it was more valuable than before the work had been done. The average yield of pine timber per acre, Mr. Russell said, was eight thousand feet, which made a taxable value based on the stumpage price of $16 an acre, as against the assessed value of $1.20, not to speak of the value the land had after the timber had been cleared from it. He therefore argued that no injustice would be done to the owners of this pine land if their rating on the tax books was increased to $15 an acre, and he demonstrated that were the rating made at even half that amount ($7.50), sufficient taxes would be raised to pay the interest on the cost of the courthouse and provide a sinking fund for the bonds when they would be due. To make a long story short, the commissioners fell in with Mr. Russell's view, and they raised the valuation of these pine lands to seven dollars per acre. Now the result, according to A. B. K., would be that the owners should raise the price of stumpage to mill men, but quite the reverse is true. The people of Tyler county have got the courthouse, but the price of stumpage has fallen to one dollar per thousand, so that, instead of making the producers of lumber charge more for their product, the effect of increasing the valuation of those timber lands has been to give them a better margin of profit, unless they are like the much-hunted-for-and-never-found protected manufacturer, who is in the business for the sole purpose of increasing the wages of his American laborers.

Yes, It Is Land.

A highly interesting exposition of the policy of taxing personal property is in the case of the trotting horse Axtell, out in Indiana. He is the highest-priced piece of horse-flesh in the world, having been sold for $105,000 when he was three years old. Since then, as the head of a large breeding stud, he has shown that he was well worth every cent of his price and more. Yet the valuation put upon him by the tax assessor was very reasonably what might be put on any good horse—$500. But the dissatisfied economists in his neighborhood are protesting that he must be taxed, not on the general principle applied to horses, but with regard to his great and manifest value. Whereupon the owners of Axtell, not being oppressed with idiocy, replied that if that should be attempted, they would take the horse out of the state, and the advantage of his presence, which is by no means trivial, would be lost. The best and surest subject of taxation is the thing that perforce stays in one place: that is land.—N. Y. Sun.

It Is a Plan that Would Settle the Labor Problem.

A good plan of land taxation on this coast would be to tax according to the value for crops, in the region where located. That is, lands unimproved and not in use should be taxed at exactly the same rate per acre as adjacent lands of same quality under cultivation. That would make the holders of large tracts of land, waiting for a raise, tired.—San Francisco Pacific Coast Alliance.

A SLY WIDOW.

A Pretty Female Smuggler Fools Her Employers.

They Engage Widow Yancy's Services in an Effort to Cheat Uncle Sam and She Disappears with Diamonds Worth $30,000.

MISSING JEWELS.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—Inspector Byrne's men are looking for a Mrs. Yancy, who is a most expert smuggler and swindler. She is accused by a diamond importing firm in Chicago, whose name is not mentioned for obvious reasons, of making herself scarce with a quantity of diamonds belonging to them.

In this particular firm there is consternation on account of their little financial venture to defraud Uncle Sam of his just dues. With them is implicated a Maiden lane firm of this city, that was interested as agent. To carry out their scheme for importing diamonds at as little expense as possible they engaged Mrs. Yancy, a New York woman, who changes her name with the season and who is regarded by customs officers as a "slick one," having eluded their vigilance at every eastern port. She is a professional "free trader," long known to the authorities as such, and they always lay plots for her, but on Friday last she made her master stroke.

Mrs. Yancy, in personal appearance, is youthful. Despite the silver in her hair, she has a figure that would grace a girl of 18. She dressed in widow's weeds, and was so successful in her little smuggling schemes that the officers began to doubt whether the pretty waist was not a receptacle for some of the contraband goods. She has been examined by female searchers and every thread of clothes she had on carefully scrutinized, yet she managed to get goods into New York safely.

Mrs. Yancy, or whatever her name may be, is not an American. She came to New York early in the spring of 1889. At that time she was accompanied by a diminutive Mongolian attendant, connected to whom by a short gold chain was a demure pelican. As neither pelicans nor Mongolians are down on the tariff list they were allowed to pass. Since that time the interesting woman and bird, Zip, have been frequent passengers between Europe and New York on various steamers, and it is alleged that between them about a million dollars' worth of diamonds have been imported without duty. It is strange that while the woman was always suspected, the pelican has never been. This is attributed to the fact that the bird wore as demure a look as the boy in whose custody it was.

Last Friday, just before the French steamer landed, the bird was taken by the boy into the mistress' stateroom. When he was landed he was led from the steamer looking as if he had been attacked by a virulent form of mumps. But it was overlooked by the customs officers. The three were noticed to bundle into carriages at the dock, and it is supposed that while on the way up town the bird was relieved of its mumps. The mumps consisted of $30,000 worth of bright, sparkling diamonds. These diamonds should have been delivered to a firm in Maiden lane, to be shipped to the other "free trade" firm of diamond merchants in Chicago. Instead, however, Mrs. Yancy, with a dozen other attractive widow names, went somewhere on her own account. All trace of her has been lost, and within twelve hours of her arrival the police of half a hundred cities were notified to look out for her.

The two diamond importing firms are in a sorry predicament. They are abusing themselves for having been so adroitly swindled, and are trembling for the consequences of their expose. In order to save $30,000 they have left themselves liable to prosecution and the imposition of fines which may cost them far more than the loss of the parcel of sparklers. According to the terms of the contract between the two firms it is said the Chicago house advanced $10,000 on the diamonds, agreeing to pay the other $20,000 on their delivery. But the Maiden lane house can't deliver until it finds Mrs. Yancy.

CHEATING IN HORSE BLANKETS

Nearly every pattern of 5/A Horse Blanket is imitated in color and style. In most cases the imitation looks just as good as the genuine, but it hasn't the warp threads, and so lacks strength, and while it sells for only a little less than the genuine it isn't worth one-half as much. The fact that 5/A Horse Blankets are copied is strong evidence that they are THE STANDARD, and every buyer should see that the 5/A trade mark is sewed on the inside of the Blanket.

TECUMSEH HERALD.

Issued Every Thursday Morning.

TECUMSEH, MICH., OCT. 15, 1891.

THE EMERALD ISLE.

An Interesting Letter from a Tecumseh Resident Sojourning in Ireland.

CLOUGH, ANTRIM CO., IRELAND,
September 30, 1891.

EDITOR HERALD:—As I have been in Ireland nearly eight weeks and having had some chance to see quite a good deal of the country and especially the kindness of the inhabitants, I must say that a better place to visit cannot be found, as everybody tries to be kinder than another. As much of Ireland as I have seen is greatly improved, a great many farmers having builded new residences while others have improved theirs so much they look like new. A great feature of the Irish farmers in Antrim county is the idea of having all houses, either residences or out-houses, almost as white as snow. It is a beautiful sight to get on some eminence and look around the country and see so many white dotted homesteads. The country around here is very rolling and seems strange at first sight to people raised in Michigan where the country is flat. The farmers have changed their manner of farming since I left the Emerald Isle. Following the example of their American cousins they are now using horses instead of men and boys. It is quite a common sight to see machines cutting hay and oats where the sickle and scythe used to do the work. The crops are fine in this section of the country and all about saved, excepting potates, that are hardly ripe. One thing I envy the Irish people of is their fine roads. If we, in Michigan, had as good roads we could beat the world in everything. When speaking about farmers I forgot to mention that most every farmer has a machine to churn with, and owns his own threshing machine. Threshing is done in a different manner than in Michigan. Here they stack all their oats in stack-yards and when they wish to thresh a stack they start their machine and in a few hours have done what would have taken two men a long time with the old-fashioned flail. As a general thing the farmers of North of Ireland are a thrifty and industrious class. Clough, a town that most of your Irish readers will remember, is the same Clough it was twenty years ago, with the exception of a few new residences that add materially to the looks of the town. It is a very healthy place and is situated on quite an eminence and can be seen from quite a distance. The north wind blows on it from all directions, hence it gets the name "Cold Clough." Ballymena, the nearest market town to Clough, is a very wide-awake city. It is certainly double the size it was twenty years ago. Being an inland city it has not the advantage of some of her sister cities, but the merchants are ago-head men, hence the prosperity of the city. Ballymena lies about in the center of Antrim county, and no better farming country can be found The markets are the best; every Tuesday and Thursday are pork and grain markets; Wednesday hay and other products; Saturday being a general market day when horses, cattle, grain, flax and in fact everything that a farmer raises, except dressed hogs, find a ready sale, They hold a horse fair every month where some fine horses are bought and sold. The linen factories of Ballymena give employment to hundreds of hands. Three large factories for the manufacture of embroidered and fancy handkerchiefs also give employment to many.

Glenarriff is a beautiful glen, fourteen miles north-east of Ballymena. There you would be charmed with the lovely scenery. It is said that no nicer glen can be seen in the three kingdoms.

We visited a place known as Garron Tower, situated on the sea shore, a few miles from Carnlough. The Tower or Castle was built by Francis Ann, Marchioness of Londonderry, as a summer residence, but it is now owned by Lord Van Tempest, a nephew of Lady Londonderry. It is built on the side of a mountain 350 feet above the sea. When you get inside the walls you open your eyes on as fine a place as man and money can make. A level space of about twenty acres, with the Castle in the center, surrounded by fine gardens and splendid walks. The Castle is built of cut stone and covers about three acres. From the Castle grounds the solid rock rises to the hight of 500 feet, presenting a very rugged surface. The 500 feet above the Castle, and 350 feet below, with the level space in the center, makes it a very attractive place. Gaining admission to the Castle we were escorted through all the principle rooms. This is where you see something grand—the rich furniture with its costly carvings, the fine paintings and nicely decorated walls, with highly polished floors and elegantly decorated ceilings, with furniture too rich for me to describe. We were shown a chandelier given as a present from the Czar of Russia, being solid gold set with precious stones, having 36 lights. Also a solid gold dish weighing fourteen pounds, with the cover ornamented with diamonds and other precious stones, presented to Lord Van Tempest by the Emperor of China as a birthday present. But why try to tell what is to be seen? I cannot.

Visiting Londonderry, that old "No Surrender" city, with its famous walls which everybody is familiar with, its large Cathedral and fine statues, makes it quite a city to visit. We next come to Portrush, that great American watering place, where so many American tourists spend a few weeks every summer. We then proceeded to Grant's Causeway, passing the once famous Dunluce Castle. Arriving at the Causeway we hired a guide to show us the principle places, and here you get more soft-soaping and more "beg your pardon, sir," than in all Ireland and Scotland combined. It is certainly a remarkable place. Visiting Belfast with its three ship building yards situated on Queen's Island, we proceeded to Scotland. Taking a day-light boat it gave us a chance to see the scenery along the shore. We arrived in Greenock on the Clyde, famous for its ship building yards. We spent a day in Glasgow which is remarkable for its beauty. We also visited Edinburg, the cleanest and prettiest city I ever saw; also, Roathsay, a summer resort, where the nobility of England and Scotland spend the summer, and several smaller places occupied our time in Scotland.

THOMAS ELLIOTT.

BETTER THAN MARK TWAIN.

Assistant General Passenger Agent Crane of the Wabash Is a Humorist.

From a recent issue of the St. Louis Chronicle we clip the following pen and ink sketch of our whilom Tecumseh resident, Chas. S. Crane. The good words spoken of him are well merited and will be interesting to his many friends in the home of his boyhood.

When a Wabash general official wants to laugh, or when he wants to get a little quiet humor, he doesn't pull out a copy of Josh Billings or Mark Twain and read it. He goes over to the General Passenger Agent's office and hears Assistant General Passenger Agent Crane tell a story, if he's not too busy. And he can tell stories, too—those realistic stories of by-gone days, with an individual vein of quiet humor about them that cannot help but amuse you. These stories are always told between 5 and 6 o'clock in the evening and not at any other hour, for from 8 to 5 nothing but work goes.

Charles S. Crane, by the way, was born way up in Michigan in 1847. His first work was done in the general freight office of the Toledo and Wabash Railway when he was 16 years old.

In Barnum's autobiography, we read of a boy to whom the great showman gave the first pass he had ever issued at Toledo, Ohio. That boy was Charles Crane, and was given for services the latter rendered in making up Barnum's special train. The pass was a leather one, and was good for all time to come.

When Mr. Crane entered the services of the Wabash, the line had 243 miles of track and extended from Toledo to the Indiana State line. His first duties were to keep the records of the freight cars, there being no car accountant those days and no system as is used now.

Mr. Crane remained in the freight service until 1867 when he went to the Northern Transportation Company of Toledo, which operated a line of steamers between Toledo and Ogdensburg. While in this company's employ he had charge of freight matters. After two years, the Wabash secured his services again as Chief Clerk of the General Ticket office under John U. Parsons, General Ticket agent. Soon after the appointment, the General Ticket and General Passenger Departments were consolidated and W. L. Malcolm took charge as General Passenger and Ticket Agent. Mr. Crane was Mr. Malcom's Chief Clerk until H. C. Townsend succeeded him. When Mr. Townsend's offices were transferred to St. Louis, Mr. Crane came with him.

After serving a short time as chief clerk to General Passenger Agent C. K. Lord, he took a similar position under George H. Daniels, who succeeded Mr. Lord, and who is now General Passenger Agent of the New York Central Road. When Daniels resigned Mr. Townsend again took charge and appointed Mr. Crane as chief clerk. When the Wabash and the Iron Mountain were consolidated and Mr. Chandler took charge as General Passenger Agent the same chief clerk was employed.

In 1887 Mr. Crane was made Assistant General Passenger and Ticket Agent, which position he still occupies.

Mr. Crane attends to all the details of the department and practically has charge of the department in the general routine of business. The meetings of the Passenger Associations are usually attended by him as the representative of the Wabash.

Railroad men in the West have all learned of Mr. Crane and regard him as a man of ability, especially in his department. He has a keen eye and a mind as well.

CLEANSES THE WHOLE SYSTEM.

During the last half century there has been a wonderful development in what is known as sanitary science. It is a science that looks to the prevention of diseases in communities through the medium of cleanliness, and it commends itself most urgently to the common sense of the people. Meanwhile, it should be borne in mind that the human system stands in need of sanitation, and requires even more care than the municipal body. It is precisely here that S. S. S. takes up the work of the sanitary scientists. It cleanses the whole system, purifies the blood, disinfects the channels through which it flows, and destroys the germs of disease. It is a harmless medicine, and yet a most powerful one. It is nature's tonic remedy.

EDWARD BAXTER PERRY'S RECITAL.

The concert and lecture given by Edward Baxter Perry last Friday evening at the opera house, was a musical event of unusual excellence. Each selection was prefaced with a few explanatory words descriptive of the author and his compositions, and these interpretations were well worth listening to, even if the musical renditions had been omitted. And the latter showed Mr. Perry to be a musical prodigy and artist of superior merit. It is certainly wonderful how a man afflicted with blindness could execute the most difficult compositions without the least error whatever.

We acknowledge our incompetency to criticise his performance. In fact no criticism is possible except words of praise, and these were abundantly bestowed by those present. Those who failed to attend certainly missed a rare treat. Mr. Perry gave the same program at Detroit on Thursday evening, which the Tribune reported quite fully on Friday morning, and we appropriate a portion of its comments.

His characterizations of the different composers, as well as their compositions, were very happy and original, as when he stated that Schubert's theme and variations made up "a very pure example of that melodious composer, who excelled all others in the quality and quantity of this style of composition, having created six hundred songs, and completed seven in one day."

Chopin he named "the Tennyson of the pianoforte," and from his compositions he selected a nocturn of exceeding beauty, "his most Chopinesque waltz," and one of his "impetuous and Titantic polanaises." He spoke of Frederick Dewey of Boston. the author of the "Forest Reveries," as one of the most gifted American writers, whose composition he was pleased to be able to present from manuscript and for the first time in America. By far the most interesting composition of the evening was Mr. Perry's own, the "Ballade, a Memory of Last Island," which was composed last summer and is in manuscript. It seems peculiarly fitting that this powerful "Memory" should have been founded on Lafcadio Hearns's story by that name, in Harper's Magazine, for the young Louisianian is one of the most dramatic writers of poetic prose in these days, when essentially prosy and undramatic tales fill the magazines with occasional glittering exceptions. Mr. P's nature is evidently cast in the same dramatic mould as the author's who charmed him to inspiration, and the result is a charming and original composition, which, with all due respect to Mr. Perry, should not be called a "ballade," however; it is two strong and wierd for that title. The carnival of the dancers in the face of approaching death, the passages where "the wind waltzes with the sea tonight," the final destruction of the island and the lapping requiem of the repentant waves, as they carry the dead out to the nameless grave of the sea, is imaginative to a degree, the theme being harmoniously carried out from the first notes to the last.

Two brilliant renditions from Liszt, to whose mercurial nature Mr. Perry seems to have found a key, closed the program.

His dates are filled in till Dec. 16, but it is just possible he may return here in March. If so, he ought to be greeted with one of the best houses of the season, for he can rank among the first pianists of the day.

AS OTHERS SEE US.

The Industrial Farm and Fireside of Detroit has a write-up of the late county fair. Among the items we find the following:

W. J. Osborn, Tecumseh—registered Merino sheep, took fine lines of premiums. He breeds symmetrical and choice sheep.

J. R. Hialey, buggy manufacturer, showed a fine array of vehicles. His Lenawee Carriage factory at Tecumseh is a good one to patronize. Park wagons finely finished in natural wood.

Robert Sherrard, of Cambridge, who has one of the best peach farms in Lenawee county, has sold over a thousand bushels of peaches this year in Adrian. He took all the prizes in fruit at this fair.

Merino rams for sale. I have a fine party of grade and registered rams, which I sell at prices to suit everyone. Residence three miles northwest of Tecumseh, Mich. J. F. N. Bowen, Tecumseh Mich.

Slayton & Avery, (Charles A. Slayton and E. N. Avery), the esteemed manufactures of the Avery rack, from Tecumseh, Mich., showed to appreciative crowds this rack. This is a hay rack, stock rack and wagon box combined. This is a valuable patent and they sell for the low price of $16. This concern should be seen or written to for details. The rack carried off first premium over several competitors and is considered the best thing of the kind yet patented.

Mr. George Holloway and Holloway & Osborn, of Holloway, and Tecumseh, Mich., showed a fine array of stock—25 head of Poland China swine, 4 National Delaine sheep, the first ever brought to this county, and 6 entries of land and water fowls. They received premiums all around except on the National Delaine buck, which committee claimed that he should be shown with the Wrinkler sheep. In other words they they declined to recognize National Delaine sheep as a distinct breed—Premiums we should judge would be appreciable to these, as all other fairs we know of give premiums on the National Delaine breed. They had to enter them in the miscellaneous class, and the awes received premiums in this class.

That tired feeling now so often heard of is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which gives mental and bodily strength.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

At the last meeting of Macon Grange it was resolved that there should be no hunting or shooting on the premises of its members, without permission.

In Harpers' Young People for next week will be published the first instalment of "Jack and Jake," a three part story by Thomas Nelson Page, the author of "Nancy-Pansy," "Kittykin," etc. "Jack and Jake" is a war-time story that is sure to excite great interest on both sides of Mason and Dixon's Line.

From the excellent support Mr. and Mrs. Greundler received in the presentation of Pinafore at Tecumseh on Tuesday evening it is evident that our neighboring town has within its borders some people with excellent voices. The choruses were not so much marked for strength as for richness and harmony. Miss Grace Stevens carried the part of Josephine, the captain's daughter, to perfection and displayed a remarkably fine voice. Several of the leading parts were taken by Hillsdale and Jackson parties. Sanford Hunt, of Jackson, as Dick Deadeye is hard to beat, and Mrs. Gruendler, as Little Buttercup, captures the audience at first sight.—Manchester Enterprise.

DEATH OF PARNELL.

The Irish Statesman's Career Ends Rather Suddenly.

The Event Occurred at His Home in Brighton, Eng.—Great Excitement in England and Ireland Over the Unexpected News.

PARNELL PASSES AWAY.

LONDON, Oct. 8.—Great Britain and Ireland were startled Wednesday morning by the utterly unlooked-for announcement that Charles Stewart Parnell, the noted Irish leader, died suddenly at 11:30 o'clock Tuesday evening at his home in Brighton.

Mrs. Parnell, Mr. Parnell's stepdaughter and the servants were the only occupants of the house on Walsingham terrace when the Irish leader expired. The end was one of intense agony for the sick man until the moment when he became unconscious and eventually died without pain.

The report that Mr. Parnell had died by his own hand spread far, and among the persons whom it reached was Mrs. Parnell. She requests that an emphatic denial be given to rumors that her husband committed suicide. She states that he had long suffered from rheumatism, which developed into the fever that killed him.

Mr. Justin McCarthy, member of parliament for Londonderry and leader of the anti-Parnell faction of the Irish parliamentary party, discussing the political effect of Mr. Parnell's death said it was impossible to forecast the politic l effect. Mr. McCarthy added, however, that he hoped it would lead to a complete reunion of all shades of opinion among Irishmen in general and in the Irish parliamentary party in particular. He said he believed that all feeling of hostility to Mr. Parnell or of hostility between individual members of the Irish parliamentary party would be swallowed up completely and disappear in the feeling of genuine and universal regret which was experienced among Irishmenat the death of Mr. Parnell.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—A dispatch from Brighton says that the doctor's certificate, which has just been filed, states that Mr. Parnell's death was caused by rheumatic fever resulting in excessive temperature and failure of the heart. Mrs. Parnell is still prostrated with grief, and though weak and exhausted from long watching and the terrible shock experienced, she positively refuses to partake of any food or refreshment and will only see her daughter.

[Mr. Parnell was born at Avondale, Wicklow, Ireland, in the year 1846. He was a descendant of the poet Parnell and his family had been associated with Irish parliamentary life for upward of a century. His great grandfather, Sir John Parnell, was chancellor of the exchequer at the time of Grattan's parliament. Sir Henry Parnell, granduncle of Mr. Parnell, was a prominent member of the English parliament in the time of Lord Grey and Lord Melbourne, and was made Lord Congleton. Mr Parnell, whose mother is a daughter of Admiral Charles Stewart, a celebrated American naval officer, was educated at Cambridge university, but did not take any degree. After a tour of America he settled down on his property in Avondale. On the death of John Martin, in 1875, Mr Parnell stood for County Meath and was elected. Mr. Parnell first took an active part in parliamentary affairs in the session of 1878, when in association with Mr Biggar he initiated what was known by the various names of the "obstructive" and the "active" policy. He joined in the foundation of the Land league, and in October, 1879, he was elected its first president. At the general election of 1880 he was elected for the city of Cork. He was elected in May, 1880, leader of the new party by twenty-three to eighteen votes for Mr. Shaw. He took an active part in the land league agitation. After the land act was passed Mr. Parnell was arrested in October, 1881, on a charge of intimidation and obstructing the working of that act. He was released in May, 1889. At the general election of 1885 he was reelected for Cork. Mr. Parnell formed an alliance with the liberals and by the vote of the Irish party overthrew the former government of Lord Salisbury (January 16, 1886). Mr. Parnell's name has since been prominently before the public in connection with the home rule proposals of Mr. Gladstone. The proceedings of the parliamentary commission, which resulted in a victory for Mr. Parnell against the Times, and the exposure of the Pigott forgeries, the O'Shea divorce proceedings and Mr. Parnell's marriage, are matters fresh in minds of all.]

DUBLIN, Oct. 12.—During a drenching rain the remains of Charles Stewart Parnell were laid to rest at 6 p. m. last evening at Glasnevin. The funeral was one of the most imposing ever held in Ireland. Special trains from all parts of the country brought tens of thousands of sad-hearted Irishmen to Dublin. The utmost grief was everywhere manifest, expressions being heard on every side indicating that many could hardly believe their great and beloved leader could have so suddenly departed.

The coffin during the procession rested on an open hearse, the floral design accompanying it being the one sent by the widow (who was too ill to attend) bearing the words: "To My Own True Love, My Husband, My King."

Revs. Vincent and Frye read the burial service by the light of lanterns. The thousands within hearing listened reverently, and all joined tearfully in the recitation of the Lord's Prayer. As soon as the grave was filled up the crowd slowly and quietly dispersed.

Bold Pennsylvania Burglars.

HOLLIDAYSBURG, Pa., Oct. 12.—Burglars broke into the clothing store of Henry Rice early Sunday morning and carried off a wagon load of goods valued at $2,100. The robbers then forced their way into Walter Lindsay's general merchandise store, and after blowing the safe open extracted $500 in cash. The noise of the explosion awakened the neighbors, but they were driven off at the point of revolvers. The robbers escaped into the mountains, and a posse is now looking for them.

A Double Murderer at 21.

WICHITA, Kan., Oct. 10.—A verdict of guilty has been rendered against Clyde Maddux for the murder of John Mullen, of Oklahoma City, nearly two years ago. One night Mullen heard a woman's screams issuing from a neighboring house, and sallying forth to the rescue, he was shot dead in his doorway. The murderer is only 21, but this is his second killing, he having some three months before this affair shot Deputy United States Marshal Howard dead on the main street of Oklahoma City.

A GRAND TRIBUTE.

Chicago's Memorial to General Ulysses S. Grant.

Statue in Lincoln Park Unveiled—Imposing Ceremonies Attend the Event—A Grand Military and Civic Parade and Naval Display.

A WARRIOR HONORED.

CHICAGO, Oct. 8.—The great metropolis of the west suspended the bustle and activity of its business interests to do honor to the memory of an illustrious citizen-soldier and statesman. The magnificent statue erected by the citizens of Chicago to the immortal memory of Ulysses Simpson Grant, artisan, citizen-soldier, general, commander in chief of the armies of the United States, and twice elected to the highest office in the gift of the people of his native land, was formally unveiled at Lincoln park. The great procession moved at 2 p. m.

A division of the city police, 500 strong, under command of Chief McClaughry, in columns of companies, the first on foot and those following mounted, led the way. Then on prancing steeds came Gen. Miles and Gen. Joseph Stockton, chief of staff, with their staffs. The second division was led by a regiment of United States infantry from Fort Sheridan, followed by a battery of United States artillery and Gen. Miles' famous old Battery E, of the First artillery, and behind these came for a distance of over a mile the infantry and cavalry of the National Guard, the various companies representing every section of the state. The third division was a notable one, being composed of members of the societies of the army of the Tennessee, the army of the Potomac and the army of the Cumberland.

Gen. Horace Clark and his staff headed the Fifth division, which was exclusively composed of members of the Grand Army of the Republic. Conspicuous in this division was a little regiment, the Twenty-first Illinois infantry. At the head of the little company a one armed veteran bore a stand of colors. They were the selfsame colors that the hero of Appomattox himself unfurled in front of his headquarters when elected colonel of the regiment. The sixth division was composed of veterans and the Sons of Veterans and the seventh and last of civic societies. Prominent in this division was Chicago post of veterans of the Confederate army.

It is estimated that fully 20,000 men were in line.

When the division containing the distinguished guests had reached the base of the monument Mrs. U. S. Grant, Jesse Grant and his wife and their children were escorted to seats on the right of Judge Gresham.

Mrs. Grant, in response to earnest requests, appeared on the speaker's stand and bowed. The trial was too severe for her. She wept before the old soldiers who had called her out, and they bowed their heads, while not a few were visibly affected.

Arrived at the park, when all was in readiness, Chairman E. S. Dreyer called the vast gathering to order. Bishop John P. Newman offered prayer. At the close of the invocation Edward S. Taylor, on behalf of the trustees of the Grant monument fund, presented the monument to the Lincoln park commissioners. As he closed he waved his hand toward the great pile of stone surmounted by the veiled statue. At a word, amid cheers, Miss Mary Strong, daughter of the late Gen. Strong, released the fastenings and the veil dropped asunder. As the rays of light touched the magnificent statue of bronze, flashing forth its radiant splendor, revealing every curve of the noble figure of horse and rider and enveloping in a golden glow the stern face of the dead hero, a great cheer arose from the multitude—a cheer that was American and from the heart.

And then there boomed forth the presidential salute of twenty-one guns from the military and fleet. When the rumble of the last gun had ceased Hon. William C. Goudy for the commissioners of Lincoln park, and as its president, made a graceful speech of acceptance. Hon. Hempstead Washburne, as mayor, accepted the monument on the part of the citizens of Chicago.

Judge Gresham then delivered his oration, at the conclusion of which the vast crowd dispersed.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent;
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

THE OLD COFFEE-MILL.

Just at the hour when chanticleer
Wakes his harem with lusty crow,
I turn on my pillow and seem to hear
A welcome sound from the world below.
It is not the chirp of the early bird,
Nor the passing milkman's sonorous thrill
Whose homely call in my dream is heard,
But the musical grind of the coffee-mill,
Mingled with mother's staccato clear:
"It's time to get up now, William, dear."

It always hung by the chimney wide—
"G-'round, g-'round, g-'round g-'r-o-u-n-d;"
Time and wear and rust it defied—
"G-'round, g-'round, g-'round g-'r-o-u-n-d;"
Its music silenced the cricket's note—
"G-'round, g-'round, g-'round g-'r-o-u-n-d;"
Its fragrance tickled each thirsty throat—
The hand that turned it, turned with a will,
And incense ground from the old coffee-mill.

O, years that are gone, come back again!
And find in my pillow a rose-leaf dream;
Take out of my heart this smarting pain—
Make all things really what now they seem;
Bring the eyes that had never learned to weep,
Bring the slumber that held me at early dawn,
Awake me, as then, from sweet boyish sleep
To weed the garden or hoe the corn,
To the tune of father's "Git up thar, Bill!"
An the rhythm and rhyme of the old coffee-mill.

THE U. S. MINTS.

Something About the Process of Coining Money.

It is quite natural that the United States mint should have many visitors. It amuses one, the manufacture of money, and even the hardened millionaire or the passionless cashier of a savings bank is bound to be impressed by the fine sang-froid of the maidens who sit at the coinage machines, their laps heaping full of the precious planketa, and handle gold and silver as coolly as though they were shelling peas. Yes, it is well worth while to come to Philadelphia just to see them. You find the mint on Chestnut street, just below Broad, a rather squat but striking structure of white marble, with a Grecian facade.

The first building erected in the United States for public use, under the authority of the federal government, was one for the United States mint. It was a plain, brick building, on the east side of Seventh street, near Arch, and the corner-stone was laid by the great David Rittenhouse, director of the mint, on July 31, 1792. The following October operations of coining began. On the 19th of May, 1829, an act was passed by congress locating the United States mint on its present site. The first coinage was of silver half-dimes, in October, 1792. The first metal purchased for coinage was six pounds of old copper, at one shilling and threepence per pound, which was coined and delivered to the treasurer in 1793. The first deposit of silver bullion was made on July 18, 1794, by the Bank of Maryland. It consisted of "coins of France," amounting to $80,715.73½. The first return of gold coinage was on July 31, 1795, and consisted of seven hundred and forty-four half eagles.

Over forty thousand persons visit the mint in the course of a year. Owing to the immense amount of the precious metals which is always in course of transition and the watchful care necessary to a correct transaction of business, the public is necessarily excluded from some of the departments. The system of surveillance adopted in the mint is so precise and the weighing so accurate, that the abstraction of the smallest particle of metal would lead to almost immediate detection.

All the gold and silver received for coining is first weighed. The largest weight used in the deposit-room is five hundred ounces, the smallest is the thousandth part of an ounce. The scales are wonderfully delicate, and are examined and adjusted on alternate days. On the right of this room is one of the twelve vaults in the building. Of solid masonry, several of them are iron-lined, with double doors of the same metal and most complicated and burglar-proof locks.

It is estimated that about fifteen hundred million dollars' worth of gold has been received and weighed in this room, probably nine-tenths of the amount being from California since its discovery there in the year 1848. Previous to that time the surplus of gold came principally from Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia. During the past ten years considerable quantities have been received from Nova Scotia, but most of the gold that reaches the mint at the present time comes from California, Montana, Colorado, Idaho, Nevada, Arizona, Oregon, Dakota, Virginia, South Carolina and New Mexico. Formerly the silver used by the mint came principally from Mexico and South America, but since the discovery of the immense veins of that metal in the territories of the United States, the supply is furnished from the great west. The copper used comes principally from the mines of Lake Superior, the finest from Minnesota. The nickel is chiefly from Lancaster county, Pennsylvania.

After the metal had been carefully weighed in the presence of the depositor and the proper officials, it is locked in iron boxes and taken to the melting-room, where it is opened by two men, each provided with a key to one of the separate locks. There are four furnaces in this room, and the first process of melting takes place here. The gold and silver, being mixed with borax and other fluxing material, is placed in pots, melted and put in iron molds, and, when cooled, is again taken to the deposit-room in bars, where it is reweighed and a small piece cut from each lot by the assayer. From this the fineness of the whole is ascertained, the value calculated, and the depositor paid. The metal in its rough state is then transferred to the refiner.

The two essential things regarding every piece of metal offered in payment of any dues are, first, the weight or quantity; next, the fineness or purity of the same. The process of weighing even the baser metals used in coining must be conducted by the careful use of accurate scales, with precise notes of the results. In precious metals—gold, silver and their high-grade alloys—a very small variation in the fineness makes a great difference in the value. Nothing is more essential than the accurate determination of the weight of the sample and of the metal obtained from it. It requires keen sight and most delicate adjustment in the hand which manipulates the lilliputian scales of an assayer's table. The smallest weight used in the mint is found in the assay room; it is the thirteen-hundredth part of a grain, and can scarcely be seen with the naked eye, unless on a white ground. The assay department is strictly a technical branch of the service. It has been practically under one regime for the last fifty years.

After the gold and silver used by the mint have been separated from each other and purified, they are conveyed to the drying cellar, put under pressure of some eighty tons, and all the water pressed out. The metal is then dried with heat, and afterwards taken in large cakes to the furnaces. The melting rooms are on the first floor. Here all the metal used in coining is alloyed, melted and poured into narrow molds. These castings, called ingots, are about a foot long, a half inch thick and from one to two and a half inches in breadth. The value of gold ingots is from six hundred to fourteen hundred dollars each; those of silver about sixty dollars. The floors that cover the melting rooms are made of iron in honeycomb pattern, so that they can be readily taken up to save the dust, their roughness acting as a scraper and preventing any metallic particles from clinging to the soles of the shoes of those who pass through the department. The sweepings of the entire building have averaged twenty-three thousand dollars per annum for the last five years.

The methods of coining money have varied with the progress in mechanic arts, and are but vaguely traced from the beginning, the primitive mode being by the casting of the piece in sand, the impression being made with a punch. In the middle ages the metal was hammered into sheets of the required thickness, cut with shears into shape and then stamped by hand with the design. The mill and screw, by which greater increase in power, with finer finish, was gained, dates back to the sixteenth century. This process, with various modifications and improvements, continued in use in the Philadelphia mint until 1836.

The first steam coining press was invented by M. Thonnelier, of France, in 1833, and was first used in the United States mint in 1836. It was remodeled and rebuilt in 1858, but in 1874 was superseded by the one now in operation, the very perfection of mechanism, in which the vibration and unsteady bearing of the former press were entirely obviated and precision attained by the solid stroke, with a saving of over seventy-five per cent. in the wearing and breaking of the dies. The dies for coining are prepared by engravers especially employed at the mint for that purpose. The process of engraving them consists in cutting the devices and legends in soft steel, those parts being depressed which in the coin appear in relief. This, having been finished and hardened, constitutes an "original die," too precious to be directly employed in striking coins, but used for multiplying dies. It is first employed to impress another piece of soft steel, which then presents the appearance of a coin and is called a hub. This hub, being hardened, is used to impress other pieces of steel in like manner, which, being like the original die, are hardened and used for striking the coins. A pair of these will on an average perform two weeks' work.

The planchets, or discs, of metal not yet stamped, after being adjusted, are first, in order to protect the surface of the coin, passed through the milling machine. They are fed to it through an upright tube, and as they descend from the lower aperture are caught upon the edge of a revolving wheel and carried about a quarter of a revolution, during which the edge is compressed and forced up, the space between the wheel and the rim being a little less than the diameter of the planchet. This apparatus moves so nimbly that five hundred and sixty half dimes can be milled in a minute, but for large pieces the average is about one hundred and twenty. In this room are the milling machines and the massive but delicate coining presses, ten in number. Each of these is capable of coining from eighty to one hundred perfect pieces a minute. Only the largest are used in making coins of large denominations.

After being stamped the coins are taken to the coiner's room and placed on a long table—the double-eagles in piles of ten each. The light and heavy ones are kept separate in coining, and when delivered to the treasurer they are mixed together in such proportions as to give him full weight in every delivery. By law the deviation in the standard weight in delivering to him must not exceed three pennyweights in one thousand double-eagles. The gold coins—as small as quarter-eagles being counted and weighed to verify the count—are put up in bags of five thousand dollars each. The three-dollar pieces are put in bags of three thousand dollars, and one-dollar pieces in one thousand-dollar bags. The silver pieces, and sometimes small gold, are counted on a very ingenious contrivance called a "counting board." By this process twenty-five dollars in five-cent pieces can be counted in less than a minute. The "boards" are a simple flat surface of wood with copper partitions the height and size of the coin to be counted, rising from the surface at regular intervals and running parallel with each other from top to bottom. They somewhat resemble a common household "washing-board," with the grooves running parallel with the sides, but much larger. The boards are worked by hand over a box, and as the pieces are counted they slide into a drawer prepared to receive them. They are then put into bags and are ready for shipment.

For the various duties of the mint there are over three hundred persons employed as clerks, workmen, etc.—say about two-thirds men and one-third women—the number depending largely, of course, upon the amount of work to be done.—Melville Phillips, in Once a Week.

The St. Louis Republic never waits to be driven along the path of progress by sharp competition, but keeps so far in the lead that competition is an impossibility. Its first bold departure was the publication of its weekly in five seperate editions—one each for Missouri, Illinois, Texas, Arkansas and Kansas, and a general edition for the rest of the country. Next, it made the Weekly Republic a semi-weekly, issuing it in two sections of six pages each. Then it established a special Tariff Department, edited by Hon. W. L. Wilson, M. C. Now, it announces that each of these original features will continue permanently, and, besides, that two more pages will soon be added to one section each week, giving subscribers fourteen pages, regularly every week, for only $1.00 a year. BRITTON BUDGET.

Rain! Rain!! Rain!!!

O. B. Lenardson's new house is all ready for plastering, as is also Ed. Bauchman's. Hustle, boys, or Grim Winter will catch you out of them, instead of in them.

E. W. Lenardson entertained about thirty of his friends Wednesday evening at his home, and with the banjo, organ, and cornet they enjoyed a very musical evening indeed.

While in W. Lenardson & Son's the other day we noticed they had just received an immense invoice of winter underwear, both for ladies and gentlemen. Anyone will do well to give them a call.

A number of our young people attended a surprise oyster supper at J. B. Coller's, in Macon, last Friday evening, given in honor of Mrs. Coller's sister, Miss Nellie Easterly, of Ypsilanti. All report a grand good time, and say they would like to go again.

Our neighbor, Lyman Hause, met with quite an accident Monday afternoon at the sawmill, just as they were closing down. His hand unconsciously got a little too near the saw, and now the third and fourth fingers of his left hand are devoid of flesh.

E. M. Lewis came very near losing his life by being run down by the 6 o'clock extra on the C. J. & M. He tumbled off his speeder just in time to see it go flying in the air. He received no injuries, however, but we rather think this narrow escape will probably wind up his speeder traveling, for a while at least.

C. D. Loose has purchased all the Joe Daykin village property and will start in the mercantile business at once, with L. A. Babcock as chief clerk and business manager. Mr. Loose is a live, stirring business man and a few more like him would make Britton boom. He intends building an elevator, but on account of approaching cold weather is obliged to wait until spring.

Monday morning a horse and open buggy were found standing by Osborn's warehouse. To divulge what the vehicle contained would only be to expose what a grand time its occupants must have been having. Only half a dozen empty bottles, with quite a profuse sprinkling of the upheaval of Jonah, were all that were left to tell the sad story—for sad it is to those who stop to think. We understand the rig was from Adrian, to which place it has been returned.

MANCHESTER MATTERS.

Wedding bells are ringing.

Mrs. Richard Hall is quite sick at this writing.

Julius C. Mattison and wife, of Norvell, visited in town on Friday.

Mrs. H. G. Conklin and Flora returned to Grand Rapids on Saturday.

August Hoffman died of lung trouble at an early hour last Friday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. John Anderson, of Tecumseh visited their Manchester friends last Thursday.

Lots of chickens were delivered at the L. S. depot last Friday. C. Canfield, of Chelsea, was the buyer.

Mrs. J. B. McMahon and son, of Ludington, left for home on Tuesday, after a long visit at James McMahon's.

The Misses Merrick, of St. Johns, are visiting their grandfather, J. R. Holmes, and other relatives in this vicinity.

The Epworth League will hold an observation social at the home of Miss Mary Shafer, on Wednesday evening, Oct. 28th.

Capt. Simeon R. Spencer died at 8:30 Saturday evening. He was born at Springfield Vt., in 1807 and settled in Michigan in 1836. In 1835 he married Jane E. Hill, of Scottsville, N. Y. He leaves an aged widow and five children: A. W. Spencer, in the employ of the L. S. Railway Co. in Manchester, and four daughters, Mrs A. G. Amsden, Englewood, Ill.; Mrs. Belle Hall, of Ypsilanti; Mrs. Sarah Weir and Mrs. Martha Denison, of this place. The funeral services were conducted by the masonic fraternity on Tuesday at 1:30 p. m.

The social at L. M. Baldwin's was a complete success. A beautiful evening with the full moon, tempted the young people out and nearly one hundred were in attendance. The literary program consisted of a splendid declamation, for a small boy, by Clarence Rushton. Miss Mamie Payne also furnished a fine declamation. Mrs. C. D. McMahon and Miss Ida B. Sloat read selections. Albert D. English read an essay as did his sister, Miss Nettie. The company was favored with several pieces of music by Misses Ethel Baldwin and Belle Hardy.

THE INVISIBLE ARMY Of microbes (micro-organisms) is a mighty host, which indeed no man can number. Invisible to the naked eye, the poisonous part of this army is the cause of four-fifths of all the diseases of the human family—they destroy more lives than war, famine, fire, murder and shipwreck combined, and they actually abbreviate the average term of human life by three-fourths. The way to relieve the human body of these microbes is to take Swift's Specific. When this medicine gets well into the system the poisonous germ must leave—he cannot exist there, hence he seeks an exit through the pores of the skin. After he departs, a continued use of the Specific will force out the poison, and the patient is well.

Four and five cents a bushel have been offered by some of the farmers for husking.

The only hailstorm in this section this season came last week Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Beckley moved her household effects to Tecumseh last week, where she will make it her home.

Leila Sutton went to Weston Thursday of last week to attend a reception given Chas. Smith and bride.

A. R. Arner, who is under the doctor's care with blood poison and typhoid fever, is no better at present writing.

A. C. Arner has accepted a position as brakeman on extras on the C. J. & M. railroad and began work the first of the week.

Those who were in Chicago and Harvey last week have returned home and report a fine time and business lively there.

Postmaster Culbertson's mother, who has been spending several weeks with relatives in New York State, returned to her son's Tuesday.

Clara Temple, who has been attending school at Albion College, came home Tuesday night, being compelled to leave school on account of poor health.

The W. C. T. U. was well attended at Mrs. Sarah Pocklington's, on Thursday afternoon of last week. Refreshments were served by the hostess, which is out of the general order of the society, but none the less acceptable, for which the Union return their thanks.

The next regular meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held at the home of Mrs. W. P. Cadmus on Thursday afternoon of next week. It is hoped there will be a good attendance, as this is the last meeting at Mrs. Cadmus's, as she leaves for her new home at Harvey in a few weeks.

On Thursday evening of last week upwards of seventy friends and neighbors spent a very pleasant time at the home of E. C. VanVleet, the occasion being Mr. and Mrs. VanVleet's birthday anniversary, he being 62 years of age and she 49. The gathering was a surprise to Mr. VanVleet. Refreshments were served and the evening was spent in social conversation. The friends join in wishing for them a good many such gatherings and birthday anniversaries.

MACON MUSIC.

Judge Geddes and niece, Miss Terry, of Adrian, spent Sunday with John Sage and family.

Granville Mills is putting up a new horse barn. Horace Burgess is doing the mason work.

Mrs. Lee, of Ypsilanti, who visited Mrs. James Hatch several days, returned to her home last week.

Will Chambers and wife went to Vassar, Mich., last Thursday to spend a few weeks with relatives and friends.

The Ladies' aid society, held at the home of Mrs. Charles Morgan last Wednesday afternoon, was largely attended and many were detained on account of the storm.

The W. C. T. U. of Macon will hold a tea meeting and social at the home of Mrs. Anna S. Hatch on Friday afternoon, Oct. 30. A general and cordial invitation is extended to all.

Mrs. John C. Mills, of Macon, and L. Chaivre, of Redford, were the only ones among 47,000 guessers who hit the exact weight of the American Injector Company's exhibit at the Detroit Exposition—1154 pounds. The $100 prize was equally divided between them.

A surprise was given Chbester Gooding last Saturday afternoon, his 77th birthday. There were about 40 relatives, neighbors and friends assembled to greet him. Although he has been unable to get out much, being afflicted with rheumatism, he was in good spirits and enjoyed the event. It is needless to say they had a sumptuous supper and all went home feeling that the afternoon had been happily spent. They assured Uncle Chester they would see him again. His oldest daughter keeps house for him. His son works the farm, as it joins his own. The houses are connected by telephone.

RAISIN VALLEY SEMINARY.

A pretty nasty time getting back to school this week.

There is some talk of making a continuation of the telegraph line to the rooms of Misses Edwards and Wilson.

Mary Wood's poodle dog followed her to school the other day, and the incident seemed quite similar to "Mary had a little lamb."

Misses Love and Vaile played the part of Quakeresses very well last literary evening, except that we generally expect that the conversation of a true Quakeress will run in a different channel.

Willie Millard, a student of this place, will undoubtedly be a great inventor when his time comes, judging from the many different latch strings and other useful articles which he has invented or mapped out.

The essay contest in Prof. White's essay class was a brilliant success. The contest was to see who could write the best essay on "the Fair." The prize, a volume of "The Last Days of Pompeii," was won by Blanche Smith.

Took His Own Life.

Last summer a man named Wm. Whitehill worked in the Table Factory. He lived in one of Mrs. Orr's houses with a woman who claimed to be his wife. One day his real wife came from Three Rivers and took the two children, a boy and a girl, aged about 8 and 5, away by force during their father's absence, and took them to her father's home. The affair created quite a sensation at the time and shortly thereafter Mr. Whitehill left Tecumseh for parts unknown. The Free Press of Tuesday contained the following dispatch from Marquette, stating that his body had been found in the woods near that city:

MARQUETTE, Oct. 19.—Hunters yesterday discovered the weather-beaten remains of a man hanging to a low tree about two miles northwest of the city. An inquest to-day disclosed that the body was that of Wm. Whitehill, an expert wood turner, formerly of Detroit. He had been employed here by the Michigan Polygonal Turning Company, but was discharged early in July. On July 21 he paid his bills and left his boarding place. Calling there about a week later for his mail, he was naturally supposed to have left the city, but evidently, from the state of the body, went into the woods and hanged himself about August 1. It was a most determined suicide, as his knees touched the ground, and he had evidently strangled himself slowly.

A PURE BAKING POWDER

A baking powder that can be depended upon to be free from lime and alum is a desideratum in these days of adulterated food. So far as can be judged from the official reports, the "Royal" seems to be the only one yet found by chemical analyses to be entirely without one or the other of these substances, and absolutely pure. This, it is shown, results from the exclusive use by its manufacturers of cream of tartar specially refined and prepared by patent processes which totally remove the tartrate of lime and other impurities. The cost of this chemically pure cream of tartar is much greater than any other, and it is used in no baking powder except the "Royal," the manufactures of which control the patents under which it is refined.

Dr. Edward G. Love, formerly analytical chemist for the U. S. Government, who made the analyses for the New York State Board of Health in their investigation of baking powders, and whose intimate knowledge of the ingredients of all those sold in this market enables him to speak authoritatively, says of the purity, wholesomeness, and superior quality of the "Royal:"

"I find the Royal Baking Powder composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder, and does not contain either alum or phosphates, or other injurious substance."

Prof. Love's tests, and the recent official tests by both the United States and Canadian Governments, show the Royal Baking Powder to be superior to all others in strength and leavening power. It is not only the most economical in use, but makes the finest flavored and most wholesome food.

Big Prizes for Live Stock.

Chief Buchanan of the World's Columbian Exposition Live Stock Department has sent out about 3,000 copies of the live stock premium list to the various fair and breeder's associations of the country, and is receiving responses which show that the live stock exhibit at the Exposition will be something tremendous. Besides the large premiums offered by the Exposition for a live stock exhibit, all the various breeders' associations are offering large prizes, notably for shorthorns, Herefords and Jerseys. As evidence of the widespread interest taken in live stock show A. E. Mansell, of Shropshire, England, offers a prize of $500 for the best American bred Shropshire ram. The State of Illinois offers $40,000 in premiums for live stock; the Clydesdale horse breeders offer $5,000 extra prizes; the cattle associations offer extra prizes as follows: Galloway, $3,000; shorthorn, $6,000; Hereford, $5,000: Jersey, $10,000, and Holstein, $10,000. The swine, sheep and dog breeders also offer extra money prizes. The money prizes to be paid for live stock will amount to $250,000 or more, which of course, includes the sum of $150,000 voted by the Exposition Co. for premiums in that department. The Exposition buildings for the accommodation of live stock will cover thirty acres.

THE DeVERE—CAMPANINI CONCERT.

The first concert of the Tecumseh Entertainment Course for the coming season will be given Thursday evening November 5th, by the celebrated DeVere Campanini troupe, which is regarded by good critics as the finest concert troupe in the world. The troupe is composed of five persons, each one of whom is a musician of national reputation. The two ladies, Clementine DeVere and Rosa Linde, are the soprano and contralto; Italo Campanini assumes the tenor parts; Franz Wilczek is the violinist; Jaques Friedberge is the pianist. Their concerts are a combination of vocal and instrumental music of the most difficult character and of the very highest merit. We append a few press notices, showing how their concerts are received by musical audiences in our larger cities.

Campanini sang at the popular concert given last evening at Music Hall. His selections were "Celeste Aida," the romanze from "Carmen," and the Duke's song from "Rigoletto." He was in excellent condition and master of his voice. He still charms; his voice still thrills, still woos, and even to-day there is no tenor upon the operatic or concert stage in this country who can compare with him in the skillful management of the voice. He is, in a word, the embodiment of healthy Italian traditions.—Boston Post.

Mr. Wilczek brought the first part of the program to a close by playing Prume's "Melancholie" without accompaniment. The writer has heard this familiar solo many times, but never given with rarer delicacy or more clearness and artistic expression than by this gifted pupil of the great Joachim.—Rutland Herald.

An interesting feature of the concert was the reappearance, after an absence of five years, of the young artist Jaques Friedberger. He played the Henselt Concerto in a most satisfactory manner, and we hope to hear him often on the concert platform.—N. Y. World.

Mlle. Clementine De Vere never sang more delightfully in this country than at the concert in Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon. This admirable singer, whose voice and style remind one constantly of Adelina Patti, sang the aria from "La Perle du Brezil," and then, in answer to prolonged applause from the large audience present, Gounod's "Printemps."—New York Herald.

Miss Linde possesses a voice of altogether unusual quality; so strikingly sonorous is it in the lower register as to lead to the conviction that it is an unusually fine baritone rather than a contralto.—Brooklyn Citizen.

The November Atlantic.

Miss Isabel F. Hapgood has translated a large number of Tolstoy's books and Miss Isabel F. Hapgood has been journeying in Russia. What more natural than that she should see "Count Tolstoy at home," and what still more natural than that she should make this the title and subject of a paper in the November Atlantic. There has not been a more vivid or appreciative sketch of Tolstoy yet written. Miss Hapgood, although admiring his great gifts, is not a blind adherent of his changeable philosophies. And her sketch is so clever, so trenchant, so well-bred, that it must be read if one would understand Tolstoy better than he understands himself. Here is a bit of useful information: the name Tolstoy with the y is the writer's own way of spelling his own name, and not a typographical error.

There is the first installment of a two-part story by Henry James, entitled "The Chaperon," a subject quite to Mr. James's taste. He delights in portraying the joys and sorrows of a highly conventional society, and how eleverly he does it is again proved by the story in question.

Professor William J. Stillman's paper on Journalism and Literature will be read with disfavor by the journalist, and by the litterateur with delight. Mrs. Catherwood's agreeable serial is concluded. Lafcadio Hearn has a picturesquely written paper on life in Japan. Louise Imogen Guiney writes interestingly about a forgotten immortal, Mr. James Clarence Mangan. There is a short story of Italian life by E. Cavazza; while the solid reading of the number is further augmented by a second paper on "A People without Law,"—the Indians,—by James Bradley Thayer; by S. E. Winbolt's Schools at Oxford; and by some able reviews.

TECUMSEH, MICH., OCT. 22, 1891.

The Ohio women are all on Gov. Campbell's side in the present campaign. They know that the repeal of the McKinley bill will bring about cheaper goods and cheaper household supplies.

Gov. Campbell received a royal welcome at Toledo last Friday evening. If Memorial Hall had been twice as large it could not have held the crowd. The Governor is making a brilliant canvass and the prospects of his election grow brighter every day.

If our farmers were confined to the "home market" for the sale of their wheat this fall, can any of them tell us what the price of wheat would be at present? With the immense surplus on hand they would be selling it for about sixty cents a bushel, or feeding it out to their stock.

A contest of type-setting machines began last week in Chicago. Four machines have entered, viz: the Mergenthaler linotype, the Rogers typograph, the McMillan type-setting machine and the St. John typo-bar. The contest will be watched with much interest by the entire printing fraternity.

The exhibition of mob rule at the City Convention in Detroit was a disgrace to the men who engaged in it, and we greatly mistake the spirit of the Detroit Democracy if they fail to rebuke it at the polls. The Thompson ring ticket should be defeated at all hazards. The issue has taken such a shape that the Detroit Democracy, in supporting the Miner ticket, are simply fighting for self preservation.

The Chicago Times says: "The editor of the Mail and Express has discovered that "free trade is ruining England." The traveled American who has seen English capital reaching out to all parts of the world, the English flag flying in every seaport, and the factories of England the greatest and most numerous of any nation, will look upon this story much as Lincoln received the story that Grant drank whiskey. If England is a sample of the ruin wrought by free trade let us have a little ruin likewise.

The Democratic party has abandoned, and abandoned finally, its sneaking fear that the people of the United States could not be made to understand the difference between taxes to defray the necessary expenses of the government and taxes to fill the pockets of private persons. The people have pushed the party on to a frank avowal of hostility to the protective principle. The time will soon come when it will no longer be possible to run down to Washington and get Congress to vote riches into the pockets of favored gentlemen at the expense of the whole body of taxpayers. That game is nearly played out.—Philadelphia Record.

The St. Louis Republic has this bit of advice to our own Ex-Congressman: "Michigan would better call its Wolverine orator named Allen back to the home pastures. He is not fairly representing the intelligence of the state. He asked an audience at New Bedford the other day if they 'ever heard of any reciprocity measure advocated by democrats.' Mr. Allen must be a very superficial student if he does not know that the very essence of reciprocity pervades the tariff doctrines of the democratic party. Not reciprocity bottled for a partisan president to cork and uncork as he pleases, but the wholesome natural product—the pure quill."

The New York Tribune says: "A remarkable old hand-press, from Georgia, will be exhibited at the World's Fair. It is now in the office of "The Lee County News" and is in a remarkable state of preservation, according to a local paper. Curious hieroglyhics are carved upon its iron frame. Among them "G. W., his X mark," can be plainly seen. There is not an older or more curiously constructed hand-press in the country. It was used as a battering ram during the Revolutionary War, put together afterward and made to do service as a cotton-gin, later on was a corn-sheller, and still later on it served its time as a cane-grinding machine. It has a personal acquaintance with every editor in Georgia, and with many generations of them gone before.

THE STEEL RAIL COMBINE.

A Meeting Held to Arrange For Another Foreclosure of Its Tariff Mortgage.

The steel rail trust held an important meeting in Philadelphia recently to complete the arrangements for the admission of the Sparrow's Point (Md.), branch of the Pennsylvania Steel Co. into the trust and to manage the allotment to each company.

It will be remembered that the "trust" consists of the Illinois Steel Co., Carnegie Brothers & Co., the Pennsylvania Steel Co., the Bethlehem Iron Co., the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Co. and the Combined Iron Co. This combine was powerful enough to secure the retention in the McKinley tariff of a prohibitory duty, thus giving it absolute control of the home market.

At the meeting in Philadelphia plans were discussed by which the combine could be able to take advantage of any future boom which may occur in railroad building as a result of the enormous cereal harvests of the present year, just as it did in the years 1880 to 1883 and in 1886 and 1887.

In the three years preceding 1880 trade was poor and the increase in railway mileage averaged only 3,258 miles per year. During these three years the price of steel rails averaged $44.53 per ton. In 1880 a change took place and a boom set in which lasted three years. For these three years the new mileage built averaged 9,533 miles per year. The combine foreclosed its tariff mortgage and raised the price of rails to $59.04 per ton. But in their eagerness to get from the railroads all that they could they overstepped themselves and in spite of a tariff of $28 per ton importations averaged 175,495 tons per year.

Again in 1883, 1884 and 1885 there was a falling off in railway construction, the average increase in mileage being only 4,532 and the price of steel rails fell to an average of $32.33 ½ per ton. In 1886 another boom in railway construction began and continued through the following year, the average number of miles built being 10,486. Again the rail combine put up prices to an average for the two years of $35.81. In 1888 there was a decrease in railway construction and prices went down.

Now, however, all the indications point to another boom, as the following from the Iron Age shows: "A discussion of the situation with many thoughtful and experienced members of the iron trade leads to the conviction that a notable rise in the price in the leading lines of iron and steel must be expected. A consideration of the condition of affairs in the rail trade would point to the conclusion that a notable rise in prices cannot well be expected during the balance of this year, but the anticipations of requirements for 1892 may lead to the beginning of a boom before the year is closed."

To prepare for this boom the combine held its meeting to prepare for another foreclosure of its tariff mortgage, making three in less than twelve years.

THE TARIFF AND PRICES.

High Tariffs Depress the Prices of Farm Products—Low Tariffs Raise Them—The Lessons of Our History.

The relation between tariffs and the prices of agricultural products is an interesting one. Commerce or buying and selling between nations is nothing but barter when unrestricted by legislative acts passed to force payments to be made in certain products only. When commerce is free, when trade is free, nations buy what they need and pay for it with a portion of that of which they have a surplus. Thus, for instance, England never raises sufficient breadstuffs for her own consumption; she is therefore an importer of them. At the same time she makes more of certain kinds of manufactured products than she can consume, with these, whenever she can, she pays for her imported breadstuffs.

On the other hand the United States always has a surplus of breadstuffs, beyond the need of home consumption, and must sell it abroad. At the same time there are many manufactured products for which there is a greater demand than supply at any price and resort must be had to importation.

Were trade between England and the United States free, the United States would send England breadstuffs and receive manufactured products as payment. But here the high tariff on manufactured products steps in and prevents the exporters of breadstuffs, or, in other words, the farmers, from receiving payment in manufactured goods. Under its restrictions payment must be made in gold. Nations, like individuals, find it to their advantage to sell at the same time that they buy. Just as the grocer will pay more for the farmer's potatoes, butter and eggs when the farmer will take groceries in exchange, so nations will be willing to pay more for what they need when payment can be made in goods. This is especially true of the commerce between Europe and the United States. Whenever our laws have permitted us to accept payment in goods, the prices of farm products have been higher than when payment in goods has been prohibited.

High tariffs restrict imports and exports and raise freight rates. Thus they tend to make exporting unprofitable, and this in turn acts disastrously upon prices.

This is not theory but plain fact, and our experience in the past proves it to be true. From 1789 to 1816 we had a low revenue tariff which did not seriously affect foreign trade; from 1816 to 1821 the tariff, though higher than in the former period, was generally low upon most products, except iron and cotton; from 1824 to 1832 we had a period of abnormally high duties; from 1833 to 1842 the duties were again low; from 1842 to 1846 they were raised again only to be followed in 1846 by another low tariff, and in 1857 by a still lower tariff, or what high protectionists chose to designate as a tariff for revenue.

Our exports of domestic products, mainly agricultural, under the operations of these various tariffs, show the following results:

Revenue tariff, 1789 to 1816—Exports, 1789, $19,000,000; 1816, $64,781,991; increase, 241 per cent.

Moderate protective tariff, 1816 to 1824—Exports, 1816, $64,781,991; 1824, $99,549,500; decrease, 21 per cent.

High protective tariff, 1824 to 1832—Exports, 1824, $99,549,500; 1832, [illegible]; increase, 35 per cent.

Lower compromise tariff, 1832 to 1842—Exports, 1832, $91,796,172; 1842, [illegible]; increase, 48 per cent.

High protective tariff, 1842 to 1846—Exports, 1842, $99,799,242; 1846, $101,715,041; increase, 1 per cent.

Low revenue tariff, 1846 to 1857—Exports, 1846, $101,715,041; 1857, $278,908,715; increase, 174 per cent.

Lower revenue tariff, 1857 to 1860—Exports, 1857, $278,908,715; 1860, $316,242,425; increase, 13 per cent.

Thus under eight years of a moderate protective tariff and eight years of abnormally high tariffs our exports became less than they were in 1816, under a revenue tariff.

These figures show clearly the disastrous effects of high tariffs upon our export trade. On the other hand, under low tariffs, our export trade flourished and was prosperous.

Not less significant are the effects of high duties upon the prices of farm products. In every case, as shown in the following table, high tariffs lowered prices and low tariffs raised them. Unfortunately we have no figures of prices before 1816:

	Wheat, Bushels.	Oats, Bushels.	Corn, Bushels.	Cotton, Pound.	Butter, Pound.
Moderate protective tariff, 1816-1824	1.26	....	.62	.14¾	.18
High protective tariff, 1824-1832	1.04½	50.27	.77¼	.12	.15½
Lower compromise tariff, 1833-1842	1.14	.43	.57	.05¾	.11¼
High protective tariff, 1843-1846	1.07	.31¼	.73 2-3	.09 4-5	.18
Low revenue tariff, 1847-1857	1.015	.46 4-5	.58 ¼	.11	.19
Lower revenue tariff, 1858-1860	1.41	.45

Thus under a moderate tariff wheat averaged $1.26 per bushel during the eight years from 1816 to 1824; under the high tariffs from 1824 to 1832 the price fell to an average of $1.10½. A low tariff was enacted in 1833 and the price averaged $1.35. Then followed the high tariff of 1842 and wheat went down to a lower point than ever before, only to recover all that it had lost and to rise still higher under the revenue tariff of 1846.

What more conclusive proof of the disastrous effects of high tariffs upon the prices of agricultural products can be found than this?

Protection in Canada.

In the decade 1871 to 1881, the population of Canada increased 24.1 per cent. Just before 1881, the Canadian parliament adopted a protective tariff, and during the ten years ending 1891 the increase in population was 11.5 per cent., or less than half the rate of increase realized under the previous revenue tariff. Wherein do these figures support the pretense that "protection," so called, tends to develop a nation? Is there any evidence in this retrogressive experiment of the Canadians that higher duties, with their attendant higher prices and wages, help to attract settlement in a new country? The result of this artificial interference with the natural drift of development has been an alarming relative decadence, and should afford our neighbors food for reflection. If Canadians desire further evidence that protective duties tend to restrict the growth of population in young countries, they may find it in the recent census returns of the Australias, which also show that population grows fastest in the colonies least protected.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

Three Views of Labor.

The highest protectionist authorities are not agreed as to the superiority of American labor. The American Economist, the organ of the protective tariff league, says: "The fact that our mills and factories are filled with English, Scotch, French and German artisans disproves the superiority of our native laborers."

The New York Tribune, the thundering Jove of the protection Olympus, says: "It is acknowledged by foreign manufacturers and railroad men who have visited this country and carefully examined affairs here that the higher efficacy of labor secured by higher wages here to a great extent counterbalances the differences in wages paid."

And James G. Blaine says: "Undoubtedly the inequalities in the wages of English and American operatives are more than equalized by the greater efficiency of the latter and their longer hours of labor."

Where Tin Plate Taxes Pinch.

Last year the people were taxed on the tin plate imports $7,000,000. This year the tax at the same rate of importation will be $15,400,000. It is the people that must pay this tax. The National Provisioner, the organ of the canning industry, of this week tells how they are doing it. It says that lard cans of five-gallon size, which sold at 19 cents each wholesale before the McKinley bill went into effect, now cost 22.6 cents, and that square dinner kettles, with tray, flask and cup, costing formerly 31 cents, now cost 34.9 cents each wholesale, and that the same percentage of increase holds good as to all articles made of bright tin used for canning purposes. It is here where the tin plate tax pinches.—Pittsburgh Post.

—In 1890 cheese to the value of $1,295,506 was imported into this country. The same year we exported cheese to the value of $8,591,042. What we imported came in the shape of the small and rich Swiss and French cheeses, with which the article we export cannot possibly compete.—Rural New-Yorker.

The Farmer Pays the Freight.

We will send abroad 250,000,000 bushels of wheat. For it we will receive say $250,000,000. This will be invested in clothing, in carpets, in linens, in furniture, in chinaware, in ironware, in hardware, etc., etc.

When these cargoes reach New York they are seized by Federal officers. They are weighed and measured and valued, and the owners are compelled to pay in duties 50 per cent. of the value of the cargoes. This will be a tax of $125,000,000.

In other words, the farmers must send abroad three bushels of wheat in order to get in return the exchange value of two.

Last year the exports of cotton amounted to 5,800,000 bales. One-third of the return cargoes were confiscated under the plea of protection.

Of last year's cotton crop, two-thirds were exported, one-third was consumed at home.

It required all the cotton sold to American mills to pay the duties on the return cargoes taken in exchange for the 5,800,000 bales sold abroad.

Here we have an object lesson, illustrating the injustice and the oppression of our whole system, so-called.

The farmer, he pays the freight; he pays the tax; he pays the pensions. To do this he has to cultivate three acres in order to have for his own use the product of two.

It is the most stupendous system of iniquity and oppression to which any free people ever submitted, and yet the farmer who works three days for two days' wages is expected to walk up to the polls in Pennsylvania, in Ohio and in the Great Northwest and vote for McKinley and protection.

Down with the war tariff!—Courier Journal.

Five-Cent Sugar.

The republican orators in the contested states are making a good deal of an ado over the fact that the consumer can now get twenty pounds of sugar for one dollar. There is no denying that this is a great and good thing. Sugar is almost as cheap as flour. The only trouble is that when these republican orators point to free and consequently cheap sugar, they point to the beneficent effects of free trade. Whenever they invite attention to the effect of no tariff on sugar they invite attention also to what might be expected if the duty on other articles was removed.

To claim credit for the free sugar policy is to admit more or less a failure in regard to other articles on which an import duty is levied. In praising the party for its free sugar, the republican orators simply claim credit for being just that much democratic.—Chicago News.

DEAFNESS CAN'T BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Makes the Weak Strong

The marked benefit which people in run down or weakened state of health derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla, conclusively proves the claim that this medicine "makes the weak strong." It does not act like a stimulant, imparting fictitious strength from which there must follow a reaction of greater weakness than before, but in the most natural way Hood's Sarsaparilla overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, purifies the blood, and, in short, gives great bodily, nerve, mental and digestive strength.

Fagged Out

"Last spring I was completely fagged out. My strength left me and I felt sick and miserable all the time, so that I could hardly attend to my business. I took one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it cured me. There is nothing like it." R. C. BEGOLE, Editor Enterprise, Belleville, Mich.

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT

THE NEW ABOLITION.

Extract of Address Delivered By William Lloyd Garrison, Before the Chicago (Ill.) Single Tax Club, September 3, 1891.

I find myself unexpectedly a fellow sojourner in your great city, and yet without the feeling of a stranger. And, as to the German song, "Where is the German's Fatherland?" the answer is, "wherever there is freedom," so geography matters not, where there are common sympathies and common aims; and by the great lake, I am made to feel as much at home as by the Atlantic, where my lot is cast. The kinship of humanity transcends that of birth, and association in the pursuit of an unselfish ideal makes the true brotherhood.

I bring you cheer from your fellow workers in the east. The principles of the single tax are winning their slow but certain way. Slow, only in the sense of our impatience. Taking a retrospect of the movement, dating from the publication of "Progress and Poverty," marvelous and rapid has been our stride.

The subject of taxation, wrested from theorists and statisticians, commands the thought and conversation of the community. Labor, too long insensible to the conditions which have crushed it, begins to ask the reason for its burdens and to perceive that they are possible only so long as passive ignorance prevails. For poverty comes not of the gods, but is self-imposed, and instead of calling upon Hercules to lift the wagon out of the mire, the driver must put his own shoulder to the wheel. The tax-gatherers of all nations, obscure as far as possible the workings of their system, purposely intricate and involved. They throw the common understanding off his scent, and the toiler, who has little time for thought or reading, concludes that government is an inscrutable mystery, and that the higher power is responsible for the hopeless degradation of its victims.

We preach a new evangel of reason and of life, and repel as blasphemous this aspersion of divine goodness. The fault is in ourselves, not in our stars. Self-government is not intricate, taxation is as simple as the daily trade of the citizen with his grocer, but as an instrument of spoliation and exaction it has to be disguised. Personal interests underlie the public weal, and individuals grow rich because the masses are defrauded.

* * * * * * * * *

In our anxiety to win converts to our reform, to make them see what seems so plain to us, we sometimes show a lack of patience which is born of zeal but not of philosophy. When the pioneer of the anti-slavery movement first realized the atrocity of slavery, he thought that he had simply to bring it to the attention of his church and his good fellow-citizens to command instant co-operation. Little did he dream that thirty years of agitation and bitter persecution lay before him, and that the ministers and the merchants would join hands to crush the abolitionists. Yet it was natural and could not have been otherwise, because vested interests were intertwined with slavery, and the kind neighbor grows savage when his pocket nerve is touched.

So we find it hard to secure the convert to whom our argument entitles us, and reasons, though as thick as blackberries, have no weight, if he thinks his personal interest is to be affected by our plan. That is human nature and it takes a long time for men to see that what is injurious to the body politic can not be good for the individual; but by and by the logic of events, as it is called, forces them to side with right and they see that true material prosperity can not be divorced from moral methods.

In speaking to audiences unfamiliar with our doctrine and unread in our literature, I am always puzzled to know how to present the question intelligibly. If the ethical side is dwelt upon, then many go away saying: "That is a very pretty and plausible theory, but how will it work in practice?" and they imagine one case where hardship would seem to follow, and conclude that the scheme is chimerical. If the economic side is emphasized and figures and facts adduced—as comparatively few are students of political economy, the listener is often bewildered, and naturally thinks that the other side can offset these statements if it had a chance.

Personal experiences are always interesting, and sometimes an experience is more enlightening than a sermon or a logical argument, and as I have neither one nor the other to give you tonight, suppose I tell you as simply as I can how I came to be an advocate of the single tax, and to see in it the most fundamental and far-reaching reform of the century. Not the only one, for progress advances on many lines, and there is no single panacea for human ills.

I have a profound interest in the enfranchisement of women, a great question concerning half the race directly, and indirectly all the rest, and I am sure laws will be better when the people who are governed have a voice in making them. The drink problem concerns all nations where intemperance abounds, and I can not help my interest in its discussion. The wrongs of labor also arouse my sympathy, but prior to the discussion of any social or governmental reform, it is necessary to have an independent place to stand upon, and the land question forces itself to the front.

Archimedes wanted only a fulcrum in order to move the world, and, with the land question upon which to rest our lever, we hope to succeed better than the ancient mathematician. We can have universal suffrage, but with monopoly in land women will be ground down by enforced poverty, and starving children will still cry for bread. We may pass restrictive laws regarding the sale of alcoholic drink; but while the present land system obtains, the crowded condition of cities will continue to breed drunkards. Labor may in its desperation organize to revenge its wrongs by strikes and boycotts, but they are powerless while the usurpation of landlords extracts the product of their industry through rent.

The great truth that binds us together dawned upon me gradually, for it did not come to me as to some of you, in an intuitional flash. The "est" revealed itself in a very fragmentary way. I had heard of Henry George, and having had some acquaintance with professional labor reformers of an uninspiring kind, I put him down in my mind as one of that fleet but worthy shunning brotherhood. I remember one day in the shoe manufacturing town of Brocton, in my state, I passed the doorway of a hall where a notice announced a lecture by Henry George, and I wondered who would waste time listening to that demagogue—in exactly the same enlightened spirit that made men pass the door where an abolitionist was holding forth, in the slavery days. I date my new birth from the memorable evening when I picked up by chance the Nineteenth Century with Mr. George's reply to the duke of Argyle. I had a great respect for the duke. He had married a daughter of that truly noble duchess of Sutherland, who was a steadfast friend of the American abolitionists, and the duke himself had stood by the cause of the north, in the civil war, with John Bright and our other brave defenders in that dark hour. The idea of Henry George coping with him! But my curiosity to see what he could say at once gave way to the fascination of that inimitable style. While the eloquence of the appeal moved me, the reasoning touched my conscience and my heart.

The native dignity of the humble printer was in marked contrast to the scarcely veiled contempt of his Grace, and the true nobleman stood revealed. The derided "Prophet of San Francisco" dwarfed the English peer. The scales fell from my eyes, new emotions thrilled within me, and I had no rest until I had absorbed "Protection or Free Trade?" "Social Problems," and last of all "Progress and Poverty." While in general sympathy with the single tax movement, many doubts still remained, but every week as the Standard came to me, one by one, as other doubters were answered, my own objections were met and satisfied, and I was compelled to write to Mr. George my sympathy and regard, and ask to be enrolled among the faithful. I did not need to be convinced of the iniquity of protective tariffs, and had been for many years a free trader on principle. But I did not see beyond, and imagined that with untrammeled international exchange the conditions of the poor would speedily improve. Yet, here was Great Britain, with approximate free trade, still in the chains of poverty, and the "Bitter Cry of Outcast London" startled mankind "wherever Christianity softens the heart or soothes the sorrows of men."

The primal cause was yet to be made apparent, and although many minds had discussed it and played about the theme, and in the case of Herbert Spencer formulated its highest ethical grounds, the remedy still seemed as far off as the millenium. Then came the voice of one crying in the wilderness: "There must be some reason for this; there must be some remedy for this; and I will not rest until I have found the one and discovered the other. At last it came, clear as the stars of a bright midnight. I saw what was the cause, saw what was the cure. I saw nothing that was new. Truth is never new."

The revelation came in "Progress and Poverty," and in it its author met the rare qualities of the seer and statesman. The single tax, that intensely practical name for a great moral reform, fails to suggest the uplifting power of the movement, but it makes plain our method of procedure and saves endless explanations. Edward Bellamy excites the imagination, and, recreating human nature, moulds it into his ideal condition, and asks us to admire the dish from which all relish has been extracted. Our programme is sharply defined. It does not wait for the year 2000. It concerns itself with the practical politics of to-day, and its influence guides the hand that drafts the better legislation.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Tax the Land.

Congressman "Jerry" Simpson, in a speech on Labor Day at the Building Trades' picnic in Chicago, said:

We hold that the earth is the storehouse of the wealth of the world. We have ample resources for a population one hundred thousand times as great as this. Labor has produced the wealth and must have access to the warehouse. Capital must act only as an assistant. In Pennsylvania I learned that individuals and corporations had obtained control of vast quantities of coal lands and used them to raise or lower prices at will. I would like to know by what right such lands are allowed to remain idle, while out on the Kansas prairie, in my state, we have to burn corn for fuel. I go to Michigan and find that monopolies control the iron and copper mines and manipulate the output to regulate the prices. If you want to be governed by such monopolies all right, but tax back the land thus idle and relieve to some extent that used by the people. Tax the land so that it will be more profitable for the mines to be worked than left idle at the command of a monopoly.

Whatever any man has added to the general stock of wealth, or has received of the free will of him who did produce it, let that be his as against all the world—his to use or to give, to do with it whatever he may please, so long as such use does not interfere with the equal freedom of others. For my part, I would put no limit on acquisition. No matter how many millions any man can get by methods which do not involve the robbery of others—they are his; let him have them. I would not even ask him for charity, or have it dinned into his ears that it is his duty to help the poor. That is his own affair. Let him do as he pleases with his own, without restriction and without suggestion. If he gets without taking from others, and uses without hurting others, what he does with his wealth is his own business and his own responsibility.

THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Points to Be Presented in Mr. Wanamaker's Report.

The Postmaster General to Present Further Arguments Favoring Postal Telegraph, Savings Banks and Extension of Free Delivery.

TO IMPROVE THE SERVICE.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—Postmaster General Wanamaker is collecting the data for his annual report to congress. So far as can be ascertained, the special features of the report will be similar to those of last year. During the last year he has been making experiments in one or two branches of the service, and he is likely to make a special point for their development. His postal telegraph scheme is not dead, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. The last congress sat down on it, but now Wanamaker proposes asking the next house to look into it and investigate the arguments and figures he is now preparing in its support. Much the same arguments will be used. The same may be said of the postal savings bank. Mr. Wanamaker is thoroughly convinced that one of the most beneficial additions to the present postal service would be the establishment of savings banks in postoffices. His experience and the reports from the country generally during the last year convince him more thoroughly than ever of its practicability. The demand for such institutions in farming districts and small villages where there are no regular banks has been growing steadily. His recommendations in this line will be similar to those of last year, when he urged the establishment of postal savings banks in states having no laws regulating savings banks, and in any other states upon petition of a considerable number of residents in any one locality. He will recommend that there be no more than one bank for every 10 miles of area and that the interest paid on deposits be one-half of 1 per cent. lower than that paid by private bankers.

With regard to penny postage the postmaster general is not so enthusiastic as he was. While in his recommendations he will not recede from the position taken in his former reports he will not lay special stress on this radical change. The postmaster general is anxious to see the penny postage adopted, but congress will have to make the change possible by increased appropriations.

The extension of the free delivery system is one of the points which will receive much attention in the report. The last congress appropriated $10,000 with which to try the free delivery experiment. The postmaster general is now engaged in figuring out results from these localities. As far as they go they indicate the success of the plan. He anticipates that the increase of business and revenue in country towns will about balance the expenditures made in the experiment. With the results in hand he purposes going before the next congress and asking for assistance in extending the free delivery throughout the country. The amount of money needed to put the system into operation has not been estimated, but Mr. Wanamaker feels justified in guaranteeing that the increase of revenues will recompense the government for the necessary outlay.

Won Thousands.

CHEATING IN HORSE BLANKETS

Nearly every pattern of 5/A Horse Blanket is imitated in color and style. In most cases the imitation looks just as good as the genuine, but it hasn't the warp threads, and so lacks strength, and while it sells for only a little less than the genuine it isn't worth one-half as much. The fact that 5/A Horse Blankets are copied is strong evidence that they are THE STANDARD, and every buyer should see that the 5/A trade mark is sewed on the inside of the Blanket.

MARSHALL'S HOOF CURE

cures sand and quarter cracks, split hoofs, sore and contracted feet, corns and all hoof troubles. Stops cracking, shelling and scaling hoofs. Softens and toughens brittle hoofs. It is better than soaking with oil, meal, etc. Should be used on all horses standing on hard floors or driven on hard roads. It also cures scratches, tetter, galls of all kinds, bruises, etc.

TOLEDO, O., April 6, 1891.

I had a horse in my stables that had hoofs so brittle that it was impossible to keep a shoe on his feet. I have used one can of Marshall's Hoof Cure on his hoofs and the horse has been shod for four weeks and the shoes stay on all right. I consider it the best hoof cure I have ever used.

A VISIT TO VENICE.

A City in the Sea—A Gondola—St. Mark's Square—The Doge's Palace—The Grand Canal.

In the middle of the fifth century of the Christian era lived Attila, King of the Huns, who called himself the Scourge of God, and boasted that grass never grew where his horse had trodden. Attila invaded northern Italy, and many of the inhabitants occupying towns along the coast of the Adriatic sea fled from the ruthless invader to the islands situated in a Lagoon at the head of this sea. Here are a hundred and seventeen islands clustered together like the holes in a pepper box, and on these islands is built the City of Venice. The city has 150 canals and 378 stone bridges, so that you can travel over Venice on foot by means of the bridges, or by means of the canals you may go to any part of the city. The houses are all built of stone or marble, and along the canals, or streets as you may please to call them, the buildings emerge from the water like the wharfs along our sea-board towns, to the height of three, four or five stories. Here, early in the morning of the 13th of August, our train crossed the Lagoon on a viaduct two miles long with 222 arches, where the passage seemed to be a flight between sea and sky. When we arrived at the railway station, instead of taking the hack to the Grand Hotel Victoria, we stepped into a boat which is called a gondola, and the boatman, or gondolier, who stands at the stern of the boat, propels it through the narrow canals or streets, turns the corner of a building without coming in contact with it; sings out a word of warning in Italian to prevent coming in collision with another boat that may by chance be turning the same corner from an opposite direction. In Venice the gondola is the principal means of going about the city; the ladies visit, and go a shopping in the gondola; in the gondola fruit is conveyed to the fruit market, and fish to the fish market, for in this city neither horse, mule, or donkey is ever seen upon its narrow streets, and many of its citizens have never seen the animals just named. Like the draymen or cabmen, the gondoliers have their headquarters, which is called the Molo. If you want a gondola, all you have to do is to cry out "Poppo," and one or more will soon make their appearance. It will be well for the reader to remember the word, for when he goes to Venice he will find it a very useful word. The gondola is a comfortable conveyance, and the visitor soon becomes accustomed to this method of perambulating the strangest city in the world.

St. Mark's square is the centre of Venetian life, and may justly be considered the finest square in the world. It is about 560 feet in length and 270 feet in breadth; it is beautifully paved with white Istrian marble, and surrounded with fine old marble palaces and St. Mark's church. The square is well lighted; the shop windows are beautifully decorated with rich and gaudy goods, tastefully arranged, presenting to the observer every inducement to purchase. In the evening the cafes are crowded with people, the band plays in the square, and all appear to be contented and happy. Every day at 2 o'clock p. m., large numbers of pigeons are fed in the square, and I made a special effort to be there at the hour named, in order to witness the feeding of the birds, which has taken place daily, it is said, for the past seven hundred years. It is a singular custom kept up through so many years.

In St. Mark's square is the famous Clock Tower, where we waited some time for the two bronze Vulcans to come out and strike the hour of the day, which they did with so much force that it could be heard at a great distance.

St. Mark's church is about eight hundred years old and was built when Venice was in the height of prosperity. It has five domes, 500 marble columns and 16,000 square feet of mosaics. It is built of marble brought from various countries, in fact stolen from other nations in order to build a church for the worship of God. St. Mark is the patron saint of Venice (in these days every well to do town had a saint), and in this church is St. Mark's tomb; over the tomb is a high altar and beyond it are four columns. Two of these columns belonged, it is said, to the temple of King Solomon, but there is not a word of truth in the story, for Solomon's temple was completely destroyed by the Roman General, Titus. They are, however, beautiful columns, a foot in diameter and are translucent. If a lighted candle is placed in front of the column, and some object, such as the hand is placed in the opposite direction, it can be seen through the column. Here we observe a bronze statute of St. Mark, and a throne belonging to the same gentlemen; also a bit of St. John's skull, and a piece of the true Cross which may be looked upon with a great deal of reverence, if the spectator is sufficiently gullible to believe this superstitious nonsense.

The next point of interest to which our attention was directed was the doge's palace; on our way we had an opportunity of seeing the Winged Lion of St. Mark, which Napoleon Bonaparte carried away to Paris, but after Napoleon was sent to St. Helena, this Lion was restored to the Venetians. The guide said that the French took the diamond pupils from the Lion's eyes and returned the animal with glass eyes. The Venetians are very proud of their Winged Lion, but an American would not give him house room.

The doge's palace was first built in the year eight hundred, but was destroyed several times by fire. This great palace is built of red and white marble, and although time has stained its walls, still it is a mangnificent structure. Ascending Sansovino's giant stair case situated between collossal statues of Mars and Neptune, we arrived on a balcony where the doges or chief magistrates of Venice were crowned. In this place is the hall of the Great Council, where the Senators of Venice made laws for the Republic, on the walls are the portraits of many of the doges, also Tintoreto's Paradise, which is a remarkably beautiful painting. At the present time this old palace is used for no other purpose than for sight-seeing. Our attention was directed to a small crevice in the wall of the palace where letters were placed making political complaints. The poor wretch was then summoned before the Council of Ten, and generally condemned to be executed without permission to make a plea in his own behalf. The Bridge of Sighs connects the palace with the prison, where the prisoners were confined in low dungeons, where light and air scarcely penetrated, and with nothing to rest upon excepting a stone slab. The place of execution is close by, and the gutter in the marble slabs which conveyed the blood down to the canal brings vividly to the mind of the visitor the barbarous cruelties of a few centuries ago. The body was immediately handed over to a gondolier, who no doubt soon disposed of it.

Venice was a republic for a thousand years, yet Rome under its most cruel tyrants was not more despotic than republican Venice.

On the Grand Canal is situated the Arsenal, which once gave employment to 16,000 men; it was here where the great fleets of the Crusaders were built, when Venice was mistress of the sea. Approaching the entrance of the Arsenal are four marble lions, one of which it is claimed was taken from the field of Marathon. It is a very old looking lion indeed, and appears sufficiently ancient to have watched over the field of Marathon. In the Arsenal are many curious implements of warfare, which were in use many centuries ago, and here we saw a helmet worn by the famous Attila, King of the Huns, who unwittingly founded the city of Venice.

The principal manufactures of Venice are fancy glass ware, Venetian lace, and fancy cabinet ware; in these articles the Venetians excel. We were in several of these manufacturing establishments, and found it difficult to get out of them without purchasing something.

We sailed through the Grand Canal during the day and in the evening passed a few pleasant hours on its waters, listening to the sweet strains of music under the Rialto bridge. The Canal was lined with gondolas, each gondola carrying a torch light, and all of them filled with the fair ladies of Venice who were out and enjoying the sea air.

Mr. Editor, permit me to advise you, that when you take your wedding tour, go to Venice, sail along the Grand Canal, listen to the sweet music, beneath the Rialto bridge, and in after years, when you are in a retrospective mood, you will live these hours over again.

THE GERM THEORY. Shows that all epidemic, endemic, and contagious diseases are produced by minute infecting germs or microbes, peculiar to each disease, which enter the system. It being a well settled fact that any remedy which would kill the germ or microbe would destroy the life of the patient, it has been found that to force out these germs is the only safe relief from their ravages. In this way Swift's Specific has for 60 years been curing blood and skin diseases. It forces out the microbes through the pores of the skin, and soon sends out the poison which they may have left. In this way the disease is cured, and the general health of the patient is built up.

A DAY IN TOLEDO.

We spent one day last week in the "Future Great." Taking the Mackinaw train in the morning, we arrived safely at our destination before noon and proceeded directly to the Burnett Hotel to provide properly for the inner man before taking in the town.

The Burnett has just changed hands, having been purchased by Charles Friedman, of Detroit. The transfer was made last Thursday. He is the present proprietor of the Franklin House in Detroit, having conducted that hotel for the past ten years. Prior to that he was engaged in the hotel business in Buffalo, N. Y. He is therefore a hotel man of sagacity and long experience, and will doubtless keep the reputation of the Burnett fully up to what it has hitherto enjoyed. His headquarters will henceforth be in Toledo. He intends to make several changes and inprovements in the Burnett, beginning at once with the dining room.

After a good square meal we started down Summit street and soon found ourself in the Chamber of Commerce building. Ed. Smith and H. C. Conkling both have desks in the corner room of the second floor. We found them both at home and with hands full of business. The immense crops this fall have stimulated trade and hence the railroad freight business is booming. Messrs. Conkling and Smith are near neighbors and warm friends, speaking in a business point of view. They hardly agree on politics, but they do not allow their differences on the tariff to mar their business relations.

Across the street, in the St. Clair building, the general offices of the Mackinaw railroad are located. In a cosy little room on the second floor at the east end of the building, away from all noise and confusion, we found W. D. Stearns, the train dispatcher, and his assistant, Frank Allen. A large table stood in the center of the room covered with time tables, blanks for their use and telegraph instruments. Mr. Stearns began his duties as train dispatcher of the road about six years ago, and for the first year or so he was located at Tecumseh, where he made many friends who kindly remember him. He went to Toledo about five years since, where he has continued to fill the responsible position he now occupies. Frank Allen, an old Ridgeway boy, is now his assistant, and the two make a very reliable team for that place. They know just as much about the recent sale of the road as people who read the newspapers—no more and no less. Our call here was necessarily short, as interruptions cannot be allowed with their office duties. A train dispatcher has no time to entertain visitors.

We spent an hour very pleasantly going through the new Bee building on St. Clair street. The Bee office is now located in one of the finest business blocks in Toledo, which is a veritable hive of industry. The building has a frontage of about twenty-five feet, a depth of over one hundred feet, has five stories and a large, roomy basement. In the latter is placed a 150-horse power boiler and a 75-horse power engine; also their new Web perfecting press. We saw the latter work off a portion of the regular afternoon edition. It is a Clause machine, and runs like a new top. This is one of the best Web presses made and meets the present needs of the Bee offices completely. The first floor of the building is occupied by the business office of the Bee Company. They are not fully settled yet, owing to the hurry of moving, but the rooms will furnish fine apartments for that purpose. The second and third floors are divided into suites of rooms to rent. A part of the second floor is already occupied by the Phenix Coal Co., which is considered the heaviest coal firm in Toledo. They own several mines and have general offices both at Toledo and Chicago. The editorial rooms are located on the fourth floor, which are large, well lighted and admirably fitted up for their purpose. The fifth floor contains the composing and stereotype rooms. Here are to be seen those wonders of mechanism, the Mergenthaler type-setters. Ten of these machines are now in use in their composing room, which set the entire reading columns of the Bee. The display heads and advertisements are set by hand. We saw one of these machines in operation. They are certainly the greatest invention yet introduced into a printing office, and the time is coming when they can be used to advantage in country establishments. The building is heated throughout with the Smead hot water system, and has an elevator. Under its present management the Bee has become one of the ablest democratic papers in the Northwest, and it richly deserves the prosperity which it is enjoying. It can now reap the reward of its business enterprise and political faithfulness.

A visit at Hudson's clothing store revealed the fact that this old reliable house is still on the boom. They have now in stock a very large assortment of winter clothing and their boot and shoe department is equally well stocked with everything in the line of foot wear. This establishment is evidently leading the clothing trade in Toledo.

Upon taking a street car on Summit street, who should we find but our whilom Tecumseh resident, Frank Rose. He is now conductor on the Dorr street line of East Toledo. The different street car lines have recently been consolidated and all the cars now run to Summit street, where passengers are transferred from one line to another, and can thus go to any part of the city on one fare. We took a transfer ticket from Frank which carried us to the Union Depot. Frank has a soft place now and he can doubtless hold the place as long as he may desire.

We took the evening Lake Shore train for home and found a big crowd awaiting us at the Chicago street crossing—or rather awaiting Thomas Elliott's arrival, who did't come.

First and foremost was the matchless vocal work done by Signorina DeVere in the "Lakme" and "Pearl of Brazil" arias, which challenged criticism by reason of the absolute purity and accuracy of intonation, faultless technique, artistic elegance of delivery and the correctness of method in the tone production. It was an effort worthy of La Diva Patti at her best, and stamped the singer as an artist of sterling worth. —Boston Herald.

Puck of October 21st has a handsome cartoon by Ehrhart, entitled, "The Old, Old Story." The story referred to is a tale of love in 1861. It is very interesting to note the changes in fashion, which have occurred since that date, as shown by this picture.

The record of Maud S. is broken and another queen of the turf is crowned. Sunol trotted a mile on the Oakland, California, track in 2.08 1-4. The fast ones have been after Maud many years, but it was reserved for one of Bonner's clippers to keep the record in his own stable.

The janitor of the East Branch school house, Tecumseh, is now serving as a juryman in the circuit court. He finds it hard to keep his seat in the panel, and ever and anon he is asking the court to excuse him, while he goes into the basement to draw the ashes.—Adrian Press.

J. A. Munger has opened a harness shop in the Jas. Usborne building, two doors east of the HERALD office, where he would be pleased to see all in need of work in his line. Mr. Munger has had many years experience in the harness business and his work will be as good as the best. We bespeak for him a share of the public patronage.

The Epworth League Society of the M. E. Church have engaged the Rev. J. Stansfield, of Wyandotte, to lecture before the society on Wednesday evening, Oct. 28; subject: "Some Social Specters." Mr. Stansfield is one of the most brilliant thinkers and speakers in the Detroit conference and wins an audience wherever he appears. The society have been fortunate in being able to make the engagement and no one should fail to attend.

S. P. Hosmer returned from his eastern trip last week and people surmised that something was in the wind. An immense stock of new goods has begun to arrive and the secret of his anxiety to take in the Olin excursion is thus revealed. His stock of solid and plated silverware is the largest ever shown in the county. While the assortment of jewelry, watches and clocks, books and stationery, novelties and all the little nick-nacks properly belonging to a jewelry stock, is very large and complete. With Mr. Hosmer and his son to wait upon buyers and Mr. Dickinson to preside at the tinkering bench, this firm is prepared to do a rushing fall trade. And what is more, they propose to do it.

Tecumseh was the scene of a runaway in a rainstorm last Monday, that capped the climax. Satterthwaite Bros. had previously sold a couple of stoves and the buyers wished to utilize the rainy day to set them up. Thus it happened that Tommy Mark was called upon to deliver two stoves in a rain storm. The stoves were loaded and an umbrella stuck in the top to protect them from the storm. Tommy then drew rein on his mules and away they went. But no sooner was the vessel fairly under way than a gust of wind lifted the umbrella from its lodging place and it came down on the back of the near mule. A general shaking up followed, and it was difficult to tell, for about fifteen minutes, whether the umbrella, or the mules, or the stoves, or the dray, or Tommy would come out on top. In the melee the stoves were badly broken and one mule was badly cut. Tommy finely succeeded in restoring order out of chaos, and the mules have settled down to business at the old stand, with their old time regularity.

Last Monday forenoon, while it was raining pitch forks outside and everybody was dozing in doors, the fire alarm sounded. In about five minutes the steamer was out and a lengthy procession of umbrellas started down Chicago street at double quick pace to the scene of the disturbance. There was a fire sure enough, although not a very extensive one, on D. T. Hall's premises. A small building a short distance from his dwelling, used as a wood shed and summer kitchen, had taken fire in some mysterious manner and was speedily consumed with all its contents. There were two stoves in the building, a large amount of carpet, a supply of both wood and coal and quite a lot of kitchen furniture, all of which were burned. The property was insured in the Home of New York. The total loss will exceed $300, but it is covered by insurance.

Miss Rosa Linde sang some German songs, and in response to repeated encores sang the "Nobil Signor," from the "Huguenots," and "In Old Madrid." Miss Linde's rendering of these two songs was faultless. Her voice is rich and full, and few contraltos have such brilliant execution.—N. Y. Telegram.

A TERRIBLE FATE.

An Open Switch Causes the Death of Four Persons.

A Chicago & Eastern Illinois Engine Dashes Into a Roundhouse—The Engineer and Three Chicago Newspaper Men Are Killed.

MET DEATH QUICKLY.

CHICAGO, Oct. 16.—Three Chicago newspaper men were killed outright Thursday morning in a fearful railway accident at Crete, Ill., 30 miles south of Chicago, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois road. They were riding in the engine of train 6, north-bound. With them were Engineer James Clark and Fireman Frank Lafferty. The train was speeding along at forty miles an hour to make up lost time. Through the neglgence of some one the switch at Crete leading to the roundhouse had been left open. Upon the switch-track were two flat cars loaded with coal. The train whirled around the curve south of the village and plunged into the open switch There was a collision of terrific force, and a moment later roundhouse, engine, tender and baggage car were together in a shapeless mass of splintered and steaming debris. Four of the men who had been in the engine were buried under the heap of ruins. The fireman escaped serious injury by leaping from the cab. He and several others aboard the train received slight bruises and cuts. The roster reads:

The dead: Leonard Washburne, baseball editor of the Inter Ocean; Frank M'Cafferty, artist for the Inter Ocean; Fred Henry, reporter for the Inter Ocean; James Clark, engineer, Danville, Ill.

Injured: Frank Lafferty, fireman, Danville, Ill., cut and bruised; Edward Booth, baggageman, Danville, Ill., slightly bruised; John Parr, Chicago, reporter for R. G. Dunn & Co., seriously injured internally; J. C. Saunders, brakeman, Danville, Ill., injured internally.

By 4 o'clock all the victims were lying in the little depot.

Dr. A. J. Mills, of Joliet, coroner of Will county, impaneled a jury in order to have the bodies identified. After that the testimony of the fireman was taken and an adjournment was taken. After learning the facts of the case General Solicitor Lyford sent word to Danville to have the entire crew of freight train 53 placed in custody. Oliver A. Smith is the conductor; J. T. Meehan, F. Showles and William Cloyd are brakemen. There can be no doubt that some one left the switch open. Train 53 was the last to use it. It is considered strange that Station Agent Myrick did not discover the open switch during the hour and a half which intervened between the trains. Thursday evening at 7 o'clock the body of Engineer Clark was sent to Danville. The bodies of the newspaper men were brought to Chicago and taken to Jordan's undertaking establishment.

[Leonard Washburne was born in Terre Haute, Ind., in 1867, and has been in newspaper work in western cities for several years. As baseball editor of the Inter Ocean his bright and humorous stories of the national game gave him wide prominence and a high standing in his profession.

Frederick W. Henry was 23 years of age and a native of Kentucky. He had been on the Inter Ocean but a few weeks and came to Chicago from Louisville, where he had been on the Courier-Journal staff. He had the reputation of being a brilliant and promising young man.

Frank A. McCafferty, the artist, was 33 years of age and a native of Philadelphia. At the latter city he obtained his art training and did considerable work for magazines and the Philadelphia Press. A year ago he was employed by the St. Louis Post Dispatch. Quite recently he came to Chicago, believing that this city offered a better field for his work.

James Clark, the engineer, was one of the veterans of the Eastern Illinois road. He was 45 years old and had been in the service for eighteen years. He was married and had a wife and two daughters at Danville.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 17.—Six men of Crete, Ill., held an inquest Friday into the cause of the death of the three Chicago newspaper men and Engineer Clark Thursday. They found that a proper amount of diligence was not used by the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Company at Crete station in guarding the switches. From the evidence laid before them they also found that four men were crushed to death in the wreck of train No. 6, the wreck being caused by an open switch. Who left the switch open they were unable to learn, and after spending six hours in cross-examination the jury gave up the task.

For Another Monument to Gen. Grant.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17.—It is the design of the Grand Army of the Republic to erect in Washington, D. C., a monument to Gen. Grant. The necessary money to pay for the monument is being raised by popular subscription among the grand army posts of the country. It is calculated that the sum of $10,000 will be required to erect such a monument as is considered worthy of Gen. Grant,

New Graves for Fort Recovery Soldiers.

FORT RECOVERY, O., Oct. 17.—Friday the bodies of 900 soldiers who fell in the battle of Fort Recovery, including the body of Gen. Butler, were interred with imposing ceremonies in one immense grave at the cemetery set apart by the government for that purpose. Over 50,000 people were on the grounds. Judge Samuel Hunt, of Cincinnati, delivered the address of the day.

Crashed Into a Freight.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Oct. 17.—The Pan Handle vestibule, limited east bound, was wrecked by colliding with a freight train at Mingo Junction 4 miles west of Steubenville, O., at 6:30 o'clock a. m. yesterday and William Marshall, a brakeman, and Joseph Veston, an express messenger, were killed outright, and four other persons were injured.

Her Legs Broken by Lightning.

GALENA, Ill., Oct. 19. — Lightning struck the house of August Tessendorf, at Warren, last Friday night. The bolt descended to the sitting-room, where it shattered a table and broke both legs of Mrs. Tessendorf's mother, who was sitting at the table. She will die.

In Favor of Union.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—The Ecumenical Methodist council at its session on Saturday adopted a memorial looking to a union of the various branches of the church. A memorial on the extermination of the liquor traffic was also adopted.

MURPHY'S MISSION.

Work of an Agent of the Agricultural Department in Europe.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—Cables from Berlin indicate that Charles J. Murphy, special agent of the United States agricultural department, is receiving much attention in Germany in his efforts to introduce Indian corn. This recognition of Murphy comes very tardily. For the last five years he has been laboring at the European capitals to induce people to use Indian corn as a food. He spent his own money and reduced himself almost to the point of beggary.

When Secretary Rusk took hold of agricultural affairs he was greatly surprised that no official effort had been made in Paris to show the value of American corn as a food. He heard of Murphy and wrote to him just about the time that the "corn crank" was on his last legs. Later Mr. Murphy was commissioned as special agent for the agricultural department at $2,000 a year. Up to the present time only 4 per cent of our entire corn product has been sent abroad and even this insignificant export has been used by the foreigners as cattle feed. But with Europe urgently pressed for breadstuffs, to take the place of her short crops, Secretary Rusk believes that the time has come to open this foreign market for corn as a human food, and that "corn cake" will be the apostle of corn in Europe.

CRIME OF A LOVER.

He Shoots Two Old Men on an Iowa Farm.

Henry Hahn Kills the Father of the Girl Who Had Rejected Him and Fatally Wounds Her Uncle—The Murderer Makes His Escape.

BULLETS FOR TWO.

MCGREGOR, Ia., Oct. 19.—To unrequited love is charged a shocking double murder that occurred near McGregor Saturday evening. For some months Henry Hahn, a prosperous young farmer living north of this city, has been paying his addresses to Miss Mary Otto, the pretty daughter of John Otto, Hahn's near neighbor. Hahn is an attractive young fellow, and Miss Otto did not seem averse to his society. Last week he sought the young lady's hand in marriage, but was refused. He was importunate and continued to press his suit, however, until Miss Otto finally declared that she would see no more of him. Saturday he drove into town and bought a large revolver and a box of cartridges. In the evening he repaired to the Otto homestead and asked to see the daughter of the house. A servant met him at the door and shortly returned with a message from Miss Otto begging to be excused. Thereupon Hahn declared that he must see the girl and forced his way past the servant and into the house. In the hallway he met John Otto, who had been aroused by the altercation at the doorway. The old man ordered the importunate suitor to quit his premises. Angry words followed, and Hahn finally shot Mr. Otto in the forehead, inflicting a fatal wound. William Otto, a brother of John's, entered the hallway just as the shot was fired. Hahn turned on him, leveled his smoking weapon, and, with a curse, shot him dead. The frenzied murderer then dashed out of the house, mounted his horse and galloped away in the darkness.

News of the murder reached McGregor at midnight, and the sheriff at once gathered a posse of men and started in pursuit of Hahn. The murderer did not return home after the murder, but has not had time to get out of the country. He is thought to be in hiding in the dense forests along the Yellow river, and probably cannot elude the sheriff's officers.

Miss Otto fainted when her father was shot and has been hysterical ever since It is feared she will lose her reason. There is intense excitement in and about the city over the tragedy, and if Hahn is caught the sturdy farmers of the vicinity will, in all likelihood, save the county the expense of a murder trial. It is thought that when Hahn went to the Otto house he intended to make one last appeal to Miss Mary, failing in which he planned to kill her and then shoot himself.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

Physicians make no more fatal mistake than when they inform patients that nervous heart troubles come from the stomach and are of little consequence. Dr. Franklin Miles, the noted Indiana specialist, has proven the contrary in his new book on "Heart Disease," which may be had free at Baker & Hall's who guarantee and recommends Dr. Miles' unequaled New Heart Cure, which has the largest sale of any heart remedy in the world. THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent;
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

CHARACTER.

The Rose of musk hath hidden in the bud
Is sought to sense revealed,
The heart's true nature lies at no command
Of ours be long concealed.

For whatever it is within his heart
Will be everywhere;
No grace can more environment impart,
No excellence impair.

The diamond in the mud doth still retain
Its own intrinsic worth;
The dust the winds lift heavenward all in vain,
As dust it falls to earth.

The good man, like the pillared palm, that grows
Unheeding every weight
Bound on its top, and every blast that blows,
Forever strong and straight,

Grows on, though every adverse circumstance
Against his soul may press,
With steady, strong, symmetrical advance,
In regal righteousness.

—Philip Burroughs Strong, in The Chautauquan.

SETTLING A QUESTION.

How I Was Influenced to Change My Declared Principles.

The wind was right off the land. It was strong; but under the cliffs the sea was calm enough. So the three of us ran the boat down and got her out over the bar, though with the tide against us it was a hard pull. Miss Flo had come with us after all, for she had never had a really good try at pollock-fishing. When we had got fairly out over the sandbanks and gained the shelter of the Ness, she steered, while Tom made himself precariously comfortable in the bows. Laddie and I pulled easily through the smooth water under the rich, red cliffs, and in twenty minutes we were floating just above the weed-clad, rocky homes of the pollock.

Then I took both oars and paddled along gently, while Laddie helped to get out the lines.

Miss Flo could raise no objection to the india-rubber worms we used; still, she preferred to try her hand at rowing, and promised to leave the steering to me. Laddie impressed upon her that as soon as ever he called out, she must back water hard, or else the bait would be left fast in the rocks and weeds six feet below our reach. Miss Flo promised, and no doubt did her best; but two of our lines had snapped before we had gone fifty feet.

A shadow of wonder, rather than vexation, flitted across the boy's face, and I am sure he was not sorry when the girl herself suggested that we should put her ashore, for she didn't like the motion of the boat now that we went so slowly.

We would not hear of such a thing; but in the end we ran in stern first under the shelter of the rocks and helped her to land with Bengo to keep her company.

"Now, then, Tom!" shouted Laddie, "hold her off, or we shan't have an inch of paint left on her! Give her a shove! Now's your chance! Well, you are a —!" His sentence was cut short. Tom had let the wave carry us against the rock with a shock which sent the boy over the thwart onto the most prominent parts of the anchor.

Tom did not seem to notice this catastrophe nor the remarks which it elicited, for he was busy in effecting his own landing. This done, he gave us a shove which got us clear of the rock, and expressed a hope that our fishing might be successful.

"What are you up to?" gasped the boy, who was on his feet again, using his paddle sturdily to avert a second mishap.

"I don't think Miss Flo should be left all alone, though you won't go very far off."

"Oh, she's all right!" was the brotherly reply. "She likes being alone. Look out there again! Keep her off!"

However, Tom insisted on following Miss Flo across the slippery weed, which had so far taken up all her attention; and to save the boat we left him, punted out into the open, got out our lines and paddled leisurely away.

"Well," said the boy, after a few minutes, "I can't make out what's the matter with Flo. I've never known her to feel a bit of a swell like this before."

I pointed out to him that it was just such a gentle motion which was most trying to many people, and his sister had certainly gone a little pale.

"No," said he, as he took a small pollock off his hook and threw it into the bottom of the boat. "I believe that she's cut up at your going away so soon. You've always staid at least three weeks before."

I thought this the least bit unlikely, so I said nothing. Then I looked toward the shore, where I could see two people leaning over a rock-pool, evidently looking for anemones, and it deemed more unlikely still.

But Laddie went on:

"You get rather wild, sometimes, when you are so awfully independent—you know what I mean; and she really was angry at what you said last night. All the same, I'm sure she wants you to stop as much as any of us."

I replied that I was at a loss to know what I had said to make anyone angry.

What it was he didn't quite know; he hadn't been listening to our conversation, but it was something about a poor young schoolmaster like myself having no right to win the affection of a woman before he was in a position to offer her a comfortable and easy place in society.

I certainly had said something of the kind and had pointed out the dangers of marrying anyone with more money than one possessed one's self.

Laddie did not know what there was objectionable in such principles, nor could he say why they made his sister angry; but he stuck to it that they did.

I was getting interested, and spent half an hour in trying to draw him out a little more. Then he noticed that the wind was getting round to the south and would soon be off the sea. So we moved back as quickly as we could to pick up the two on shore.

We hailed them and told them to come out along a ledge of rock, from which they stepped easily into the boat. They said they had had a delightful time, and I believed them.

We were soon well on our way home. Tom and I pulled. Laddie and Miss Flo were in the stern. The boy talked a good deal but the rest of us were quiet. He had several things to say about people who couldn't stand boating when there was a ripple on the water and about others who preferred poking things in rock-pools to hooking four-pounders. He hinted that my performances in the latter direction were not what they once were, and expressed a fear that my taste might some day become as degenerate as Tom's.

I suppose we all heard him, and yet we seemed to be thinking about some thing else. Whatever it was that Tom was thinking about it made him pull cruelly hard. It was all I could do to keep the boat's head straight. So we did the journey in a very short time, and Laddie admitted that if we weren't in form for fishing that day we could certainly row.

The evening turned out very fine and warm, yet no one seemed inclined to go out and listen to the band. So I strolled off by myself down to the point that nearly closed the outlet of the river, found a comfortable nook behind a boat and settled down with my back to the sea, looking right up the broad estuary.

It is a lovely sight there when the sun is setting. The river stretches, a great sheet of glory, between rich, soft hills away to the huge, bare slopes and rugged outline of the moor and the greater glory of the sky.

It is a sight which has no rival, even in the western country.

I had just formulated that conclusion when Tom appeared, apparently looking for some one. He caught sight of me and came slowly toward me. He looked pale and tired.

"Oh!" he said, "I'm glad I found you; there's something about which I want to talk to you."

I had seldom seen Tom in so serious a mood, and, remembering the afternoon, I expected to find him particularly gay.

I waited for him to settle down beside me, but he stood there kicking the pebbles.

Presently he went on:

"Do you mind getting up and walking about a bit? I don't feel like sitting still and looking at sunsets. I think I can tell you what I want to better if we are walking."

So I got up, rather reluctantly, I must confess. Then he suggested that we should cross over in the ferry and make our way up the hill.

We were soon across, and once in the high-banked lane he seemed calmer and again began to talk.

"Do you know why I followed Miss Flo ashore this afternoon?"

Of course I had no idea.

"Well," he said, "I'll tell you. I intended to find out, once for all, whether she really cared anything for me."

I expressed a hope that he had succeeded in getting the information he wanted.

"Yes," he went on, "I have found out; she talked to me with a freedom I have often longed for, and it came about in this way: We had been looking for different sorts of anemones for some time, when she suddenly asked me whether I agreed with what you had said the other night. I asked her what about. 'Why, about people marrying those who have more money than they have themselves.' I said I thought you were quite right. She then asked me whether, supposing I cared for a girl who was richer than I was, I should hesitate to tell her so. I did not know what to say. You will admit, I think, that the position was a curious one. Then to my intense surprise she burst into a perfect storm of anger. I don't know all she said, but the point of it was that I didn't deserve the love of any unselfish girl, and she hoped I should never by any chance win it. As you may imagine, I was taken completely aback. I had sense enough left to see that if she herself loved me she would never talk to me like that. Then she changed, and as I looked up I saw tears standing in her eyes and her lips trembling. She could scarcely command her voice enough to beg me, almost fiercely to beg me, that if ever I cared for a girl, however poor I might be, I would tell her so. There was no knowing what years of happiness I might lose if I had not courage enough for that. I shall never cease to be thankful that at that moment your voice hailed us and I was able to say—tolerably calmly, I think: 'Thank you, I will bear your advice in mind.' So we joined you, and after all I had not lost her friendship, and her love I had never had."

After a few minutes, finding that I did not speak, he went on:

"And so, you see, I am certain that Miss Flo really cares for some one who is not very well off, and who is afraid to ask her to share a lot which must be less easy than the one to which she has been used. She is terribly grieved that he will not speak, for his silence may prove fatal. The only thing is, I cannot imagine who it is. Can you?"

I said—and it was all I could do to say it calmly—I thought I did. When I had considered the matter a little more I would tell him.

So we turned back and made our way in silence down the lane to the ferry.

Since that evening I have settled the question beyond all doubt.—Chicago News.

—Some idea of the amount of carbon which impregnates the air in cities, especially in those burning soft coal, may be gathered from the investigations of an English scientist who has been engaged in computing the amount of soot deposited from London air. Collecting the soot deposited on a patch of snow in Canonbury, about eight inches in extent, he obtained from it two grains of soot. As London covers one hundred miles this would give for the whole area one thousand tons. As the quantity measured fell in ten days a month's allowances would need one thousand horses to cart it off, and these stretched in a line would extend four miles.

Allow me to add my tribute to the efficacy of Ely's Cream Balm. I was suffering from a severe attack of influenza and catarrh and was induced to try your remedy. The result was marvelous. C. C. Fuller, of Rollin, has a second-crop curiosity that eclipses anything yet reported in this year of marvels. Upon his Great American strawberry vines there are large and luscious and fully-ripe berries, many ready to ripen and some green ones. He brought a specimen plant to the Gazette office Tuesday. It bore several berries in different stages of development, and one large berry as plump and tempting as ever touched the palate of a fruit-lover in midsummer. Mr. Fuller is entitled to first premium on "repeating strawberries.—Hudson Gazette.

The Detroit News of Wednesday publishes a brief letter, signed "Vox Humanitatis," deprecating the 100-mile drive by the Downer mare "Kit." The News says that this letter was shown to Joseph Lingemann, one of the brothers with whom the $500 wager has been made, and he is quoted as saying that he believed the letter emanated from the friends of the horse and that it showed a desire to back out of the bargain. We may remark that the road for this trial has been selected, that Mr. Downer has made full reply to Humane Agent Vhay, of Detroit, who has displayed special interest in the matter, that the nervy little animal is being daily exercised with the object of this drive in view, and that it will come off in due time.—Morenci Observer.

The prisoner's jaw was shattered by the ball, but no fatal injury was expected.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

"100 Doses One Dollar" means simply that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most economical medicine to buy, because it gives more for the money than any other preparation. Each bottle contains 100 doses and will average to last a month, while other preparations, taken according to direction, are gone in a week. Therefore, be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla, the best blood purifier.

WOMAN'S HEALTH AND LIFE depend more on regularity than on any or all causes combined. VICTORY FOR AN INSURANCE COMPANY.

S. S. Conover, Agt., Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Manistee, Mich., says: "I had rheumatism twenty years; used crutches ten years. From the use of powerful liniments my hip and knee had lost nearly all strength. Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup has cured me, and I wish to herald to all, the merits of this wonderful medicine."

Popularly called the king of medicines—Hood's Sarsaparilla. It conquers scrofula, salt rheum and all other blood diseases.

The dyer can easily hue to the line.

DEAFNESS CAN'T BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

BAKING POWDER FACTS.

Brought Out by the Official Government Test.

Purity of Food Demanded by the People—Which Baking Prwder Will Do It?

From Chicago Tribune.

The public is always responsive to suggestions about the food it eats. Great interest has been taken in the investigations made by the United States and Canadian governments and by the different boards of health to show the purity or impurity of mik, baking powders, spices, and other articles of daily use in the culinary departments of our households.

Just now the subject of baking powder is claiming public attention. We all desire pure and wholesome bread and this can not be had with the use of impure or poisonous baking powder. There can be no longer any question that all the cheaper, lower grades of baking powders contain either alum, lime, or phosphatic acid.

The official analyses by the United States and Canadian governments have therefore been studied with interest and have pretty clearly established the facts upon this subject. The United States govenment report gives the name of eighteen well-known powders, some of them advertised as pure cream of tartar baking powders, that contain alum.

The report shows that the Royal baking powder was found the highest in leavening strength, evolving 160.6 cubic inches of gas per single ounce of powder. There were eight other brands of cream of tartar powders tested and their average strength was 111.5 cubic inches of gas per ounce of powder.

The Canadian government investigations were of a still larger number of powders. The Royal baking powder was here also shown the purest and highest in strength, containing 129.32 cubic inches of leavening gas per ounce of powder. Nine other cream of tartar powders were tested, their average strength being reported to be 80 cubic inches of gas per ounce.

These figures are very instructive to the practical housekeeper. They indicate that the Royal baking powder goes more than 33 per cent further in use than the others, or is one-third more economical. Still more important than this, however, they prove this popular article has been brought to the highest degree of purity—for to its superlative purity this superiority in strength is due—and consequently that by its use we may be insured the purest and most wholesome food.

The powders of low strength are found to leave large amounts of inert matter in the food. The fact is emphasized by the report of the Ohio State Food Commissioner, who, while finding the Royal practically pure, found no other powder to contain less than 10 per cent. of inert or foreign matters.

The public interest in this question has likewise caused to be made investigations by our local authorities. Prof. W. S. Haines, of Rush Medical College, consulting chemist of the Chicago Board of Health, has found results similar to those reported by the national and Canadian authorities. Dr. Haines says:

RUSH MEDICAL COLLEGE, Chicago, Ill.

I have recently obtained samples of the chief baking powders in the market, and have subjected them to careful chemical examination to detrmine their purity, wholesomeness, and leavening power. As the result of my test I find the Royal baking powder superior to all the others in every respect. It is entirely free from all adulteration and unwholesome impurity, and in baking gives off a greater volume of leavening gas than any other powder. It is, therefore, not only the purest, but also the strongest powder with which I am acquainted.

WALTER S. HAINES,
Consulting Chemist, Chicago Board of Health.

The statistics show that there is used in the manufacture of the Royal baking powder more than half of all the cream of tartar consumed in the United States for all purposes. The wonderful sale thus indicated for the Royal baking powder—greater than that of all other baking powders combined—is perhaps even a higher evidence than that already quoted of the superiority of this article, and of its indispensableness to modern cnockery.

THE TRUE WAY | To rid the human body of the poison of disease, is to eliminate it through the pores of the skin. S. S. Mrs. E. J. Rowell, No. 11 Quincy St., Medford, Mass., says that her mother has been cured of scrofula by the use of four bottles of S. S. S., after having had much other treatment and being reduced to quite a low condition of health, as it was thought she could not live.

TECUMSEH, MICH., OCT. 29, 1891.

The Chicago Times says: Mr. Blaine must certainly be getting well. He has begun letter-writing again and in a way calculated first to "square himself," and second to slip a knife into a tender portion of his dear friend McKinley.

Gov. Campbell's tour through Ohio is a perfect ovation. He is conducting the most brilliant canvass for a state election ever made in that state. The Republican leaders are now discussing the propriety of throwing McKinley overboard to save the legislature.

Another big hole is knocked in the high tariff wall. A treaty has been concluded with Germany to admit American wheat free in return for our receiving Germany's beet sugar free. Very good, as far as it goes. Free trade in small doses is better than none at all.

Although the Fifty-second Congress has not yet met for its first session, there are already eight vacancies in its membership, three by resignation and five by death. If the next House was as evenly divided politically as some former Congresses, eight vacancies would hazard the party majority.

The impression prevails at Washington that the Ohio election will determine very largely the status of the silver coinage issue. In the event of Campbell's election the western Democrats will be much strengthened in their position for free coinage, and the next Congress will undoubtedly pass a free coinage bill.

The unveiling of the Grady monument last week at Atlanta, Ga., was witnessed by an immense crowd of spectators. The monument itself, although one of the finest in the South, is but a slight token to the deceased. Grady will live in history as one of the brainiest men and noblest patriots of the present generation.

I wonder what idea you have of a thousand million dollars? I have got about as much idea of it as I have about the size of the moon or about the distance of the stars.—Ex-Speaker Reed.

A thousand million dollars, Mr. Reed, is just the amount of the expenditures of the last congress. Perhaps this illustration may serve to enlighten you somewhat.—Boston Herald.

The Toledo Bee says: "Free sugar, oh, yes; and in addition to the ten million dollars already paid in bounties to sugar producers another hundred thousand dollars is needed immediately and the first call on the next Congress will be for a deficiency appropriation to meet this demand of sugar beet producers for a bonus on their products. The question is how long will the men who raise corn and wheat submit to be taxed for the aid of beet growers and sugar manufacturers?

Secretary Foster was a successful business man before he ever entered politics. Therefore when he tells the public, as he did in an interview with a committee of merchants from New York, that there are at least fifty custom collection district in the United States that could be abolished without detriment to the public service and at an annual saving of several hundred thousand dollars, were it not for the opposition of the politicians, his words are worthy of the most careful consideration on the part of the people. The people are beginning to realize that they are the masters, not the servants, of the politicians.

After all, the best free trade arguments are made by organs of protection. Here is a sample, and were we as wise as Solomon we could not better show up the damnable side of protection and the good points of free trade:

"The Mills tariff bill (indorsed by President Cleveland) taxed the people about $60,000,000 a year on sugar alone. Sugar trust stock then sold at $115 to $125 per share. Now it sells at $85 to $96. Every dollar of that $60,000,000 in taxes the Republican bill leaves in the pockets of the people." If taking the tariff off sugar gave the sugar trust a black eye and left $60,000,000 in the pockets of the people, why not go further and take the tariff off wool, tin, steel, iron, glass and a hundred other articles?

ON BOTH SIDES.

Mr. Springer Shows That It is Better For the Farmer to Have a Market on Both Sides of the Ocean.

Nothing shows more clearly the aim of the advocates of a high tariff than the following terse criticism of their doctrines made by Congressman Springer in a speech at Spencer, Iowa, September 18, 1891:

"While Mr. Blaine and his especial admirers are lauding the policy of reciprocity with Cuba, Porto Rico and Brazil, and are searching for a new market for another pound of pork or barrel of flour, where they are least likely to find it, Mr. McKinley is holding aloft in Ohio the policy of the Chinese wall of exclusion. He addressed an audience of farmers on the 13th of August last, in Richland county, on which occasion he pointed out the advantages to be derived from a home market, and showed how nice it was to have a factory adjoining the farm. He said 'the farmers wanted to raise the bread to sell to factory hands.' He then submitted to his audience this question, and got the answer desired. I quote from a report of his speech as published in one of his partisan organs:

"'Would the farmers of Richland county rather have their customers on this side or on the other side of the ocean?' [A voice, 'This side.'] 'Of course you would.'

"This is the whole creed of the protectionists. Your market must be on this side of the ocean only. The response Maj. McKinley received was from one of his misguided partisans. If a democrat had cared to submit an answer, he would have said: 'On both sides.' What farmer is there in Iowa who would not rather have the market for his pork products on both sides of the ocean than on this side only? Mr. McKinley's policy would suggest to all the other governments on the other side of the ocean to follow the example of Germany and France in restricting the sale of our pork products. If he could have his views carried out, all foreign governments would prohibit the sale therein—not only of our pork products, but of all our products. We would then have all our customers 'on this side of the ocean.' Would you rather have it thus, my farmer friends? Mr. McKinley and protectionists generally answer: 'Of course you would.' But I trust you will answer for yourselves in November next by your votes, that you prefer to have your customers on both sides of the ocean. Then you must vote for the re-election of Gov. Boies in Iowa and Gov. Campbell in Ohio, and for democratic candidates wherever elections are held."

How much would the farmers be getting now for their wheat and corn were their markets confined, as advocated by Major McKinley, to the United States?

THE RICH FAVORED.

When the tariff shuts out goods entirely it is always such goods as poorer people buy; rich people buy what suits their tastes, whatever the price may be. An illustration of this is found in our imports of carpets. The carpets imported in the fiscal year 1890 came in at an average value of $1.16 a yard. The treasury report shows that the average value for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1891, was $2.08 a yard.

But the report gives a still more interesting insight into the workings of the McKinley duty. One part of it gives an extended comparison of the imports for the nine months from October, 1890 to June 30, 1891, with those of the same months in the previous year. The McKinley tariff went into effect on October 6 last year, and the imports of carpets from October 1 to June 30 were valued at $2.41 a yard.

The same thing is shown in cotton cloth. That which came in under nine months of the McKinley law was valued at 13¼ cents a yard as against 11 2-5 cents for the corresponding nine months under the old law.

These figures were gotten up by the treasury department at the cost of much labor and money to show the beautiful workings of the McKinley tariff law. What they do show is that the rich are going on buying European goods while the poor are shut up to the tender mercies of the "home market," plastered over as it is with tariff trusts and combinations.

These figures explode one of the most deeply cherished superstitions of the high tariff cranks. They say that when you put up the tariff the foreigner will reduce his prices in order to get into our market, and in this way he will pay our tariff taxes. The figures just quoted go to show that the foreigner is not doing any such thing. They show that he is continuing to sell high priced goods to the rich people of America, while the poorer classes are simply left.

THE LEAD TARIFF.

How the McKinley Tariff Has Driven Capital to Mexico and Injured Our Smelting Industry.

The following contribution to the Engineering and Mining Journal from a metallurgist in Mexico, who has, from his visit to the field, the best means of judging, shows how the imposition of a high duty on lead ore affects not only the lead smelting industry in this country and the workmen engaged in it, but also shuts off a profitable market for our farm products:

"Some eighteen months since, in view of the new rulings of the late Mr. Windom, then secretary of the treasury of the United States, regarding the importation of ores of silver containing lead, and also in view of the almost certain fact that a new tariff law would be enacted by congress that would most likely still further interfere with the import of ores from the Mexican republic, a company was organized for the construction and operation of lead smelting establishments in Mexico. Within a few months, following this lead, three other companies were organized on practically the same lines and for the same purpose; each obtained special privileges from the general government and also from the governments of the various states in which they intended locating their works.

"The first result of the publication of these proceedings, in which American capital was very largely interested, were numerous comments in the American press on the loss to the United States of what was at that time quite a profitable business, i. e., the purchase in Mexico of smelting ores for consumption in the United States and the far more serious evil of the transference to Mexico of such a large amount of capital and skill, and the building up in the latter country of an important industry that could and should have been retained north of the Rio Grande. The action of the administration undoubtedly has injured the United States, and in two ways, since it not oly affected seriously an industry already established, but lessened the purchasing power of a neighbor for agricultural products, such as corn, wheat, hay, cotton, live stock, cottonseed oil, etc. On most articles hitherto imported into Mexico from its northern neighbor, the new tariff of the country, which goes into effect on the first of November of this year, has raised the duties materially, and on our cottonseed oil, now largely imported for use in soap-making, and on horses, cattle, sheep and hogs, a very heavy increase has been made in the duties levied. This will undoubtedly interfere to a great extent in the importation of those articles.

A ROSE BY ANY OTHER NAME.

Madison and Webster on Free Trade—Hiscock and the New York Press on "Reciprocity"—Wherein Do They Differ.

During the debate on the tariff of 1789 James Madison, who represented a portion of Virginia, and was the leader of his party in the house, declared: "I own myself the friend to a very free system of commerce, and hold it as a truth that commercial shackles are generally unjust, oppressive and impolitic; it is also a truth that if industry and labor are left to take their own course they would generally be directed to those objects which are the more productive, and this in a more certain and direct manner than the most enlightened legislature could point out." Such were Madison's views, and in view of this the high protectionists of to-day charge that Madison was a free trader.

Thirty-five years later Daniel Webster, in replying to Henry Clay who was advocating his "American system," said: "Commerce is not a gambling among nations for a stake, to be won by some and lost by others. It has not the tendency necessarily to impoverish one of the parties to it, while it enriches the other; all parties gain, all parties make profits, all parties grow rich by the operation of just and liberal commerce. We inhabit a various earth. We have reciprocal wants and reciprocal means of gratifying one another's wants. This is the true origin of commerce, which is nothing more than an exchange of equivalents, and from the rude barter of its primitive state to the refined and complete condition in which we see it, its principle is uniformly the same, its only object being in every stage to produce that exchange of commodities between individuals and between nations which shall conduce to the advantage and happiness of both."

When Webster uttered such truths as these, he was taunted by Clay and his followers with being a free trader and hostile to the best interests of his country.

The New York Press, however, quotes the above in its issue of October 2 as a definition of the reciprocity advocated by Blaine and his followers.

And, finally, Senator Hiscock, who recently addressed the farmers at the Orange county fair, declared: "Briefly, reciprocity is the same relation between nations as that which exists between two farmers who are neighbors."

It is a puzzle to figure out wherein the free trade of Madison and Webster differs from the reciprocity of Hiscock.

ALLISON'S PROPHECY.

A Tin Plate Promise Not Fulfilled—Tin Plate Rising and No American Tin For Canning.

This country has heard many tin plate prophecies during the past year or two, and it has seen all the tin plate prophets come to grief. On January 16, 1889, Senator Allison was imbued with the spirit of prophecy and he made a forecast in the United States senate of what a high tin plate tax would do.

Here is an extract from the Record:

Mr. Ve-t—I should like to ask the senator from Iowa a question. He says he has additional information now upon this subject. Has he any information that any tin or terne plate manufactories are in existence in this country now, or that there is any immediate prospect of any coming into existence?

Mr Allison—I will say to the senator in response to that inquiry—and it is a very pertinent and very proper one in this connection—that there are quite a number of establishments which could immediately enter upon the production of these tin plates, or at least within a very brief period, probably within thirty days, and that we have assurances, and believe from examination and investigation, that within the time fixed for the taking effect of this new bill [less than one year] there will be in this country a sufficient plant to manufacture all the tin plate that we use I hav no doubt of it

The McKinley law was passed nearly a year ago; and it is now a good time to put a current trade report alongside of Senator Allison's prophecy. The latest circulars of C. S. Trench & Co., one of the leading firms of tin plate dealers in New York., reports: "Prices have improved fully 10 to 15 cents per box this week. * * * * We cannot help thinking that the outlook is excellent for prices being advanced, as the stock of Coke tins is known to be very limited, and because no Cokes can be imported from England at present under 25 to 30 cents per box over present prices ruling here, on account of the heavy McKinley duty. * * * We have not been able to trace any American manufacturers who have been able to turn out Cokes available for canning purposes, so we do not see any indication of any relief fram that quarter. It seems to us that our canning trade must stand as best it can the enormous tax levied on this industry by the McKinley bill."

GOT HIS EYES OPENED.

Mr. Robert Pratt, for 17 years with M. I. Wilcox & Co., of this city, and at present with Breyman Bros., awning makers, Summit street, returned Friday from a five months' visit to relatives in England.

Mr. Pratt has voted the Republican ticket for over 20 years, but his personal experience as well as the knowledge acquired in general observation, has convinced him that the tariff is not only a tax, but it is a fraud; a delusion and a snare.

A Bee met him at the Burnett house yesterday and had a lengthy interview with him on the subject of wages here and in England. Mr. Pratt was a passenger on the Teutonic, and was in the great storm of the previous week.

"We got into a howling gale," he said, "48 hours after leaving Queenstown and we had it all the way. It was a terrible passage and the people were under hatches most of the time."

"How did you find things in England?"

"In many respects vastly improved over eight or ten years ago. I was much surprised at the improvement in in the condition of the workingman."

"In what respect has it improved?"

"Well, in every way. He has shorter hours, more holidays and lives better than he did. In fact in the respects named, he is away ahead of the American laborer."

"Does he get good wages?"

"He lives better, and when I say that I mean all that the phrase implies. He has more leisure, although his work is continuous. Let me give you an illustration. An English Carpenter gets 2 pounds a week, or about ten dollars. This is the union scale and 97 per cent. of the carpenters belong to the union. This for 48 hours work a week, and for 52 weeks in a year. In America carpenters' wages average $2.25. Here in Toledo the union scale, I believe, is $2.50, although more are working for $2 than for $2.50. Well let us say $2.50. That is $15 for 54 hours. The English carpenter has work all the year around, while the American carpenter works not much over eight months in the year. There he has more holidays, legal holidays, and the cost of living is much cheaper."

"Then why do they come to America?"

"They don't come. We get the surplus common labor and only the riff raff of the mechanics, men who cannot command decent wages for the reason that they have not finished their apprenticeship. You know in England every mechanic, whether he be a carpenter, a blacksmith—no matter what, must serve an apprenticeship of from three to five years. The kind of mechanics that come here are either half-made apprentices or incapable botches who cannot get work there."

"What has been the effect of the McKinley bill in England?"

"Oh, they don't like it. In the manufacture of tin quite a number have been thrown out of employment, but then should tin be manufactured here successfully the surplus supply of tin makers will come over here and then it is the general belief that present conditions will not last. Prior to the passage of the McKinley bill American importers laid in a heavy supply so that the present stagnation in the tin industry in England is due to this as much as to anything. No, they don't like it in England any more than they like it here. It's a fraud."

"You, a good Republican, don't think so, do you?"

"Yes I do. I've got my eyes opened, and I wish to God every workingman in America could go over there and see things for themselves. You see this beaver overcoat? It cost me in London $23, and tailors in Toledo tell me I cannot buy it here for less than $45. Now, the English maker of that coat gets about the same wages as does the American tailor, but who gets the difference? The merchant? No. The journeyman tailor? No. I have figured it out that the manufacturer of the goods gets it, and I think it is little less than robbery. The iniquity of the tariff for protection was illustrated to me in a striking manner when I arrived in New York. You see that little pin (pointing to a diamond in his neck scarf.) Yes; well I was fool enough to say I had it among my effects, when the custom house people taxed me 50 per cent. on it. Think of it."

Yes, and a good many people will think of it, and other matters to which Mr. Pratt refers between now and November 3.—Toledo Bee.

King of Medicines

Scrofulous Humor—A Cure "Almost Miraculous."

"When I was 14 years of age I had a severe attack of rheumatism, and after I recovered had to go on crutches. A year later, scrofula, in the form of white swellings, appeared on various parts of my body, and for 11 years I was an invalid, being confined to my bed years. In that time ten or eleven sores appeared and broke, causing me great pain and suffering. I feared I never should get well.

"Early in 1886 I went to Chicago to visit a sister, but was confined to my bed most of the time I was there. In July I read a book, 'A Day with a Circus,' in which were statements of cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla. I was so impressed with the success of this medicine that I decided to try it. To my great gratification the sores soon decreased, and I began to feel better and in a short time I was up and out of doors. I continued to take Hood's Sarsaparilla for about a year, when, having used six bottles, I had become so fully released from the disease that I went to work for the Flint & Walling Mfg. Co., and since then on account of sickness. I believe the disease is expelled from my system, I always feel well, am in good spirits and have a good appetite. I am now 27 years of age and can walk as well as any one, except that one limb is a little shorter than the other, owing to the loss of bone, and the sores formerly on my right leg. To my friends my recovery seems almost miraculous, and I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is the king of medicines." WILLIAM A. LEHR, 9 N. Railroad St., Kendallville, Ind.

HAVE NOT LOST A SINGLE DAY

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

THE NEW ABOLITION.

From a Speech, Delivered by William Lloyd Garrison Before the Chicago (Ill.) Single Tax Club, September 8, 1891.

We are the new abolitionists, because our object is be attained purely by the abolition of vicious taxes, taking off one by one, until land values alone supply government with revenue. While working for the ideal society where justice shall make charity obsolete, we strike directly at the obstacles which lie nearest our land. We do not question the result.

"We may not live to see the day,
But earth shall glisten in the ray
Of the good time coming."

I have time only to suggest a few of the points wherein single tax puzzled me, hoping that the reasons which dissipated my objections may remove similar ones from some hearer's mind.

I had no hesitation in accepting the basic proposition of our creed, that man has a right to the use of the earth so long as all wealth is drawn from that source by the application of labor, and to deny a human being access to this great storehouse of nature is, of course, wrong. The simple statement carries with it conviction, and for the bounty of the Creator to be controlled or monopolized by individuals for aggrandizement, at the expense of their fellow creatures, is manifestly unjust and indefensible, and needs no demonstration.

That this is our strong fortress is manifest by the disinclination of our opponents to debate it. I never yet met one who tried to controvert our principle. It is about details and methods and results that the controversy always rages.

The failure of all attempts to reach personal property is widely recognized, the rich escaping and the poor and conscientious making up the deficit. The tax on incomes leads to false returns and is a premium on deception. So students of long experience, like David A. Wells and Edward Atkinson, contend that real estate should bear the burden, because it lies open to the sun and can not be hidden, and the tax will distribute itself most fairly. Strange that these men, with whom we are so nearly in agreement, should range themselves among our opponents.

Now the single tax would lift every burden from the product of labor, not taxing the houses and improvements put upon the land, as the economists I have mentioned propose to do. We are defenders of property and insist upon the sacredness of men's just earnings and their inalienable right to exchange their products or services to the best advantage.

Our difference arises in our definition of property, under which head we deny that land properly comes. It is the element from which property is evolved by labor, but in equity is no more property than the air or the sunshine. It has been treated as such, because, unlike air and sunshine, it is possible to monopolize it, but the genesis of every title deed rests on "force, fraud or cunning"—to borrow Mr. Spencer's words. We do not deny that the law considers land property, but thirty years ago it also recognized the ownership of human flesh. We say with regard to land, as the righteous Vermont judge said to the slaveholder claiming his fugitive: "Show me a bill of sale from the Almighty and I will deliver him to you."

I was puzzled at first about land bearing the sole burden of taxation, because I thought the farmer would suffer most. But when I learned that land values only were to be taxed, not land, I saw that farmers would pay less instead or more, because the value of farms, irrespective of all improvements would be small, while under the present system the more industrious and self-denying a farmer is, the more the tax gatherer takes from him. Two farms, side by side, having the same site value, are taxed to-day in proportion to their working, and the thrifty farmer is made to pay heavily because of his industry, and his shiftless neighbor is let off with a small contribution. Thrift is punished and neglect is rewarded. The single tax would leave to labor its entire earnings. The real land values are to be found in cities. What enormous farms the little lot under this building would buy!

The hardest thing for me to understand was the fact that land taxes can not be shifted by the landlord, and today neither Mr. Wells nor Mr. Atkinson can see it, thereby differing with the recognized authorities on political economy.

I thought if I leased a lot of land, I could make my tenant pay the tax back to me in added rent. It seems as if I might do so. But it takes two to make a bargain, and it is not what I ask that I get, but as near that as my customer will give. I get all that I can, and he gives the least that he can and the rent is fixed at the line where neither will advance or recede. The taxes I must pay, because he has given me all he will, and if I should insist that they go with the rent, he would seek other lots. I noted also that the city lots most heavily taxed contained stores where the lowest priced goods are sold. This convinced me that the landlord was not recovering his taxes from the public, but that the advantage of situation more than offset them. In other words, he simply paid for a privilege worth the price, and to call such payment a tax, when value is fully returned, is truly a misnomer. So, although we use the term single tax to give a distinct idea of our method, it is in no sense a burden, does not partake of the nature of a tax, and can not enter into the cost of production. This is an important point, because our claim for the justice of the single tax rests upon the impossibility of shifting it upon labor, and the trouble with the present system is, that taxes are made to be shifted and eventually are unloaded upon the shoulders of the people least able to bear them. Hence, unequal conditions of living, low wages and poverty.

The question of compensation is the last ditch we have to enter. Is it right, our critics ask, that a man who has put his honest earnings into land, should have it confiscated? What better than robbery is that—and the virtuous critic gives us a withering look of outraged honesty, which in the eyes of the unthinking is equivalent to annihilation. President Walker and Prof. Clarke, of Smith college, are prominent in this role. As truth crushed to earth will rise again, we come up, smiling, to ask who is doing the confiscation? What does the single tax propose to take? Simply the economic rent or annual value which the growth of the community has given to the land. Taking for the benefit of the people a value which they alone have made, is justice, not confiscation.

Our proposition is to put a stop to the present confiscation, and to rescue from private appropriation what belongs to the public. If compensation is to be made, it should be from him who appropriates to him who is despoiled, not the reverse. And one would think that even presidents and professors of colleges, observing the crowded and unwholesome conditions of city life—the slums wherein the workingmen and women are forced to dwell, where anguish drives thousands to the oblivion of drink, and prostitution claims its subjects from a starving class—would sometimes ask themselves what compensation is possible for these victims which a society that arrogates to itself the name of Christian, offers up on the altar of land monopoly.

Emerson understood the true method, when the slaveholder called for compensation—

"Pay ransom to the owner
And fill the bag to the brim.
Who is the owner? The Slave is owner,
And ever was. Pay him."

To me, as well as to many others, the lessening of poverty and the raising of wages, which the single tax promises, was an unwarrantable prophecy, and in my letter of sympathy to Mr. George I said: "I do not believe that your plan is the panacea of poverty." "Nor I," he replied, "but I am sure freedom is." Since then my faith has grown and is growing in the efficacy of this measure with the fiscal name. It is the handmaid of freedom and must unlock the bars and bolts.

Voluntary poverty which results from willful disobedience we have no concern with, although with altered conditions and higher standards of living that too must wane. But self-degradation, as sad as it is, is not the sight that wrings our souls. The sensualist and idler may be safely left to the natural punishment which accompanies transgression. "As close as sin and suffering joined," is the descriptive line of Whittier. It is the involuntary and enforced misery that is so dreadful, man suffering at the hands of his brother.

The wonderful increase of material wealth, which fairly distributed would make want almost disappear, the swollen and stolen fortunes, side by side with the sweat-shops and beggars, the carnival of luxury and the discontent of labor, all indicate the dangers which threaten the republic and which we would avert. We urge no arbitrary remedy, but make the safe and moderate demand conveyed in Emerson's wise words, "Give no bounties, make equal laws, secure life and property, and you need not give alms. Open the doors of opportunity to talent and virtue and they will do themselves justice, and property will not be in bad hands."

Extirpating the "Sweater."

It is said that the Illinois Bureau of Labor Statistics is about to begin an investigation into the "sweating" system, with a view to prohibiting it by legislation. "Sweating" is a word with a bad sound, and we must expect to hear the Illinois Labor Bureau praised for what it intends to do, and the Illinois legislature urged to act upon its suggestions. "Sweating" must be stamped out!

But what is "sweating?" A, a capitalist, proposes to invest his capital in manufactured goods for the purpose of supplying the market and reaping a profit. Buying raw materials, he turns them over to B, and C, and D, upon contract for manufacturing the finished articles. B, and C, and D hire the remainder of the alphabet to do the work under their direction, and having paid market wages and completed their part of the contract, both with their own employes and with A, they receive the contract price.

Is not this ordinary business? Is there anything wrong about it? Who shall call it a crime?

Of course it is no crime. Nor would any one think of denouncing it but for the fact that in certain lines of work wages are so pitifully small that for B and C and D to extract a benefit from them seems like grinding the poor. And so B and C and D are called "sweaters," and we denounce their conduct as if it were not in perfect harmony with the legitimate laws of trade.

The real wrong lies in conditions that force the major part of the alphabet to beg for work of B and C and D at any price, and not in the efforts of the "sweaters" to better their own condition. But throats that swell with hard language at "sweating," are silent when it is proposed to abolish the cause of conditions that make "sweating" possible. According to all our standards "sweaters" are enterprising, thrifty workmen who, with souls above the drudgery to which they were born, strive manfully to make their fortunes better than those of their fellows. They steal from no one. They force no one to work for them. They merely buy labor for the price at which labor offers itself. If labor is free, there is in this nothing to condemn and much to admire. If labor is other than free, it is not especially the fault of the "sweaters."

No combination of workmen can raise their own wages much above the level of ordinary wages. The attempt to do so is like the attempt to bail out a boat without stopping up the seams.

STARVING RUSSIANS.

Twenty Million Persons Said to Be Without Food.

Cold Blooded Shylocks Hold the Starving People at Their Mercy — Women Forced to Sell Their Hair for a Meal.

TERRIBLE DESTITUTION.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—Winter began in Russia on Thursday with the first sharp frost. Living men cannot remember any other year in which this simple announcement meant what it does now. There are literally millions of human beings, at the furthest within a six days' journey of London, to whom this frost comes as a sentence of death by starvation. Although the censors have forbidden the Russian papers to discuss the famine, the Novosti ventures the declaration that 20,000,000 creatures are already without food.

Statistics prove conclusively that in many places speculators get extortionate prices. Corn merchants and village koolaks, or usurers, are charged with responsibility for the extortion. A Samara paper declares that Jews are angels compared with the koolaks, who are in the habit of reducing those in their power to the lowest stage of poverty. Incidents showing the terrible distress of the people continue to be recorded. A poor woman of Ratchino, on returning home from a neighboring village, whither she had gone to try to purchase food, found all her children dead, and a post-mortem examination being made their stomachs were found filled with rags and earth. Many villages are completely deserted in the district of Porm. One half of the population of Reasan has died of hunger or disease. An odious traffic is carried on in women's hair, the best heads realizing a crown apiece. In some cases the price of a single meal is eagerly accepted.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 24.—A peculiar feature of the famine now raging is the large exportation of grain to foreign ports while millions of Russians are starving. It appears that about 35,000,000 more pounds of rye have been exported this year than in 1890, notwithstanding the prohibition which gave a vast stimulus to export during the few weeks before it took effect. The diseases already prevailing in the famine-stricken provinces are creating almost as much alarm as the famine itself. The municipal authorities of St. Petersburg have voted a sum of money equivalent to $625,000 for the relief of the sufferers from the famine.

FOUND DEAD ON THEIR SHIP.

The Bodies of the Sailors of the Red Wing Recovered—Fourteen Lost.

LEWES, Del., Oct. 26.—Capt. Vickers and the crew of the life-saving station at Indian river recovered the bodies of fourteen men, the crew of the schooner Red Wing. Two of the men were picked up on the shore and the others were taken from the rigging of the schooner. Some of the bodies were terribly mutilated, the faces being bruised beyond recognition and their limbs broken. The body of the captain is supposed to be under the schooner, which is turned upside down, only the keel being visible.

ANOTHER BAD WRECK.

Two Brakemen Killed and Two Engineers Fatally Injured in Iowa.

MARSHALLTOWN, Ia., Oct. 24.—A special from Lake City says: A terrible collision occurred late Thursday night between two heavy freight trains on a branch of the Chicago & Northwestern railroad. Both trains were fearfully wrecked. M. R. Hayden and George Stein, both brakemen, living at Lake City, were both instantly killed. Engineers Collins and McAllister were probably fatally injured and other trainmen considerably hurt. The accident occurred on a curve, neither engineer seeing the other train in time to avoid the disaster.

Lottery Officials Indicted.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Oct. 24.—The grand jury reported on Friday eleven separate indictments, each giving eighteen counts, against the officers of the Louisiana lottery. Among the list are Gen. Beauregard, Paul Conrad, president, and Joseph P. Horner, secretary. The indictments are for transmitting lottery advertisements through the mails, which is a violation of the lottery law passed last winter by congress. The extreme penalty, in cases of conviction is five years' imprisonment and $5,000 fine.

Tight Lacing Killed Her.

POTTSTOWN, Pa., Oct. 26.—Tight lacing killed Katie Cole, a girl of 18 years. She was on her way to church Sunday and dropped dead in Franklin street after a slight coughing spell. Dr. C. A. Yocum was called, but Miss Cole was past his help. An examination thoroughly convinced the physician that the tight compression of the closely-laced and slender waist had squeezed the life out of Katie.

Druggists Will Stop Selling Liquor.

ABERDEEN, S. D., Oct. 24.—Officers of the state and county have come to an understanding with the druggists, the druggists promising to surrender their permits January 1 and make no further sales of liquor, and the state agreeing to withdraw all suits if the agreement is adhered to.

Chicago Has a New Ball Club.

CHICAGO, Oct. 23.—Chicago's new ball club is now a full-fledged member of the American association. It was admitted to membership at a meeting of association directors on Thursday.

Another Indian School.

MT. PLEASANT, Mich., Oct. 24.—Commissioner Morgan, of the Indian bureau, has designated this place as the site for the third and last Indian industrial school.

Six Persons Drowned.

BOSTON, Oct. 26.—The schooner Franklin was wrecked off Gurney Point, Mass., and Captain Kelly, his two sons and three men were drowned.

TECUMSEH HERALD.

Issued Every Thursday Morning.

TECUMSEH, MICH., OCT. 29, 1891.

THE MAGIC CITY.

What a Tecumseh Type Saw Last Week at Harvey, Illinois.

During our visit to LaPorte and Chicago last week, we accepted the invitation of Messrs. Waring Bros., in company with twenty-five or thirty ladies and gentlemen from this section of the country. We boarded the Illinois Central train and enjoyed a fifty mile ride along the lake front, through Hyde Park and the beautiful temperance town of Pulman, and into Harvey, two miles South of the city limits of Chicago. The Big 4, Illinois Central and the Grand Trunk now pass through Harvey, and the Calumet Terminal are engaged in laying their rails. A point of great importance is that Harvey is included in the Chicago Belt Line System, by which it obtains the same freight rates as Chicago, a point appreciated by all concerned. Chicago with thirty-five terminals is the greatest railroad center in the world, and Harvey will keep pace with the big town and its railroads. We took carriages and drove completely around the Academy addition, a strip of land recently purchased by Walter Thomas Mills & Co. In passing around this land we noticed a new bridge over the Calumet river, and at this point the driver smiled when we noticed the natural grade of the land from the South line to the river. It is impossible for a purchaser to resist the impulse and they pull the pocket book. We noticed two ladies and three gentlemen bought near trees on the river.

The Industrial Academy is located on Academy Addition, and the North wing will be completed before snow flies. A large hotel will be built near the river which will afford a quiet retreat from the World's Fair. Halsted street from the city crosses the Calumet river and runs through this addition, making the street 39 miles long. The Elevated road is to come in on this street and cross the plat. Seventy-three miles of trees have been planted, numerous parks laid out and the main street macadamized; houses, stores, &c., are going up constantly. We saw Will Osborn and Mr. Besemer painting a double cottage of beautiful design. Mad Goodrich and mother are living in a temporary house until he can finish a house. Harvey Love is working in the Buda Works, and Mr. Lowery is throwing mortar. All seemed to be well pleased. We called at the Headlight printing office and was surprised to find so well equipped establishment. They employ from ten to fifteen hands and publish a wideawake paper.

The manufacturers employ men who identify themselves with the town. To such a steady job is certain the year around. A good idea, as the mechanic in ten years will own a home that cost $1,500, and will be worth —, well, I can't say. A friend bought three lots last March for $300 each and sold them Oct. 1st for $600 each.

We noticed the following persons who have located or contemplate locating:

Adrian.—Mrs. O. Osborn, D. M. Reed and wife, and L. R. Damon and wife.

Tecumseh.—R. M. Boyd and Arch Boyd.

Raisin.—Wm. Cornelius.

W. P. Cadmus was about to move into a very neat house just completed.

The following we notice in the Chicago Evening Journal:

"In four weeks recently the sales of lots in Harvey amounted to about $100,000. The sales of Walter Thomas Mills & Co., for the same time were $86,000, leaving about $14,000 for all others combined. This is a remarkable record, but the explanation is an easy one. Harvey is a temperance town and Mr. Mills of this firm probably has a more extended personal acquaintance with the temperance people of this country than any other man in America. The most remarkable advance which Harvey has taken at any time was following the announcement of his connection with the enterprise. But there have been many other reasons quite as important as this. The firm has made every buyer a friend. They have exercised the greatest care in all representations concerning the property which they have sold. They have undertaken no trick of offering cheap lots in out of way and unavailable localities. They have sold no property not increasing in value or likely to go out of demand. They have had exclusive control of all the property handled by them, and by personal attention to their property have in every instance made it the most desirable offered to the public. They take a special interest in home seekers, and have averaged nearly a new house every day on their property and that for several weeks in succession. Messrs. Waring Bros. are the only Michigan representatives of Walter Thomas Mills & Co. They are as well and favorably known in Michigan as are Mills & Co., in Chicago."

Blind Boone, the colored vocalist and pianoforte player, assisted by Miss Stella May, gave a concert last night at the Centenary M. E. Church. The greater part of the program was instrumental, and the touch and expression of the blind man is exquisite. Considering the disadvantages he labors under, he is perfectly marvelous. His principal pieces were a Moonlight Sonata by Beethoven, and the Marshfield Tornado. Miss Stella May, a young lady scarcely 16 years of age, sings admirably and has a perfect contralto voice.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A Pleasant Surprise Party.

"We desire the pleasure of your presence at our home Thursday evening, Oct. 12th, 1891, at 7 o'clock.

MR. AND MRS. EVERHART.

Thus read the dainty invitations sent out to about twenty-five friends. The guests assembled promptly at the given hour, thinking only of spending a pleasant evening with the host and hostess, and their assembled children and grandchildren, as it was noticed by the guests that they were all there. After a short time, given to greetings and introductions, supper was announced. An hour was spent at the tables, where a delicious and bountiful supper of three courses was served.

Returning to the parlors the guests were soon in animated conversation, when Mrs. Celia Gillespie quietly approached one of the guests and requested that it be announced to the company that it was her father's and mother's forty-fifth wedding anniversary. The announcement was made and a few words of congratulation given to the host and hostess; then Rev. Phelps invoked the Divine blessing.

This time the guests were the surprised party, as was shown by the handshaking and congratulations extended to Mr. and Mrs. Everhart. The evening seemed too short, but we went away feeling that we had enjoyed a pleasant surprise party.

The Midnight Alarm.

The standing room sign went out early last night at the Academy of Music. The potent attraction was "The Midnight Alarm," a play new to Buffalo theatre goers, but which has established itself for the future as a sterling attraction. The play is full of bright spots; dark villainy is relieved by flashes of delicious comedy. There was an appreciable lack of that inconsistency so often seen in modern melodrama. The author, Jas. W. Harkins, Jr., has evidently studied his subject until he has it at his finger-ends, or say, his pen-point. The centering episode is the end of the fourth act when the midnight alarm is struck. Here is presented one of the most effective scenes ever presented in this city. Trucks, engines, and all the various paraphernalia of the fire service, dash across the stage in full view of the spectators. This must be seen to be appreciated. Every act was beautifully and becomingly set, and some fine scenery presented. Miss Katie Pearson, who personates the Living Statue Clock, is the centre around which the manager of the play has gathered a company of sterling merit. The Midnight Alarm promises to eclipse all previous records at this popular house before the end of the week.—Buffalo Courier.

The Blind Boone Concert Company gave another enjoyable entertainment Monday evening, at the Y. M. C. A. hall, under the auspices of Stephenson Post, G. A. R., and the large and spacious hall was crowded with Springfield's elite and intelligence. Among some of the most notable were: Gov. and Mrs. J. W. Fifer, Chief Justice Shope, Ex-Gov. Palmer, Judge Matheny, Miss Emily Selby, State Librarian, and State Senator Shutt. That Boone gave entire satisfaction is very evident, judging from the continuous hearty applause which greeted each number on the program. It would be useless for us to attempt to describe Boone's musical ability. He executes the most difficult music, with such ease and composure, that one is almost struck dumb with amazement; his different imitatations on the piano cannot be equalled. Miss Stella May's voice is one of the richest that we have every listened to; she has her voice under entire control, and will, no doubt, in the near future reach the topmost round of the ladder of vocalism. Mr. Boone, his genial manager, Mr. Lange, and Miss Stella will always be welcome in Springfield by a large and appreciative audience.—The State Capital, Springfield, Ill.

OBITUARY.

EDWARD BARDWELL.

Died, at Tecumseh, Michigan, on Wednesday, Sept. 30th, 1891, Edward Bardwell, aged 87 years. He was born at Conway, Mass., July 10th, 1804. His father's family removed to the State of New York in 1806, and after several successive removals settled in Rochester, N. Y., in 1823. Here he began a business life as a clerk. After a time he opened a small store on his own account. Through his strict integrity and great industry he established after a few years a very large and successful business. Though he met with reverses he went on his way undiscouraged. In January, 1842, he was married to Miss Jane A. Burke, of Rochester. In 1869, the family, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Bardwell and two children, a son and daughter, removed to Michigan. Finally, after various changes, a settlement was made in Tecumseh, in 1875, at which place Mrs. Bardwell died in February, 1891, and Mr. Bardwell soon followed her, his death being no doubt hastened by grief at her loss.

Though always a moral man, Mr. Bardwell's strictly religious life did not begin until 1856, when after passing through an experience of very bright and unusual character, he became a member of the "Brick Church," Rochester, Rev. J. B. Shaw, D. D., pastor. He regretted always his long delay in assuming christian duties. But when he did take them up it was with a heartiness which seemed to make amends in some sort for the delay. His shining countenance at his conversion was a true index of his inward joy. Many observed it with wonder. The testimony of Dr. Shaw was that no such Baptism of the Spirit as he received had been given in his most fruitful ministry. Entering faithfully on the discharge of both his public and private duties as a professing christian, he was soon made a deacon of the church. In this capacity he proved one of the foremost helpers of his pastor, who relied upon him and who was accompanied by him often in his pastoral visitations. No one, we think, ever questioned the genuineness of Mr. Bardwell's christianity. The light of his profession so shone that all who came within the reach of its shining, were convinced that it was a light from heaven. In his darkest days, and he was called to pass through some very deep and bitter trial, his faith never wavered. It was always of that simple and childlike sort which made eternal verities seem real to him and the One in whom he trusted seem present. There was no murmuring or repining over hardship of his lot when he was called to pass from a condition of competence to one of privation.

During the sixteen years of his residence in Tecumseh, Mr. Bardwell, by his urbane and genial, and at the same time unassuming deportment, and by the unexceptional character of his example, won the confidence of its citizens. Business men came forward voluntarily to his aid and stood ready to render assistance connected with the close of his life that might be needed, and other friends and neighbors did whatever they were allowed. One of the last utterances of this aged disciple was the expression of a wish to fulfil the mission his Heavenly Father gave him to perform and a willingness to bear whatever of suffering He chose still to lay upon him.

The funeral services were held at the Presbyterian church on Friday, October 2d, at 2:30 p. m., the pastor, Rev. W. H. Babbitt, officiating, assisted by Rev. James Vincent, the choir rendering appropriate music.

MRS. ASA RUSSELL.

At break of day on the morning of October 7th, 1891, members of the family and friends were summoned to the residence of the younger son, Asel Russell, to attend the deathbed of Mother Russell, who at over ninety years of age, departed this life calmly, painlessly, manifesting again the truth of the inspired words, "It is appointed unto all men once to die."

Lydia Huntington Lovegrove was born in Plainfield, Windham county, Conn., Sept. 21st, 1801. Her father was Edward Lovegrove, who married Lydia Huntington, both descendants of early English pioneers.

January 1st, 1823, at Plainfield, Conn., by Rev. Orrin Fowler, Miss Lydia Lovegrove was married to Asa Russell, son of Capt. Asa Russell, of Canterbury, Conn. After their marriage they resided at Plainfield, N. H., Plainfield, Conn., Buffalo, N. Y., and Perry, Ohio, emigrating to Michigan in the fall of 1834, with a family of four small children, while Michigan was still a territory, and a wilderness, and bears had not ceased to prowl nor wolves to howl. While they had their hearts and hands full to provide for the comfort, support and education of their children, Mother Russell, who had joined the church in early youth, labored enthusiastically for the promotion of good society, the temperance cause, the church and the Sunday school. Her home duties were not neglected—being a model housekeeper. Friends and strangers were hospitably received and entertained. The "itinerant minister" always found a home. Sickness at this time was almost universal, and far and near she was found by the side of the sick bed, administering to the wants and necessities of the afflicted.

In the fall of 1880, on the account of the feeble health of her husband, they gave up their old home in Macon and went to live with their oldest son, Edward L. Russell, in Raisin, where they resided until her husband's death, which occured Nov. 6th, 1883.

Having always been an active worker and student, and now left without employment or responsibility, her eyesight failing somewhat she could read only with difficulty, the change was too severe, her spirits were broken and she had only to sit and ponder over her loss until she first became morbid and then deranged. It was very painful for her family and friends to thus behold her. But after death had released her, the old expression returned to her features and she looked more natural and younger than she had for years.

Services were held at the M. E. Church in Ridgeway, conducted by Rev. E. Yager. Text, 1st Cor., 3, 22, "Death is yours." He said that "death was the key that had unlocked the doors and set her spirit at liberty, that she had gone forth to reap her reward, and now was enjoying the society of her departed companion." She was laid to rest in the Ridgeway cemetery by the side of her husband.

"How e'er it be, it seems to me
'Tis only noble to be good.
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith, than Norman blood."

MRS. EMELINE A. MITCHEL

Died, in the township of Manchester, at the residence of her brother-in-law, Mr. Stitt, of paralysis, Mrs. Emeline A. Mitchel, aged 85 years. Mrs. Mitchel was a resident of Tecumseh in former years, the wife of Mr. James Hoeg, and had many friends and acquaintances here who have an affectionate remembrance of her. The funeral was held in St. Peter's Church in this village, at 2 o'clock, Sunday last, and the remains committed to the grave in the Tecumseh cemetery.

P. S. DePuy has placed us under obligations for a lot of very nice potatoes. One potato, baked, made a good supper for the whole family.—Tecumseh Herald.

If Mr. DePuy had further taxed his benevolence and added a package of common salt, it would have relieved the monotony and flavored the potato. —Adrian Press.

Miss Linde's voice has a compass of three octaves, from low C to high C, every note true and pure. This is considered unusual by musicians for a voice of contralto quality. In addition, there is none of that disagreeable harshness that is so apt to mar the higher tones of a voice which can give the lower register so masterfully.—N. Y. Journal.

Opper's cartoon in Puck of October 28th, entitled, "He Blew too Hard," is a laughable hit at Mr. Fassett's attempt to blow up the Tammany Tiger into a large-sized bugaboo. The trouble with Mr. Fassett is, his speeches are too windy, and he makes too many of them. His oft-repeated remarks about Tammany and the Tiger have made him a laughing stock throughout the State of New York.

Last Tuesday evening a crowded audience testified their appreciation of the old Italian favorite tenor, Italo Campanini. He was himself again, and sang like a god. He selected the "Narrative" in the third act of "Lohengrin," and gave it with such a beautiful purity and power of tone, and such a noble phrasing as no tenor but Campanini has done. He scored a veritable triumph, and we heard in every direction, "Campanini is himself again!"—American Musician.

If Miss Clementine DeVere was a sensation to the Festival audience in the Wagner music on Thursday night, she was electrifying in her singing yesterday afternoon. She completely captivated the audience, and after her rendition of the mad scene from "Hamlet" of Ambroise Thomas, and still more so after the aria from Meyerbeer's "L'Etoile du Nord," there was not even the hypercritical cynic who would not have said, had he followed the history of the Festivals, that even not excepting Patti, Nilsson or Materna, was there, from the beginning, a soloist engaged by the association who was more successful in giving such general satisfaction in her work.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

William T. Coleman, the chairman of the famous San Francisco Vigilance Committees of 1851, 1856, and 1877, in on account of their work which he has written for the November Century, refers to the recent lynching at New Orleans, and tells what he thinks the people of California would have done under the same circumstances. They would have organized in full force, he says, formed a court, appointed a judge and selected a jury; called for evidence, analyzed it carefully, put on trial the people who had been discharged by the perjured jury, given the accused good counsel and the benefit of every doubt, and finally would have executed with due deliberation those whom they found guilty.

Expense not considered, pianists should be able to tune their own piano, for often one string out of tune gives as much trouble as if the whole scale were so and no tuner at hand. Our new book teaches a new method, whereby every lady can easily tune. The Press, N. Y., says: "It teaches how to tune by a new, simple process, and divests the art of all mystery. It also tells how to remedy all defects in piano and organ." The price, bound in leatherett, is 75c., but to introduce quickly we will send it free, with ten pieces sheet music, and a present that sells for one dollar, to all sending nine two-cent stamps for postage, etc., and names of six persons who play and have a piano. This offer is only made for a short time by a reliable house. Address Standard Music Co., 90 Euclid ave., Cleveland, O.

The steam barge, Oscar Townsend, owned by Capt. Chilson, O. P. Bills, Wm. Hayden and J. Root, of this village, was entirely destroyed by fire Wednesday of last week. She was going to Escanaba, partially loaded with coal, having in tow her consort, the Edward Kelley. About 6 o'clock, while off Sanilac about four miles, a lamp exploded in the lamp room, and the fire spread so rapidly that it soon got beyond control. The boat is reported as a total loss. A tug rescued the captain and crew and brought them to Port Huron. The barge was one of the staunchest wooden vessels on the lakes, having been overhauled and furnished with first-class machinery a couple of years ago. Her owners consider her worth at least $50,000. She was insured for $35,000.

The residence of E. N. Avery, on Logan street, was the scene of a quiet little wedding party last evening, when Mr. Frank H. Hall and Miss May E. Avery became husband and wife. None but relatives of the contracting parties were there, but a pleasant evening was enjoyed by the fortunate ones present. The knot was tied by Rev. W. H. Babbitt in his happiest manner, followed by the usual concomitants of such occasions. The young couple will begin the duties of housekeeping at once on the farm of the groom's father, where their home will be for the present. They have hosts of friends in Tecumseh who will extend their best wishes and congratulations at this auspicious time, in which the HERALD begs leave to join.

Last Tuesday, at a late hour in the evening, the house and barns on the John Hanley place, about two miles south of the village, were burned. Mr. Hanley had just vacated the premises and had his household effects loaded into a car at Tecumseh for transportation to Richmond, Va., hence no one was occupying the place at the time. The origin of the fire is a mystery. Yesterday Mr. Hanley was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Stevens, on complaint of Geo. Cochran, Sec'y of the Farmers Ins. Co., charging him with setting the fire. The examination has been fixed for Nov. 5th and the accused is released on bail. There is something mysterious about the affair and we refrain from any comments until the evidence shall be introduced in court.

UNCLE SAM AROUSED.

Chili Must Answer for the Recent Valparaiso Affair.

Chilian Officials Were Responsible for the Cowardly Attack on the Baltimore's Crew and Full Reparation Must Be Made.

THE BOSTON ORDERED TO CHILI.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—Chili is to be brought to terms. Forbearance has ceased to be a virtue on the part of the United States and the Chilian junta will know it as soon as Minister Egan makes certain communications to them. A serious turn is given the Valparaiso affair by the dispatch of Capt. Schley reciting the result of a court of inquiry as to the origin of the assault on the American sailors. This dispatch was the subject of a long conference at the white house Friday afternoon between President Harrison, W. J. Foster representing the state department, Secretary Tracy and Attorney General Miller. The climax was reached by the latest information showing that the sailors had been stabbed in the back, and that the wounds were inflicted by bayonets in the hands of policemen. This news destroyed the theory of a mere row and showed that the authorities, instead of doing their duty, must be held responsible for the attack. It also showed that the American sailors could not have started a mere brawl. They were victims of Chilian hatred and Chilian insolence.

The president and the members of the conference agreed that a halt must be called and at once upon Chilian insults. When the conference broke up Mr. Foster carried in his pocket a cablegram to be sent to Minister Egan which shows that the United States has decided to enter on a decidedly aggressive policy with the junta. The cablegram instructs Mr. Egan to satisfy himself of the correctness of the conclusions of the Schley court of inquiry, and if the particulars are found as reported to demand at once indemnity for the sufferers, a suitable apology and punishment for all the offenders engaged in the barbarous and unwarranted attack upon our sailors. Under the circumstances as reported by the court of inquiry the president's advisors agree that this country has a perfect right for complete and full reparation. The affair is regarded as something more than a street riot or row between sailors. It is an attack upon representatives of the United States government, not by private citizens of Chili, but by Chilian sailors and Chilian policemen, the men whose duty it is to preserve law and order.

At the conclusion of the conference Secretary Tracy made the following statement:

"From a dispatch received from Capt. Schley it appears he has made a careful investigation of the origin of the assault on the sailors attached to the Baltimore at Valparaiso October 16. The investigation showed that Petty Officer Riggand, while riding in a street-car, was assaulted, dragged from the car and shot; that he was murdered in the arms of his companions by about 100 men who were armed; that Apprentice Frederick Talbot was assailed and dangerously cut several times in the back, two of the wounds penetrating his lungs; that Coalheaver Itherson was stabbed and dangerously cut several times in the back, this assault being made by about twenty five men; that Coalheaver Turnbull received eighteen wounds in the back, two of which penetrated his lungs and that he is in a critical state; that Pettey Officer Hamilton was wounded several times in the back and other parts of the body; that Coalheaver Panter and Landsman Davidson were dangerously injured by assaults with clubs, stones and knives, and that many other men were seriously injured by assaults; that thirty-five seamen were arrested by the public authorities and detained; that the surgeons on the Baltimore are unanimously of the opinion that some of the wounds were inflicted by bayonets, thus showing clearly the participation of the police; that the American sailors were without arms and defenseless; that they were sober and innocent of any misbehavior; that two of the seriously wounded are still in the hospital; that in several instances sailors of the Chilian fleet rendered assistance to our sailors, and that in some instances the police officers protected them."

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—The steel cruiser Boston will sail at once to reinforce the United States squadron in Chilian waters.

STORMS ABROAD.

Floods in the South of France Continue to Do Much Damage.

PARIS, Oct. 26.—The floods in the south of France are causing much damage and alarm. The river Tet has risen 4 meters and entered the houses of Pont Rouge, from which the inhabitants incontinently fled. A landslip has occurred on the Perpignan railway, and all traffic is stopped. The low lying districts around Argeles are under water for 4 miles. At Rivesaltes the streets are all under water. The tombs in the cemetery are washed away and the coffins and dead bodies are floating about in confusion. Many houses have been destroyed. At Carcassonne the floods are greater and more appalling than during the great inundations of 1830 and 1872. The iron bridge on the railway from Carcassonne to Guillerd is breaking down, and soldiers have been sent on horseback to warn the inhabitants of their danger. Many houses are under water, and the situation is made more horrible still by the fact that the gas supply has been cut off by the rising flood. Corpses are floating down the river Aube.

Great floods have occurred in the streams fed by the mountain torrents of the eastern Pyrenees. Many peaceful valleys have been inundated and buildings washed away. At Limoux the floods undermined several buildings which subsequently collapsed. Twenty inmates of these buildings were killed and nine other persons are still buried in the debris. A fine bridge was also destroyed.

TONS OF HAY DESTROYED.

Farmers Lose Heavily by Fires in the Wisconsin River Bottoms.

MADISON, Wis., Oct. 26.—Fires in the Wisconsin river bottoms and those rivers tributary to the Wisconsin have caused heavy losses to the farmers living along the rivers. Curtis Hazeltine, of Mazomanie, who owns about 20,000 acres of marsh lands in Dane, Sauk and Iowa counties, says most all of the hay grown on his land was destroyed by fire. He has leased the marsh in small parcels to farmers, and those placing almost sole dependence for hay on the marsh are in desperate straits and will be obliged to sell their cattle at whatever they will bring in order to avoid their starving. Mr. Hazeltine estimates that 50,000 tons of hay have been destroyed in southern Wisconsin alone. Along the Wolf river and its tributaries marshes have burned out and farmers were unable to rescue their hay which had been stacked in them. In many places the fire is still burning. Stock can be purchased at almost any price along these rivers, tame hay having been a failure on account of the drought. The loss cannot as yet be estimated.

MANY SAILORS LOST.

Little Hope for Three Gloucester (Mass.) Fishing Schooners.

GLOUCESTER, Mass., Oct. 23.—The schooner Percy owned by James S. Ayer, with a crew of twelve men, and the schooner City Point, owned by Cushing & Kenney, of Portland, with crew of fourteen men, sailed on codfishing voyages about August 25, the Percy to the Georges and the City Point to Le Have Banks. Neither has been heard from since, and there is little doubt that they have been lost with all hands. The men are mostly provincials and foreigners by birth, but many of them leave families in New England.

GLOUCESTER, Mass., Oct. 23.—The schooner Albert Woodbury, of Beverly, that sailed the latter part of August for the Cape shore for codfishing, has not returned, and is believed to have been lost with her ten men in the gale of September 6 and 7.

SIX THRASHERS KILLED.

Explosion of a Boiler in a North Dakota Wheat Field.

MAYVILLE, N. D., Oct. 23.—A fatal thrashing accident occurred here Thursday afternoon on Division No. 4 of the big Mayville farm owned by the Grandin brothers. Four men were killed outright and two others so seriously hurt that they died within an hour afterward. The men were killed by the explosion of the boiler, due to the fact, it is claimed, that the engineer had allowed the water to run down too low. The machine had been standing still about two hours while some repairs were being made and the explosion followed within two minutes after the engine started and the pump began pouring cold water into the boiler. Two of the killed were blown nearly to pieces.

Blaine in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—Secretary Blaine arrived here at 3:50 o'clock p. m. Saturday. The exact time of his return was not known publicly until a few minutes before, and only a few spectators were on hand to receive him. Accompanying the secretary were Mrs. Blaine, Private Secretary Dent and Mrs. Walter Damrosch. The secretary looked pretty much as he has looked when feeling well during the last four years.

Gibson Must Be Tried.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Oct. 26.—A special to the News from Terre Haute, Ind., says: Lucy Jewett and Sarah Praeter came here from Paris, Ill., Friday night, stopping at a hotel near the depot. In the morning they were found dead in bed. They had blown out the gas.

Floods in Mexico.

CITY OF MEXICO, Oct. 26.—The floods in the state of Tobasco have increased and are becoming more and more disastrous. Thousands of cattle have been drowned, crops almost entirely destroyed and many lives have been lost.

FLOODS IN EUROPE.

The Worst Storms Known Within the Present Generation.

Many Parts of the Country Entirely Submerged by Swollen Rivers—Residents Along the Thames Driven from Home.

UNDER WATER.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—Politics, both foreign and domestic, give way in the public interest to the extensive floods, never equaled in England within the present generation and far more widespread than the Moray floods of sixty years ago, which, however, destroyed many lives. The floods have come so gradually that nearly every one has had a chance to escape, although vast plains are under water and rivulets have swollen to rivers. The chief anxiety felt is as to whether the waters will altogether retire from some of the regions invaded, especially the lowlands near the sea, large sections of which have been rescued for cultivation by the labor of centuries. Should the floods, which are still rising in many places, not soon subside much suffering will be caused.

In Buckinghamshire, the country in the vicinity of Newport-Pagnell, on the Ouse, is submerged and the inhabitants have been compelled to seek refuge on the upper floors of the houses. The high road, running into Newport-Pagnell is 7 feet under water. A railroad cutting near Christ church undermined by the floods collapsed Friday morning and completely blocked up the railroad lines. The surrounding neighborhood is inundated so that the repairing of the damage is impossible till the subsidence of the floods. The Thames is still rising and is already 5 feet above its normal high water mark. A portion of the royal gardens and the queen's drive at Windsor are flooded.

The flood demolished a pile dam which had been constructed across a 50-foot gap in the embankment of the river Parrett in Somerset. An enormous volume of water poured through the breach thus made, causing widespread damage to the adjacent country and forcing the country people to use boats in passing from village to village.

Many vessels of all kinds are reported as being ashore at different points on the coast. In the county of Somerset 140,000 acres of land has been submerged, while the dikes everywhere have been swept away. The county has assumed the aspect which it presented in the time of Alfred the Great, and the island of Athelney, where the monarch took refuge during the Danish invasion, has again been created. Windsor castle is looming frowningly upon the vast expanse of waters which surround it on all sides. The Thameside houses are being rapidly deserted by their occupants, who are to be seen paddling about in canoes, looking for dry land whereon to place their families and such of their effects as they have been able to save from the devouring floods.

Additional damage to the railways in France by reason of floods is reported. The line was destroyed at several points between St. German des Fosses and Nimes, and some roads are covered with water to a depth of 6 feet. The plains have been converted into lakes and in numberless instances the villagers have had to seek refuge in the churches.

PLEADING FOR EXILES.

More Than 1,000,000 Americans Sign a Petition to the Czar.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—William O. McDowell, of Newark, N. J., elected president of the Humane Freedom league at the meeting October 12, in Philadelphia, will sail for Europe on the 26th, taking with him for presentation to the czar a Siberian exile petition signed by over 1,000,000 American citizens. Mr. McDowell has issued an appeal for contributions which will be invested in this country in wheat, rye, corn and other food supplies and sent by special ships to Europe.

HE GETS A DOLLAR.

Ignatius Donnelly Gains a Barren Victory in His Great Libel Suit.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Oct. 26.—The jury in the libel suit of Ignatius Donnelly against the Pioneer Press for $100,000 damages Saturday night brought in a verdict giving Mr. Donnelly one dollar and allowing him five dollars for counsel fees. The trial has been probably the most famous in legal annals in the northwest, and owing to the prominence of the plaintiff and the matters involved attracted the greatest interest.

Two Freight Trains Badly Wrecked.

MILAN, Tenn., Oct. 23.—Two freight trains going at full speed ran into each other at Bardwell Hill, Tenn., on the Illinois Central. A car of oil exploded, setting fire to the train. Three cars of merchandise were destroyed, the two engines were demolished, the track on both sides of the wreck was burned for 500 feet and the woods for a mile. The loss is estimated at $200,000. One of the engineers was badly hurt.

Exports and Imports.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—The chief of the bureau of statistics in his monthly statement of the imports and exports of the United States reports that the total value of the exports of merchandise during the twelve months ended September 30 was $828,091,136. The value of the imports was $824,715,270.

STARTLING FACTS.

The American people are rapidly becoming a race of nervous wrecks, and the following suggests the best remedy: Alphonso Hempfling, of Butler, Pa., swears that when his son was speechless from St. Vitus dance Dr. Miles' great Restorative Nervine cured him. Mrs. J. R. Miller, of Valparaiso, and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., each gained 20 pounds from taking it. Mrs. H. A. Gardener, of Vistula, Ind., was cured of 40 to 50 convulsions a day, and much headache, dizziness, backache and nervous prostration by one bottle. Trial bottles, and fine book of marvelous cures, free at Baker & Hall's who recommends and guarantees this unequaled remedy.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent;
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO.

THE WIDOW AT THE SPRINGS.

Of all the women in the world, there's one above the rest
Whom I will openly avow I heartily detest;
She's a tiny, coaxing creature, a slight tender vine that clings
Unto all the men—this widow who outwits me at the springs.

She is such a prudent matron—is this shy, sweet foe of mine,
She will say, with orbs uplifted, in a manner most divine,
That she never in her girlhood went to ride with men—oh, no!
Then she'll take a drive by moonlight with my very nicest beau.

She will wonder, too, you haven't grown quite weary of gay life,
"Because at your age," (sweetly) "I had been some years a wife."
Oh, it takes just such a woman to think of the meanest things—
How I hate this little widow who outwits me at the springs!

She has such sweet ways of giving all one's men friends good advice,
About the sort of woman who's particularly nice;
Not a giddy, silly creature, but a woman who's been tried
By the deepest cares and sorrows, and who now would put aside

All the vanities and follies, and would know the way to soothe
Her lord, and make his pathway more prosperous and smooth;
And the reason why I hate her is, in truth, because she brings
All the men to her opinions—does this widow at the springs.

—Maude Andrews, in Puck.

MRS. SHEERS' GHOST.

A Plot Which Was Not Entirely Successful.

Clarity—by the way, she was baptised Clarita, only her mother chose to Yankeefy it—was a very pretty girl. A smart girl, too, and a quick one.

And that is why she was always busy at home or in other people's houses at the trade by which she earned her living, besides dressing herself so prettily that no summer boarder could outdo her. How she got the latest styles out there at Cross Sticks no one could think; but she did it.

No wonder that Will Sheers, who kept the drug store in the village, fell in love with her. It was for her sake that he hired to her mother—a praiseworthy widow, fond of telling the story of her husband's failure to anyone who would listen—a wing of the building in which he kept his store, a snug little affair of three rooms, for which he had no use, being a bachelor.

The rooms directly over the store, which were large and handsome, remained vacant, which led the village to suppose that the young druggist intended to marry shortly.

When Mrs. Munn had moved into the little end wing it was but a step from the store door to the widow's flat doorstep, and Dr. Sheers spent much of his time there, especially in the evening, and people had begun to say that it was a "splendid thing for Clarity" when the two Misses Shepherd came to board with Mrs. Finn, with whom Dr. Sheers boarded.

Mrs. Finn advertised for summer boarders every year, under the hallucination that Cross Sticks was "the country," and she always caught a few victims, who sat on the porch and fanned away the mosquitoes, and took walks to the post office, and went on picnics to the frog pond in the suburbs, and looked at a very distant mountain through field glasses, and were otherwise as rural as possible.

She was older than he. She was sharp of voice and elbows; but she had inherited a fortune from her grandmother, and then, as Mrs. Finn said, "she ran after him, and would hev him whether he would or no."

Meanwhile Clarity went on dressmaking and showed no signs of regretting her truant lover; and when Mrs. Munn proposed giving up the rooms forbade her to do so with the sternness with which daughters do forbid their mothers to carry out their own ideas in this nineteenth century.

"Why, ma, every one would think we felt cut up about it!" said Clarity.

"I do," said Mrs. Munn; "I haven't felt worse since your pa failed."

"I don't care whom he marries, I'm sure," said Clarity. "And this is the cheapest place, to be so pretty, that we can find."

One day from her window she saw the bride and groom return to take possession of their newly-furnished rooms.

For awhile the bride and groom seemed very comfortable. New plate-glass windows were put into the store, and a wonderful soda water fountain was introduced. There was a looking-glass between the rows of boxes and a portiere was hung at the door that opened into the back room. A little carriage in which Mrs. Sheers drove her sister to pay calls on her friends added luster to the establishment.

Suddenly a cloud arose. Mrs. Sheers was ill. There was a consultation. Shortly afterward there was crape on the door. The doctor was a widower.

However, the day after the anniversary of his wife's funeral Dr. Sheers assumed a light hat, had his hair cut and his mustache waxed, put a rose in his buttonhole and called on Clarity Munn. Shortly afterward these two were openly engaged to be married.

And again th[illegible] seemed to be going on well, at leas[illegible] very well, considering," when people began to notice that Clarity was pale, that she was growing thin, that she cried over her work, and at last there was a rumor that she intended to "break" with Dr. Sheers.

"They're talking of it all over Cross Sticks, Clarity," Mrs. Munn said, "and you do look most miserable. What is the matter?"

"It's dreadful," said Clarity. "He's fond of me and I am of him, and you'd be so comfortable. He promises everything, and my heart is broken, but I dare not marry him; oh, I dare not!" and her eyes grew solemn and she looked over her shoulder.

"Why?" gasped the widow.

"She haunts me—his first wife, you know," said Clarity; "and says she'll kill me on my wedding day. Oh, I am not crazy, ma!"

"I'm not afraid of ghosts," said Mrs. Munn. "I thought you had more spirit. Why, before you pa failed I found a burglar in my room robbing my jewel-box, and I collared him. I thought you took after me and had some spirit, Clarity."

"You cannot collar a ghost," sobbed Clarity.

"You can try," said Mrs. Munn. "Now, what I ask of you is to take my folding bed into the parlor to-night and let me sleep in your bed upstairs, and if she that was Mrs. Sheers appears to me I'll make her come to terms."

That night Mrs. Munn in the little upper room put out her lamp, hid a dark-lantern behind the pillow and awaited events.

The clock struck eleven—twelve—and nothing happened. At 12:15 a curious noise was heard under the bed.

A groan followed—a voice, and it sounded very like Mrs. Sheers' voice, whispered: "Clarity Munn, you shall not have my husband!"

For a moment Mrs. Munn felt faint. It was all true, then!

Indeed, it was far, far worse than seeing a burglar, even to hear that voice! And now—now! Yes! Slowly, solemnly arose from behind the footboard a figure all in white. Mrs. Munn covered her head with the quilt.

"You are right to quail before me," said a voice. "I claim my husband for my own. Marry him, and you die!"

It was the voice of Mrs. Sheers, it seemed to the old lady. She had always disliked it. Now it irritated her and helped her to be brave. Making one great effort, she sprang to her feet and faced the ghost.

The ghost retired. Mrs. Munn followed. It struck her that she had frightened the spirit more than it had frightened her. This encouraged her. And, stretching out her hand, she grabbed the ghost by the collar, as she had the burglar. Her face was close to its pallid face now, and her blood curdled in her veins as she fancied that she recognized the sharp nose, small mouth and flat forehead of the late Mrs. Sheers amid the folds of the ghostly headdress. But the thing did not vanish. It was quite substantial.

"I believe I've materialized you," said Mrs. Munn as she crowded the ghost in the corner and reached for the dark-lantern, which she had hidden under her pillow, and opened the slide. In a moment more she had pulled away the white wrappings and stood over a sharp-featured young woman in a heliotrope-colored gown, who crouched and shivered in the corner—Miss Selina Shepherd, whose resemblance to her sister vanished when one saw her red hair, for Mrs. Sheers' hair had been black, either by nature or by art. Opinions varied as to that.

"So it is you," said Mrs. Munn—"you that have been frightening my Clarity out of marrying your sister's widower? I suppose she'd have gone on thinking you a ghost forever. But you've got me to deal with now. How did you get in?"

"Oh, Mrs. Munn, have mercy!" Selina moaned. "Sister left everything to him, and I'm to be turned out of house and home. It was just life and death to me that he shouldn't marry."

"You didn't want him yourself, then?" asked Mrs. Munn.

"No," said Selina; "no more than he wants me. I meant to keep house and be his sister; and I don't know how to earn my living. Now he'll be furious and he'll hate me."

"Miss Selina," said Mrs. Munn, "how did you get in here?"

"A trap door in the corner opens on a pair of stairs to the drug store. This used to be a storeroom," sobbed Selina. "It bolts on the other side."

"I'll see it is nailed up," said Mrs. Munn. "Now we may come to terms. I'll tell Clarity, but neither of us will tell the doctor or anybody else. Stop haunting and be friendly and Clarity won't let the doctor send you away. Seeing he's got your sister's money, that will be but fair. Only, the minute Clarity is tormented I tell my story."

"Agreed," she said. "Women who have had hard times ought to feel for each other."

Having lighted the ghost down the ladder and thrown her white vestments after her, Mrs. Munn put a trunk over the trap door and retired to dream of weddings.

After Clarity married Dr. Sheers people used to say how wonderful it was that Miss Selina received her brother-in-law's second wife so pleasantly, and how curious it was that she was so friendly with Mrs. Munn.—Fireside Companion.

Jails for the Pupils.

In some of the schools of Chili when a boy becomes boisterous he is sent to jail, and for this purpose there are miniature prisons. They are dark vaults, each just large enough for a person to stand in, where the student is locked and left to meditate. After remaining six hours in one position he is generally tractable; if not, he is left until he is. A large corner room is fitted up as a chapel, with numerous shrines, confessionals, images, etc. There is also a theater, with elevated stage, movable scenes, footlights and green-room. As coeducation is not permitted, and if a young lady should associate on the stage with the other sex she would be disgraced for life, the boys are compelled to don petticoats whenever the exigencies of the drama require. And great fun they seem to consider it.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

The free banquet given by the temperance people at the town hall last Friday formed a most fitting close to a very successful two weeks' work. Mr. Woodford and his co-workers in the cause did an immense amount of good, about 450 people signing the pledge. Tables were spread in the basement of the hall to accommodate over a hundred at a time, and the seats were refilled four or five times. Everyone present voted it one of the most pleasant socials ever given.

REMOVE THE CAUSE.—It is no doubt the correct thing to treat the symptoms of a disease, but this is not effective unless the cause of the complaint is removed. For instance, a fever may be treated with quinine, etc., but unless the cause is removed the fever will surely return. Again, the sores and eruptions of scrofula may be healed by mercury and potash treatment, but unless the cause of these symptoms is cleansed from the system they will return or attack some of the delicate internal organs. Swift's Specific strikes at the cause of the trouble, and forces out the germs of disease and the poison through the pores of the skin, and at the same time builds up the general health of the sufferer. Swift's Specific is a purely vegetable remedy, and is harmless to the most delicate, yet it never fails to eliminate the poison from the human body. We will mail a valuable book to all who will send for it.

Cheap Farming Lands.

Do you want to buy or rent a farm? If so, southern Nebraska and northern Kansas offer you great inducements. Yield per acre this year: wheat 15 to 30 bushels, oats 40 to 75 bu., rye 25 to 45 bu., corn will yield 45 to 75 bu. Taxes are low, climate fine, plenty of timber and good water. Good markets, land cheap and terms of payment favorable. All inquiries answered promptly. Come via "Burlington Route" and you will be met at station and shown the country whether you buy or not.

When the fast mail train pulled into Hudson depot yesterday, a tramp jumped off. As the train started the fellow made a dive for the trucks, caught hold of a rod, and was dragged some distance. Had he let go he would have been mangled. Section men saw his plight, signaled the train to stop, and the man's life was saved—Hudson Post.

Rev. Frank Arnold, of Tecumseh, not being satisfied with the progress he was making in converting the obdurate souls there, notably the Fields and Stacys, recently offered his resignation, which, it is understood, will be laid on the table indefinitely. The congregation feel that the pastor is the right man in the right place. Mr. Arnold should remember that it takes a good deal of hammering to split a rock, and hammer away.—Adrian Press.

Ex-Supervisor W. R. Hill, of Palmyra, has returned from a stay of several weeks at Dwight, Ill. Mr. Hill is one of the brightest and best business men of his township, a genial neighbor and a good citizen, whose life of late years has been clouded with the curse of alcoholism. He returns cured and there is not a man in the sphere of his wide acquaintance who will not rejoice with him and for him.—Adrian Press.

At the meeting of the Central Prison Board Monday evening at the Industrial Home in this city, it was the unanimous opinion that the law did not provide for the office of general manager and that its creation by the board which preceeded them illegal. The office has been dropped and Mrs. Sickels given absolute executive control. This knocks Willard Stearns out of the ring and the position of manager at the same time.—The Messenger.

A stock company with a capital of $100,000 has been formed to place a paper exhibit at the Columbian Exposition. Every American paper maker or American manufacture of paper-making machinery will be allowed to take stock. The entire capital has already been secured, but the pledges will not be called for until the outsiders have been given a chance, in order to do away with any idea of a money-making scheme. A committee of five has been appointed by President M. J. Fitch to take the matter in hand and to send a representative to the meeting of the Boston Paper Trade Club on the third Wednesday in November.

Last evening there was a gathering in Dundee of Royal and Select Masons, at masonic hall, for the purpose of conferring the council degrees upon 15 candidates. There were in attendance: D. Woodward, E. VanDeMark, C. S. Burroughs, P. Kishpaugh, and Mr. Keyes, of Clinton; J. P. Blair, of Detroit; Jay A. Santus of Ridgeway; S. Underwood, of Britton; and from Monroe—Hal E. Stevens, A. Vivian, Frank Nelson, A. C. Pitcher, H. Shaw Noble, S. Meyerfeld, W. Baldwin, A. E. Dunbar, Jr., A. A. Bragdon, Geo. Huber. It is expected that a council will be located in Dundee. After the work was performed a banquet was served at the National hotel.—Dundee Reporter.

Under the last apportionment Lenawee County is only entitled to two representatives. The Board of Supervisors last week established the two districts. It was quite a task to get contiguous territory and maintain districts of equal population, but both parties labored under the same difficulty in this regard. The diference in population, in a county of nearly 50,000 people, is less than 300. One district is pretty safely Democratic and the other very surely Republican. The first district is as follows: Woodstock, Cambridge, Clinton, Franklin, Adrian, Macon, Ridgeway, Tecumseh, City of Adrian, Raisin and Deerfield. The second district comprises Rollin, Rome, Seneca, Medina, Hudson, Madison, Fairfield, Ogden, Riga, Palmyra and Blissfield, Dover.

Scribner's Magazine for November contains several notable illustrated articles on countries that are little known to American readers—including the first of several papers by Carl Lumholtz (the author of "Among Cannibals") on his explorations in the Sierra Madre. His expedition is conducted under the auspices of the American Museum of Natural History of New York, and the American Geographical Society, and the results will first appear in Scribner's Magazine. There is also a striking paper by Napoleon Ney, the grandson of the great Marshal of France, on the proposed Trans-Saharian Railway, which the French Government have approved. M. Ney was a member of the Government commission, and is fully qualified to write on the subject.

TAKE NOTICE.

After Oct. 19 the Post Office will be closed at 7:30 p. m., except Saturday. This is standard time.

Over herd—The shepherd.

Praised by Sir Henry Wood.

Sir Henry Wood and James Dredge, the British Commissioners, who recently visited Chicago to inform themselves concerning the World's Fair, have returned to London, and are outspoken in their praise of the condition and prospects of the Exposition. The cable reports Sir Henry Wood as saying:

"From what I saw and heard, I think the Exposition will be a success. When I arrived in America, I was undecided as to whether New York or Chicago was better adapted for the Fair. Now I think Chicago is decidedly the best place for it. Chicago is sure to put a vigor and concentration of purpose into the enterprise which were hardly to be expected from the Empire city. Wherever I went in the United States I found the keenest interest in the Fair. The people of Chicago are fairly alive with it. There was a slight tinge of jealously in New York which made some of her people pretend to disparage Chicago in the matter, but this is sure to evaporate before long. The arrangements made at Chicago are admirable. The plans of the buildings are good and give ample room. There is one disadvantage. The site for the Exposition is five or six miles from the centre of the city. This is hardly worth mentioning since the location is so beautiful and the collective facilities are so ample. Mr. Dredge and myself are preparing our report, which, I may say, will be very favorable and I do not doubt will have the effect of making the English section a success. The German Commissioner is also pleased with the aspect of affairs, like ourselves. We were treated with the greatest kindness, and every courtesy was extended to us in the cities which we visited."

Blind Boone gave one of his grand concerts at Duncan's Opera House last night. It was a grand success. All who heard him pronouuced him grand, and should he appear in our city again the opera house will not be able to accommodate the people.—Dubuque Times.

The attendance was quite large at the social held at the home of Mrs. Ella Waring Friday evening. The exercises passed off very nicely and a pleasant evening was spent by those present. The collection amounted to $2.92.

There was a good attendance Sunday evening to hear thetemperance sermon given by the pastor, Rev. E. Yager. It was one of the best talks ever given in the church on the subject of temperance, no party influence being held up before the hearer, but a heartfelt plea for humanity's redemption from the curse of the rum power. Undeniable figures and facts were given to convince those present of the influence of the saloon over the American home. We believe no person who professes to be a Christian will for a moment criticise one word of the pastor's discourse, but will heartily and willingly lend every influence to annihilate the greatest evil of our land.

RAISIN VALLEY SEMINARY.

(Delayed Letter.)

The old, yet ever new game of "Pig in the Parlor," and other like sociable games, are commencing once more.

The literary society is beginning to make preparations for a grand final entertainment at the ead of the term.

Quite a number of Seminary officers and students took tea at Benjamin Steere's last Saturday evening. A pleasant time was reported.

Hermann Hill and Mattie Wilson, students of this place, and Chauncey Graves, of the class of '91, spent Sunday at the home of Kate Mosher, near Onsted.

The literary society enjoyed a great boom last Friday evening, in the shape of twelve new members, and the prospect is better than it has been for some time for a wide-awake literary society.

The events of last week at this place were completed by a base ball game between the Seminary boys and the Dibble nine. Of course the Seminary boys beat. The score stood 19 to 9 and the Seminary had another bat, but owing to the lateness of the day they did not play it out.

A crazy tramp has been going the rounds for several weeks, chasing children, scaring women and breaking into school-houses, and is becoming quite a nuisance. The authorities should restrain him before some damage is done.

A lead pencil will ground a telegraph wire, even if the grounds are plugged up, and if the point of the pencil breaks off it will remain grounded. They tried it at Geo. Sisson's last week, where it was grounded several days, requiring the skill of the manager to detect it. The old party papers are dishing out taffy to farmers in great shape over bountiful crops and high prices. Let's see: Potatoes are worth 25c., corn and oats about the same and a light crop, wool 25c., hogs $3.25; other stock low, and wheat 90c.—barely living rates, or about one-third of war prices—while official salaries, government expenses, public and tariff taxation and millionaire incomes are way above war prices. Diseases which afflict mankind are due to disorders of the blood. In fact, if the vital fluid is kept in good condition, the tendency to any disease is lessened by three-fourths. A harmless vegetable remedy, which cleanses the blood, should be taken occasionally by every one. In the young, it assists in the development of the body and mind. In the adult, it helps nature to keep up the equilibrium of strength, which is taxed by the labor and cares of life. To the old and those with the infirmities of age, it is invaluable for its tonic and strengthening powers, to prevent diseases which are so often fatal to old people. This remedy is Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) It clears out all the germs and poison, and builds up the human organism. We will mail free a valuable book to all applicants.

I feel it my duty to say a few words in regard to Ely's Cream Balm, and I do so entirely without solicitation. I have used it more or less half a year, and have found it to be most admirable. I have suffered from catarrh of the worst kind ever since I was a little boy, and I never hoped for cure, but Cream Balm seems to do even that. Many of my acquaintances have used it with excellent results.--Oscar Ostrum, 45 Warren Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MACON MUSIC.

Mrs. John Day is quite sick.

Orange blossoms in full bloom Wednesday night.

All remember the Major Hendershot entertainment Saturday night of this week.

The city looked Sunday morning as though we had had a cyclone. Gates were torn off their hinges, old stoves piled up on stoops, the postoffice sign was set up at the M. E. Church, horse blocks were carried away, and, to cap the climax, it blew a newly married couple out of the house, where they complied with the wishes of the Halloween boys, and all was quiet again.

Gov. Campbell made over one hundred speeches in the recent campaign, and every speech helped him in the public esteem.

If people have become so stirred up over a few state elections in 1891, what will the outcome be in the Presidential contest of next year?

The Alliance is gathering in the New Jersey farmers. A sufficient number of County alliances has been formed to warrant the establishment of a State alliance.

The reason why the rain makers do not always succeed is manifest at last. They are sometimes compelled to postpone their program on account of the weather.

If a small dose of free trade occasionally in the shape of reciprocity is a good thing, why not give the people the same tonic as a regular diet? A great many people would like to know the reason why.

Before this page reaches our readers, the state elections will have been decided. As we are neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet we refrain from expressing any opinion on the result until the returns are in Whether Gov. Campbell shall be reelected or not, he has certainly deserved success, for he has conducted the most brilliant state canvass ever waged in Ohio. The Governor has a political future before him; mark the prophecy.

"This is no political headquarters," said an official at the Farmers Alliance headquarters, when asked for political news from Ohio. "Whatever action individual members of the organization may take the National Alliance has not yet gone into politics."

An exchange says: "The dog census of New York has been completed and the papers tell us that, as it was entirely free from political bias, it was honest and satisfactory. It is hard to believe that even a dog census could be conducted in that city without any politics in it.

Mr. Cleveland has answered his own question: What shall we do with our ex-presidents? He is taking a more healthy interest in the cause of good government, and doing more to serve his country by serving the party which he believes has the interests of the country most at heart, than any ex-President since John Quincy Adams.—Chicago Times.

This is the way a personal friend, who is a frequent and welcome social visitor at the White House, speaks of Mr. Harrison: "The President does not give any one an intimation in advance of his intentions in regard to appointments. I do not believe, and I have good reasons for saying it, that he even takes the members of his Cabinet into his confidence. He is one of the most non-committal men I ever saw."

The outbreak of the Tennessee miners against convict labor, which has been anticipated, has come at last. The situation is stated in a few words by the St. Louis Republic: "The reports from Tennessee indicate that there will soon be more actual war in the mountains there than there is likely to be anywhere else this year. And the shame and the pity of it is that Tennesseeans will kill Tennesseeans in upholding, in the interest of corporations controlled outside of the State, a law which every Tennesseean knows to be infamous.

Colonel George B. McClellan grows more like his distinguished father in appearance and manner every day, says the New York Recorder. He is one of the best-liked young men in New York in spite of his modest and retiring ways, which limit the circle of his acquaintances. His friends admire him most for the grit he showed immediately after his father's death. The General left only a small property, and young George immediately signed his share of it over to his mother, came to New York and went to work as a reporter. He did well as a newspaper man, and is now doing better as treasurer of the Brooklyn Bridge and is a very happy benedict.

WHO PAYS THE TARIFF?

The Lessons Taught By the Duties on Window Glass—Complete Refutation of the Assertion of Secretary of the Treasury Foster That the Foreigner Pays the Tariff Tax.

The other day the secretary of the treasury, Foster, made a speech at Findlay, Ohio, in which he asserted that the tariff is not a tax and that the foreigners pay the duties on goods sent to this country. The secretary said: "I do not know of a more fallacious proposition than the one contended for by all democrats, from Grover Cleveland to Jerry Simpson, that the tariff is a tax and that the consumer pays the tax. Of course, I know that the proposition seems to be logical, and in the light of the experience of this country the proposition has been proven to be untrue. If the democratic idea of a tariff is to tax articles imported into this country but not produced here, is to prevail then the tariff is a tax. This fact is abundantly illustrated by the effect of the McKinley bill in admitting sugar free of duty. The price of sugar has fallen the amount of the tax. But when you apply the protective principle—namely, to place a duty upon articles we produce in this country—such results do not follow."

Secretary Foster is a large stockholder in several window glass factories in Ohio, and took active part in the formation of the window glass trust. The protective principle about which he speaks has been applied to window glass since 1816. We produce window glass in this country to-day, but the trust so controls and limits production that we still have to import 30 per cent. of the window glass we consume each year. Window glass satisfies the conditions which he says compels foreigners to pay the tariff tax. No article is more highly protected than window glass, as the following figures show. The figures are for the imports in 1890.

Sizes	McKinley Duty: Specific, per lb.	McKinley Duty: Ad valorem equivalent, per cent	Ad valorem equivalent
Not above 10x15 square inches	1⅝c	68
10x15 to 16x24 square inches	1⅞c	115
16x24 to 24x30 square inches	2⅜c	129
24x30 to 24x36 square inches	2¾c	152
Above 24x36 square inches	3½c	90

In spite of these enormous duties, we still import 30 per cent. of the window glass we consume. The reason why we continue to do so is because the glass trust, of which Secretary Foster is a member, finds that it can make more money by producing a small amount of glass and selling it at high prices than it could were it to make all the glass we need for home consumption.

But Secretary Foster says that the foreign manufacturer pays the duty and that the home consumer does not. How absurd this is is shown by the cost of the foreign window glass imported in 1890 and the amount of duties levied. In 1890 we imported $1,402,796 worth of window glass on which $1,538,228 were paid in duties. Nearly all of this glass came from Belgium. Does Secretary Foster mean, when he says that the foreigner pays the tariff tax, that the Belgians presented us with $1,402,796 of window glass and gave us $135,432 besides for taking it as a gift? Now these figures were made up in the bureau of statistics under Secretary Foster's charge. Either they must be erroneous or else the secretary has told his Ohio friends something which he knows to be false, for the Belgians are not more generous than are other nations.

How the window glass trust takes advantage of the tariff to charge consumers all the bonus it allows is shown in the following table which gives the present wholesale price in Belgium, from which all our imports come, and the prices charged by Secretary Foster and his associates in the window glass trust for carload lots. The figures are the net prices for second quality single thick glass. These prices are absolutely correct. The third and fourth columns in the table show the amount which the American price exceeds the foreign and the duties charged on the foreign glass when imported.

Sizes in square inches.	United States price per box.	Belgian price per box.	United States higher per box.	Duties per box.
16x24 to 24x30	$7 14	$5 10	$2 04	$0 71½
24x30 to 24x36	8 16	6 12	2 04	0 71½
24x36 to 24x40	9 18	6 12	3 06	0 71½
24x40 to 24x50	10 20	7 14	3 06	0 71½
24x50 to 24x60	12 24	8 16	4 08	0 71½
24x60 to 24x70	14 28	9 18	4 10	0 71½
24x70 to 24x80	16 32	10 20	5 12	0 71½
24x80 to 24x90	18 36	11 22	6 14	0 71½
24x90 to 24x100	20 40	12 24	7 16	0 71½
24x100 to 24x110	22 44	13 26	8 18	0 71½
24x110 to 24x120	24 48	14 28	9 20	0 71½
Above 24x120	26 52	15 30	11 22	0 71½

Nine boxes of the above sizes of glass can and are bought in Belgium for $15.31. When imported $12.15 must be paid in duties. Freight and insurance amount to about $1.80, making the total cost laid down here, duty paid, $29.26. The glass trust charges exactly $29.06¾ for the same amount of glass. Secretary Foster knows that these figures are true. What then becomes of his assertion that the foreigner pays the tax? He characterized the proposition of Mr. Grover Cleveland that the consumer pays the tariff tax as "the most fallacious proposition of which he has any knowledge." Are not the above figures a complete refutation of Secretary Foster's assertion, and do they not establish the soundness of Grover Cleveland's proposition? Secretary Foster cannot complain of this proof. The figures are not drawn from obscure sources. The industry chosen for illustration is not an obscure one. It is of all industies the one with which he is most familiar. Why did not Secretary Foster prove his proposition of illustrations drawn from the prices of window glass! Simply because such figures would show its fallacious character.

England formerly imposed an internal tax upon house windows, and every part of the receipts went into the national exchequer. To-day, under the McKinley tariff, we, in effect, impose a similar tax but how differently do we dispose of the receipts. Under our system the treasury gets one-third of the tax, and the window glass trust and Secretary Foster get the other two-thirds. This is the system of taxation which the late Justice Miller, of the United States supreme court, in the celebrated Topeka case characterized as robbery, as follows:

"To lay with one hand the power of the government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes, is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation."

SOCKS FOR MR. M'KINLEY.

His Tariff Leads an Irish Lad to Make Him a Present.

Samuel D. Frew came to this country from Belfast, North Ireland, six years ago. He liked the American climate and the American people, but he could not endure American stockings. He longed for the comfortable, home-knit hosiery of old Ireland. And so finally he wrote to his mother in Ireland to send him some stockings. She was glad to please her boy and so she knitted six pairs of Irish stockings and sent them to her son.

But she didn't write about them, for she wanted them to be a surprise, and the first young Frew knew of the matter was when a bulky document arrived from the custom house. It was as follows:

Samuel D. Frew to the Morris European & American Express Co., custom house brokers and forwarding agents, Dr.:

To specific duty on one pound manufactured wool at 49½ cents	$ .50
To ad valorem duty on articles valued at $2, at 60 per cent	1.20
Reimbursements, charges and freight	.50
United States bonded storage and labor	.21
Cartage, shipping or delivery	.25
Postage, etc.	.05
Custom house entries, etc.	.50
Total	$3.21

When Frew looked at the bill he thought the custom house was at fault, so he went home and hunted up a tariff book and figured out just what the tariff ought to be. Here is the way he made it:

Ad valorem duty on articles valued at $2, at 40 per cent	$ .80
Specific duty on one pound manufactured wool at 35 cents	.35
Total	$1.15

Frew went back to the express office indignant at the thought of being so imposed upon and handed the clerk the bill as he made it out. The clerk looked at it and laughed. "Oh, that was under the old tariff bill," said he. "This other bill is made out according to Mr. McKinley's new tariff laws."

"You won't accept my bill, then?" said Frew.

"No," answered the official.

Frew thought for a moment. Then he called the clerk aside and whispered confidently.

"You tell that d—d McKinley that he can have my stockings."

The stockings are still at the custom house, and after the expiration of the required time they will be sold at public auction same as the Astor dresses were.—N. Y. World.

The Piano Manufacturers.

Mr. Alfred Dolge took occasion in a recent issue of the New York World to say that the McKinley tariff had increased the cost of making a piano only twenty-five cents. Mr. Dolge is a dealer in piano supplies and the only manufacturer of piano hammer felt in this country, and probably knows the facts; but it is a little puzzling to ordinary business minds to know just how he makes his estimates. Some of the piano manufacturers are not a little surprised that anyone should make such statements. They say: "Nearly everything that goes into a piano costs more. Tuning pins have gone up 80 cents per 1,000, or 20 cents a piano; piano wire, 20 cents a pound, and it takes one pound to each treble; keys cost $1 more per set; imported felts, 30 cents more per pound, or 28 cents for each piano. These are but a few of the items which cost the manufacturer more because the duty was greatly increased on them, consequently the piano business has not been as dull in fifteen years as it has been this spring and summer. Nearly all factories are on half time, when they ought to be filling fall orders. Firms that usually make forty pianos a week are only making eight or ten now."

Buying Out Competitors.

Some years ago a prominent American manufacturer of screws made a contract with Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, of Manchester, England, to pay him the sum of $30,000 for keeping out of the American market. High prices in the protected home market were so important to this American firm that they were willing to pay hard cash to have this protection's precious market all to themselves.

This odd freak of protectionism has just been repeated in Germany. In that country there is a duty of $6.10 a ton on steel rails, and the manufacturers have a trust which keeps up prices quite after the American fashion. But one thing disturbed the high tariff antics of the German rail trust. It was Belgian competition. But now peace reigns; the trust has paid the Belgian rail makers $30,000 to keep out of Germany.

Protection manufacturers are a queer lot, always so miserably poor, always about to be ruined by foreign competition, and yet they can go deep into their pockets to buy off rivals.

—The great plate glass factory at Irwin, Pa., with a capital of $1,000,000, has recently turned out its first protected glass. It is announced that its output will be 1,250,000 feet per annum. This quantity, at the average prices for American plate glass, will bring the company $937,000, while the same glass bought in Europe and laid down in New York, without the duty, can be had for $412,000. Great is protection for American industry.

How Labor is Protected.

Congressman McMillan is doing some very good talking in Massachusetts. He takes figures from the tenth census because those involved in his comparisons are not yet tabulated for the eleventh, and illustrates how the tariff is solely for the benefit of labor! He quotes from Republican statistics: The estimated worth of the products of the United Sates were $63,000,000,000; the labor was 6,000,000,000; labor percentage 2 1-2 per cent of the whole cost. To protect this 2 1-2 per cent. of labor a tax of 60 per cent is levied. What becomes of the difference? What need of this extravagant surplus? Who gets the loaf while labor gets the crumbs? A strong illustration under this head is the wool hats industry. In 1880 there were produced in the United States $8,510,000 worth of wool hats, the labor cost on which was $1,893,000. The McKinley law raised the tariff from 18 to 111 per per cent. Simply the increase was nearly as much again as the cost of labor. Following up these ratios: on a class of manufactured worsteds there is a tax of $103 on every $100 worth of goods to protect $16 worth of labor! Except the republican figures are all and entirely wrong, there is no gainsaying these conclusions. The deductions from them are logical and according to correct arithmetical calculation. Was ever a greater robbery perpetrated in the name of "benefit to labor?"—Toledo Bee.

The Ladies' Home Journal.

Decked in a new and unusually artistic Thanksgiving cover, the November Ladies' Home Journal comes as the first reminder that the holidays are approaching. Everything about this issue of the Journal seems of the best, and a higher standard has never been reached in any previous number. Whether one reads Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher's second reminiscent paper of "Mr. Beecher as I Knew Him," or listens to Delmonico, the great caterer, as he tells how to set a table and arrange a dinner; or to Russel Sage, the New York financier, as he discribes, for mothers, "The Boy That Is Wanted" in business to day—each feature is as good as the next. A whole page most timely illustrates "A Group of Pretty Dolls," and tells how to make them; "New Ideas For Church Sociables" will interest thousands of church women; Max O'Rell's wife is sketched in the capital series of "Unknown Wives of Well-Known Men," while Rachel Sherman, opens the new series of "Clever Daughters of Clever Men"; Palmer Cox's "Brownies" are irresistible in their fun; Ella Wheeler Wilcox tells of "Mistakes We Make With Men"; Dr. Talmage has a whole page on Thanksgiving, and, likewise has Maria Parloa; "Miss French of the State Department," is an excellent story by Mary Bradley, as is also another short story called, "The Flowing Shoestring." In fact, there is no end to the good things in this, by far the best, number of the Journal ever made. Ten cents is the price of this number, or $1.00 a year the subscription price. GOOD FORTUNE OF A LAND BROKER.

In Feb. 1889 I commenced to use Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters for inflammatory rheumatism from which I had suffered for three years. My joints were swollen so that I could hardly walk, but three bottles of the Syrup, and the Plasters applied to my limbs, have cured me. C. R. Nicholson, Manson, Iowa.

Dyspepsia

Few people have suffered more severely from dyspepsia than Mr. E. A. McMahon, a well known grocer of Staunton, Va. He says: "Before 1878 I was in excellent health, weighing over 200 pounds. In that year an ailment developed into acute dyspepsia, and soon I was reduced to 162 pounds, suffering burning sensations in the stomach, palpitation of the heart, nausea, and indigestion. I could not sleep, lost all heart in my work, had fits of melancholia, and for days at a time I would have welcomed death. I became morose, sullen and irritable, and for eight years life was a burden. I tried many physicians and many remedies. One day a workman employed by me suggested that I take Hood's Sarsaparilla, as it had cured his wife of dyspepsia. I did so, and before taking the whole of a bottle I began to feel like a new man. The terrible pains to which I had been subjected, ceased, the palpitation of the heart subsided, my stomach became easier, nausea disappeared, and my entire system began to tone up. With returning strength came activity of mind and body. Before the fifth bottle was taken I had regained my former weight and natural condition. I am today well and I ascribe it to taking Hood's Sarsaparilla."

ALFRED JAMES,

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

SOCIALISM AND THE SINGLE TAX.

In his well-tempered criticism, published this week among Letters to the Editor, Wm. M. Chancellor of Pratt Institute, questions The Standard's policy of calling socialism the antipodes of the single tax. This is not a sound objection. The two are diametrically opposed, and every attempt to identify them makes an occasion for clearly and emphatically restating this truth. And so far from being in any wise harmful or impolitic, this is beneficial. It tends to remove prejudice against the single tax from the minds of men to whom socialism—not "socialism" the epithet, but socialism itself—is repugnant; and it is to such men that single tax must appeal for support. They are its natural allies; socialists are its natural enemies.

The single tax movement does not want the support of socialists, as such. This is said deliberately, but in no unfriendly spirit. However worthy of respect they may personally be, they can be regarded in the great conflict upon which society is about to enter—indeed, has already entered—only as adversaries. The single tax and socialism, like free trade and protection, or democracy and paternalism, are irrevocably at war; if they were enemies in nothing else, they would be in the fact that socialism aims to abolish competition, while of the single tax competition is the corner stone. It is one of the most important conditions of warfare, a condition that applies as well to this bloodless conflict as to the sanguinary struggles of armed legions, that each side shall distinguish its friends from its foes; and this we do for our side when we differentiate socialism from the single tax. If socialists take personal offense, we deplore their morbid sensitiveness. If, acknowledging the distinction, they retire within their own lines and seek association with other paternal sects, we recognize their candor and respect their powers of intelligent discrimination. And if, believing as some of them do—our correspondent for example—that the single tax is a step in the direction of socialism, they give us the benefit of their influence and voting strength, as we give ours under similar circumstances to the free trade wing of the democratic party, we are glad to acknowledge their conduct as proof of their sincerity. But if, professing to believe that the single tax is a step toward socialism, they oppose us because we deny it, how can they be regarded otherwise than as pretenders? Either their fealty to socialism, or their notion that the single tax leads to it, or both, must be but a pretense, if they are changed from friends to enemies by such petty pride of opinion.

Mr. Chancellor's conception of democracy, if he expresses himself correctly, is curiously distorted. It is not the "essential purpose of democracy" to "level inequalities in men's positions by the accident of birth." It would, however, level the inequalities that arise from special privileges conferred by law; and since these privileges are often inherited, our correspondent, by an ellipsis of thought similar to that which causes him to confound the single tax with socialism, may have nothing but special privileges in mind when he speaks of "the accidents of birth." But if, as his language implies, he includes inherited wealth earned by the ancestor; if he includes superior mental or physical qualities, by means of which their possessor, by production and not by plunder, raises himself above the less fortunate; if he means that it is the essential purpose of democracy to do more than to secure equal natural rights to all, with special privileges to none, he mistakes the essential purpose of democracy.

If society were a producer, we should agree that "individual ownership of legal power to take increments produced by society is at variance" with the essential purpose of democracy. But society produces nothing. The contrary notion constitutes the fallacy of all that class who, like Mr. Chancellor, identify the single tax with socialism. They regard society as a distinct producer—producing by means of land, producing by means of machinery; and its product as something over and above what the individual produces. To this class, believing in the single tax because they "believe first of all in socialism," the single tax appears to be a plan for giving back to society what society produces by means of land. It draws the line at machinery; but, as Mr. Chancellor says, "it is socialistic in its result." In other words, it is socialism as far as it goes.

But when the law of rent is comprehended, this fallacy stands exposed. Though society does not produce, either by means of machinery or of land, there is in the aggregate of individual production what Mr. Chancellor calls an "increment" that justly belongs to none of the producers individually, but does belong to them all in common. It is called economic rent. But economic rent is not a product over and above the produce of individuals. It is not produced by society, but by individuals. And if it does not in justice belong to the individual who produces it, that is because his producing site is more advantageous than the sites to which his equals, on account of the scarcity of sites like his, are forced to go. He is in justice bound to compensate them for this advantage, which he enjoys, and of which, though their right is equal to his, they are deprived.

If with given labor applied to two different acres of land, fifty bushels of corn are produced from the first and only forty from the other, the owner of the first has an advantage which does not justly belong to him, and which he should be compelled to equalize by paying the difference of ten bushels into a common fund. But he, and not society, is the producer of that ten bushels. The taking of it for public use is not giving "back to society what it produces;" it is compensating some members of society for the necessity of assigning them to the poorer sites, such compensation being made by the members who secure better sites, and in proportion to their advantage in this respect. It is a mode of equalizing common rights, adapted to a civilization in which possession in common is impossible.

There is nothing in this to suggest any analogy with the idea of common ownership of machinery. Whatever advantages a man may acquire merely by his ownership of machinery are justly his. He takes nothing from others, as he does when his advantages are, directly or indirectly, due to the private ownership of natural resources; and there are no common rights to be equalized, as in the case of land.

The communication of Evacustes A. Phipson, published along with that of Mr. Chancellor, illustrates the absurdity of confusing the single tax with socialism. Even Mr. Chancellor will be apt to smile when he reads it. It is due to Mr. Phipson, however, to remind the reader that he writes from England, where socialism, thanks to the activity of its advocates, has "made propaganda" in the land restoration bodies, after the manner in which it operates upon trade unions, both there and here; and where the single tax, as that term is understood in this country, has but slight organized support, except from the financial reform association, a body of free traders. When he writes of the single tax, therefore, he may really refer not to the single tax, but to the socialistic programme of substituting the government as a landlord in place of private landlords, and making everybody a tenant whether or no. Of the essential principle of the single tax, that there shall be no landowners, neither the state nor individuals, and that land shall fall into two classes, occupied or private, and unoccupied or common, Mr. Phipson evidently has no conception.

The conditions in England, where the tories are taxing Englishmen to buy out Irish landlords for the benefit of Irish tenants, regardless of the sufferings of Irish peasants that are not tenants, may rationally account for Mr. Phipson's idea that the buying out of landowners, with full compensation, payable in a bond that is ultimately to lose its interest-paying quality, is a plan that would come at once within the domain of practical politics; but to Americans it will read like the craziest kind of political small talk.

But the most significant of Mr. Phipson's ill-considered criticisms is his assumption that capital as well as land can be taxed to the point of extinction of value. Land may be so taxed as to extinguish its value, but not to extinguish the land; and, conversely, it is supposable that capital may be so taxed as to extinguish it, but not to extinguish its value so long as the capital itself exists. As it is obvious that Mr. Phipson does not contemplate the extinction of the value of capital by extinguishing capital, his consideration of land and capital in this manner proves his incapacity for the criticism he undertakes. It is this ignorant and heedless disregard of elementary truths—so simple that they need but to be mentioned to be accepted—that makes discussion with most socialists exasperating and profitless. It is like discussing problems in long division with a boy who has no appreciation of the value of numbers.—The Standard.

The Sensible Way.

An evening contemporary which dates from the days of the megatherium plumes itself upon its unsuccessful efforts in a former generation to have the pueblo lands of San Francisco divided among the people instead of allowing them to be gobbled up by squatters. Perhaps it would have been better luck in this laudable enterprise if it had proposed a sensible method of giving the public the benefit of the land, instead of the absurd scheme of allowing every resident to take possession of a lot. It is hardly surprising that people generally did not appreciate the wisdom of a division by which one person would get a lot that would soon be worth $100,000, while others would be put off with tracts that would not sell for $200 in fifty years, and late comers would get none at all. If the lands had been held by the city and rented out for the general benefit, as the new seawall lots are to be, the whole community to the remotest generations would have enjoyed the profits, everybody would have had his just share of the advantages, and taxation would have been for ever unnecessary. What would be said if somebody should suggest that the seawall lots should be given away to individuals on the principal of first come first served.—San Francisco (Cal.) Examiner.

Thin End of the Wedge in France.

A newspaper devoted to the study of economic problems has just appeared in Paris, called the L'Essor Social. It welcomes every sort of discussion that has a direct bearing on the social problem. That the single tax will be brought to the attention of its readers, one feels sure when he sees among the contributors to the first number the name of M. Charles M. Garnier, the youthful and talented litterateur, who recently brilliantly passed one of the most difficult examinations for advancement in the governmental literary department. M. Garnier sees clearly that the single tax is a remedy for the present social ills; and at the international congress in 1889 at Paris, he labored earnestly for its success. His recent long stay in England, in the neighborhood of London, where he studied the evils of landholding in their direct form, has given him facts and figures which he is enabled powerfully to employ in his French discussions.

Fighting Unjust Taxation.

J. R. Carret, of the single tax executive committee, has issued a circular addressed to the single tax advocates, for the purpose of awakening enthusiasm on the subject and raising an army of recruits to combat the system of unjust taxation under which the laboring classes are now suffering, and advising all in favor of the movement to begin at once a vigorous campaign.—Boston (Mass.) Globe.

A RIVER HORROR.

The Oliver Beirne, with Its Cargo, Destroyed Near Vicksburg, Miss.—Loss of Many Passengers and Deck Hands.

AN APPALLING DISASTER.

ST. LOUIS, Oct 30.—A special from Vicksburg says the handsome steamer Oliver Beirne was burned to the water's edge at 3:30 a. m. near Milliken's landing, 25 miles above Vicksburg. Twenty passengers were either drowned or burned to death.

The Oliver Beirne left this city Wednesday, October 21, with a list of over 100 deck passengers and fifteen cabin passengers. This list was increased by additional passengers taken on board at Cairo, Memphis and other landings down the river.

Most of the passengers and crew were asleep when at 3:30 o'clock an alarm of fire was suddenly sounded, and almost before anyone was awake the boat was in flames. The blaze originated on the lower deck, from what cause no one has yet been able to learn, and, communicating to the dry cotton, was soon burning with great fierceness. The crew of the boat were aroused, and, with the passengers who were awake, gave the alarm to those who were asleep. A rush was immediately made for the forward part of the boat and many got off in safety, but that avenue of escape and others were soon cut off and the unfortunate passengers and crew were forced to plunge into the water. The crew of the boat displayed commendable coolness and every effort was made to rescue those who had not reached the shore.

The following is a partial list of those known to have perished: Two children of Dr. Worrall, of Baton Rouge; Sam Entricken, son of Valentine Entricken, of New Orleans, two chambermaids, Miss Adams, of Omaha, Mrs. Woolridge, of New Orleans, nurse girl, of Mrs. Fraser, five cabin boys and several roustabouts.

The steamer Oliver Beirne was a new and handsome passenger boat and was built at Jeffersonville, Ind., four years ago. She has been used in the excursion traffic on the Mississippi river for the last two summers and during the winter season has plied between local points at the lower end of the river. The boat was valued at $50,000 and was owned by the Planters and Merchants' Packet Company of New Orleans. She was fully insured.

MILLERIN'S BEND, La., Nov. 2.—The bodies of nine victims of the disaster that befell the steamer Oliver Beirne here have been recovered.

An Ohio Town Almost Wiped Out.

LIMA, O., Oct. 30.—Fire Thursday afternoon broke out in the rear of a furniture store at Kenton, 25 miles east of here on the Chicago & Erie road, and a high wind blowing at the time $150,000 damage was done. The furniture store, the carriage works and all the dwelling houses for three squares on one side and two on the other side of the street were entirely consumed. The loss is not more than half covered by insurance.

Killed by a Fall.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Nov. 2.—Mrs. Lucy Todd Gilbert, aged 87, mother of Bishop Gilbert, was found dead lying in a pool of blood on the sidewalk fronting the bishop's residence. It is supposed that she awoke in the night and, being restless, commenced moving about in an aimless way, and mistaking the window for a door, walked through it.

THE ELECTIONS.

Returns from Tuesday's elections come in slowly, but enough is now known to show the general drift of the tide. In Ohio and in the local elections here in Michigan, the Republicans were successful by good margins. In most other localities the Democrats have carried off the honors. But taking the whole field, the Democrats secure the lion's share of the spoils.

Major McKinley is elected governor of Ohio by a plurality that may reach 20,000 and the Republicans carry both branches of the legislature. The normal Republican majority in that state on a full vote is about 25,000 and that party has just about he d its own. It was the hottest state campaign ever waged in the state. The Republicans had the advantage of unlimited funds and a good party majority to begin with, and they have simply taken their own.

In Detroit the Republicans elect their Mayor and the city ticket. The factional war in the Democratic ranks and the issue forced upon the citizens by the city railway monopoly in the mob ticked, headed by Thompson, produced its legitimate result. The boodle aldermanic candidates were all snowed under with one exception. The Republicans also carry the Grand Rapids district by a good majority.

Pennsylvania goes Republican by about the usual majority.

The Democrats gain a rousing victory in Iowa. Gov. Boies is re-elected by a majority of at least 10,000 and the legislature is in doubt. It may take the official canvass to decide it.

In old Massachusetts also the Democrats sweep the decks. Gov. Russell carries the state, after a hot contest, by about 8,000 majority. The legislature, however, will be Republican in both branches.

Virginia, Maryland and New Jersey all go Democratic by sweeping majorities, both on state tickets and the legislature.

In New York Roswell P. Flower and the entire state ticket is elected by a majority of about 50,000. New York and Brooklyn gave their usual Democratic majorities, but the Republican vote fell off heavily in the interior counties. The legislature seems to be safely Democratic, although both parties still claim it.

The Peoples' Party failed to meet expectations in any quarter. In Ohio their vote was less than 12,000. In Kansas and Nebraska, that party was beaten by the regular Republican tickets. Taking a general survey of the field the elections seem to indicate that next year's contest will be a square fight between the Republican and Democratic parties with the tariff question as the overshadowing issue. Let it come.

Game and Fish Laws.

The game and fish laws are designed to restrict within proper limits the destruction of birds, beasts and fish, so that they may continue to be an important source of food supply, and at the same time afford enjoyment for lovers of the rod and gun. Any person who takes game or fish out of season deprives law-abiding citizens of their rig ts. In order that all may have an equal chance the law must be strictly observed. The attention of the public is called to the following provisions:

Deer may only be killed in the lower peninsula "from the 5th day of November to the 25th day of November." In the upper peninsula "between the 25th day of September and the 25th day of October." Deer must not be taken or killed in the water, or by trap or pitfall, or by artificial light (commonly called "shining"), or by the use of dogs. Any person may kill a dog following a deer or deer tracks.

Wild turkey. Open season November 1 to December 15 inclusive.

Partridge. Owing to the new law not taking immediate effect partridge may be killed from September 1, 1891, to October 1, 1891, on which date the new law goes into effect, making the open season from November 1 to December 15 inclusive in the lower peninsula, and October 1 to January 1 inclusive in the upper peninsula.

Quail. Open season November 1 to December 15 inclusive.

Woodcock. The new law makes the open season from August 15 to December 15, but as this law does not take effect until October 1, 1891, woodcocks must only be killed this year from September 1 to December 15.

Water foul. Jack snip, red headed, blue-bill, canvass back, widgeon and pin-tail ducks and wild geese may be killed between September 1 and May 1. Other wild water fowl and snipe between September 1 and January 1.

Prairie chicken not to be killed until September 1, 1894.

Speckled trout and grayling may be caught with hook and line only, and from May 1 to September 1. Trout, grayling and salmon less than six inches in length must be put back into the water. Brook trout or grayling must not be caught or shipped for sale.

Inland lakes. After October 1, 1891, nothing but hook and line can be used in any inland lake. Even set lines or night lines are prohibited, and to be found on a lake with spear, jack, net, set line, artificial lights, explosives, etc., is prima facia evidence of guilt.

Spearing fish. In streams, where there is no local act to the contrary, red-sides, grass pike, mullet and suckers may be taken with dip net or spear at any time, and other fish with the exception of bass, trout, salmon and grayling, may be speared any time except during March, April, May and June.

Fish nets. With the exception of dip nets as above stated, no nets of any kind can be used except in the great lakes, the bays and harbors connected with said lakes, and the St. Mary's Saginaw, St. Clair and Detroit rivers. Information in regard to fishing in these waters furnished on application.

The November North American.

The cover of the North American Review for November invites special attention to three of the articles which form its attractive list of contents. The first of these is entitled "Russian Barbarities and Their Apologist," and is furnished by Dr. Hermann Adler chief rabbi of the United Hebrew congregations of the British Empire. The "apologist with whom he deals is, of course, Prof. Goldwin Smith, whose article on "New Light on the Jewish Question," in the Review for August, has occasioned so much discussion. Dr. Adler's paper is an eloquent reply to Professor Smith's strictures. The second "starred" articli is "How to Improve Municipal Government"—a symposium to which four experts contribute: ex-Mayor Hart of Boston, Mayor Davidson of Baltimore, Mayor Bishop of Buffalo, and Mayor Noonan of St. Louis. In general they agree that the best model for a city government is the government of the United States, with its division into executive, ligislative and judicial departments. No. 3 is part I. of "Italy and the Pope," by ex-Prime Minister Crispi, who writes clearly and with full knowledge on this interesting subject. Besides these three articles and the usual variety of Notes and Comments, this number of The Review contains seven striking contributions. Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, puts in a strong "Plea for Free Coinage;" while Charles Stewart Smith, president of the New York Chamber of Commerce, in writing on "Our Business Prospects," declares that the shadow of free silver coinage is the one cloud upon the outlook for the country. Madame Adam, whose name is familiar to readers of The Review, gives an unequivocal answer to the question, "Are French Novels Faithful to Life?" That answer is in the negative. A very interesting subject is treated by Mrs. M. E. W. Sherwood in "The Lack of Good Servants." As a remedy she suggests the establishment of schools for the training of servants similar to the training schools for nurses which have accomplished so much in the last few years. Justin M Carthy, M. P., contributes an entertaining and instructive article on "Women in English Politics" showing that women are doing much more in England than here to control political movements. He thinks that their influence is altogether for good. Stepniak tells "What Americans Can Do for Russia." He calls his plan a dream, but it is a dream with a very practical side to it. The results of the collection by consus officials of facts relating to mortgages are summed up by the Hon. Robert P. Porter, Superintendent of the Census, under the heading, "Public and Private Debts." Mr. Porter considers this among the most important work done in connection with the census. The Notes and Comments relate to "Possibilities of Washington Society," "The Human Amœboid," "No Starvation in Russia," and "The Coming Glacial Age."

Worth Looking At.

"Turn to the press—its teeming sheets survey, big with the wonders of each passing day." Among these the eye will pause to look at an old familar family need in new dress. It will charm the sight, comfort the weary, and bring cheer and hope to the pain-stricken. The columns of this paper are graced by its reappearance. It is welcome, for what it promises to do, it does with alacrity, and proves its promise by an ample show of performance. The right thing, in the right place, at the right time, experience has proved it to be. Upon this it has won public confidence and esteem, for while St. Jacobs Oil, the great remedy for pain, thus makes its annual rounds and renews its pledges of prompt and permanent cure, its continual success is the guaranty that what it says is true and what it does is sure. Its best recommendation is its true reputation, upon which all may depend for cure and comfort.

The complete novel in the November number of Lippincott's Magazine is contributed by Mrs. Poultney Bigelow, author of "Beautiful Mrs. Thorndyke," etc. It is entitled "The Duke and the Commoner," and tells how a brilliant New York society woman is sought by two lovers, one an English duke, the other an untitled but clever diplomat. Mrs. Bigelow knows New York society life well, and what is better knows how to tell a story very well. The characters are admirably portrayed, and the story grows steadily in interest as it approaches its dramatic ending.

Says an exchange: "Now that school has commenced for another year parents should see that their children make the best possible use of the advantages thus afforded them. There can be no excuse for parents whose children's education is neglected. With our admirable system of free schools there is no need of young men and women growing up in ignorance. Where such is the case they are either to blame themselves or the responsibility must fall upon the parents.

The T. A. A. & N. M. Ry., ever on the alert to please the travelling public, will, after October 1st, make no extra charge for seats in their elegant palace chair cars. They will, after that day, be run on trains No. 1 and 6, between Toledo and Clare, instead of trains No. 2 and 3, as heretofore.

Miss Gertrude Howell has returned to her school duties.

Candidates seemed to be fewer at the last monthly examination.

Jay Morse has returned from Ypsilanti and is again in school.

Miss Addie Vandercook was a visitor during chapel Tuesday morning.

The sixth grade has not yet had a case of tardiness and but one half day's absence.

Miss Florence Mize and friend, from Ridgeway, were visitors in the high school last Wednesday afternoon.

The request of the physiology class regarding the cat must have been granted, as the cries of the well-known quadruped were heard issuing from a bag in the office one day recently.

While our efficient music teacher was conducting an exercise in the east branch last Monday, a mouse unceremoniously put in its appearance on the organ; an extra, accented note to the key of "Goodness!" burst from the lips of Miss G., and a round of applause burst forth from the pupils.

Our Two-Year Old.

The Chicago Tribune of last week gives the following in regard to our Lenawee two-year old at Lexington.

But from Adrian, Mich., came a handsome bay filly, called Quickstep, by Pilot Medium out of a mare by Louis Napoleon, as did the wonderful trotter, Jack. Quickstep taught the Kentuckians a costly lesson. Nobody thought she had any show to win, and money in great bundles poured in on the more fashionably bred filly, Red Cherry, but Quickstep had the best staying powers and the best speed, and after Red Cherry had led to the half, the Michigan filly forged to the front and won cleverly by three lengths, Red Cherry second. The time hung out was 2:27 3-4, which gives Pilot Medium another 2-year-old in the list. Quickstep was first all the way in the second heat and again won by three lengths, Red Cherry second. Matrimony and Benton Wilkes, both proved themselves good 2-year-olds, and they and Red Cherry ought all be able to go into the list this year. —Adrian Times.

Last Sunday's Free Press has the following about the famous two-year-old.

Arion is conceded to be a wonderful 2-year-old, next to him come those other fast colts, Monbars and Ralph Wilkes, whose marks of 2:18 equal the trotting of Sunol when she was the champion at that age. Michigan cannot approach the three above mentioned but this state has this year shown to the country a 2-year-old filly, capable of holding her own in nearly all the stakes for that age. Her name is an appropriate one, Quickstep, and the manner in which she won her race at Lexington a few weeks ago rather surprised the Kentuckians. She started with seven others in the stake for 2-year-olds, that had never beaten 2:30, and it was a well bred lot that took the word that sent them on the route. The Michigan filly was victorious and displayed her qualities as a race horse to great advantage, making the race record for Michigan horses of that age. Her heats were won in 2:27 3-4 and 2:28, going the last half of the last mile at a 2:26 gate. She is by Pilot Medium, out Trixey, by Louis Napoleon; second dam by Owosso Prince; third dam by General Thomas. L. C. Webb, of Mason, secretary of the State Breeder's association bred and sold her to Bowen & Hack, of Adrian, her present owners. In this connection it might be mentioned that Trixey, the mother of the promising filly, is the only mare in Michigan that has had two of her produce trot in 2:30 this year, Edwyne, 2:30, being out of Trixey.

Not Much of a War.

More than one of our contemporaries have alluded facetiously to the "baking powder war." There is no war of the character indicated. A certain powder achieved fame because it was better than anything that had previously been prepared, and because it was advertised in a liberal, original and judicious manner. The success of this powder led to imitation, as success always does, but to assert or to intimate that there is war between the Royal Baking Powder and its more or less feeble imitators suggests the picture of a death grapple between an eagle and a house-fly.

RECOMMENDS IT TO EVERYONE.

"Thinking that a word from me might be the cause of others receiving benefit from your S. S. S., I write to say that I have been a sufferer from Eczema, which my doctor called pink heads. Small blisters would form on my limbs, would break and ooze, and cause large sores to form. The odor arising would be very disagreeable, and I would often be laid up from one to two weeks at a time. The disease would break out about every two months. I tried various physicians and treatments, but received no permanent relief until I was induced to try S. S. S., and felt the benefit from it in a few days. I continued the use of it until I had taken three bottles, which was over a year ago, and I have not had the eczema since. I believe it is thoroughly eradicated from my system. I feel sure that S. S. S. is the greatest blood remedy, and I would recommend it to everyone afflicted with any form of blood poison, for I believe they will receive like benefits that I have."

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

All of the cartoons in Puck of November 4th are fine examples of pictorial art. The centre one, by Joseph Keppler, entitled, "See, the Conquering Porker Comes!" is in that famous artist's best vein; while Mr. Opper's "Every Man Has His Double" is as funny as that funniest of funny men can make it.

The first of the Blind Boone concerts was given last night to an audience which thoroughly enjoyed the interpretations of the great masters. Boone is a musical genius whose great talents can scarcely be described. He must be heard to be appreciated. Stella May, the leading colored vocalist, assisted at the concert with her wonderful voice. —Denver Times.

Mr. Wilczek has won the admiration of the town, and when he arose for his violin solo that admiration was made manifest. Sarasate's "Gypsy Dances," after the Hungarian style which he played, were as wild and fantastic as the gypsies are supposed to be, and the soloist lead the orchestra a merry dance as his bow and fingers flew over the strings. All through it there was the delightful smoothness he showed in the "Andante" the night before.—Indianapolis Journal.

Blind Boone gave one of his marvelous entertainments at the opera house on Friday night to a large and intelligent audience. Boone is a musical wonder, and in the loss of his eyesight is dependent upon his other senses, which are intensified in their development. He gives his hearers a rich and varied program, from the most difficult Hungarian rhapsodies to the simplest and sweetest plantation melodies, all of which were received with hearty applause. Miss Stella the vocalist, has a clear, sweet voice, and merited an encore of every number. The Boone company and its gentlemanly management have many warm friends at Mankato, from whom a hearty welcome may always be expected.—Mankato Review.

New halves and quarters will soon be ready for circulation. In the competition by artists about a year ago between two and three hundred designs were submitted, but not one was available. The designs that have been submitted to Secretary Foster were suggested mainly by Director Leech, and the drawings are by Charles E. Barber, the designer in the mint at Philadelphia. The character of the devices is limited by law to this: On one side shall be an impression emblematic of liberty, with the inscription "Liberty" and the year of the coinage, and on the reverse side shall be the figure of representation of an eagle, with the inscription, "United States of America," and "E Pluribus Unum," and a designation of the value of the coin. Most of the designs were on scales too minute for use, and a classic head will make the new coins artistic. The design is to be the same for the two coins except the words designating the value.

The November Magazine of American History is full of interest. It opens with an illustrated paper on "Judge Charles Johnson McCurdy and his home in Lyme, Connecticut," written by the editor. An admirable portrait of the eminent jurist forms the frontispiece, and four full-page pictures grace the text—three of the old colonial house and one of the ornate Lyme Church. The sketch of Judge McCurdy's well rounded life, extending over ninety-four and one-half years, from December 1797 to June 1891, is one of remarkable interest, as he was more or less a public character for nearly half a century, and his career is associated with historic events of the first importance. He was a gentleman of the old school, with means, leisure, tact and culture, and represented in his ancestry several of the oldest and strongest races known to history. Dr. Patton's terse and scholarly study follows, "One Hundred Years of National Life: the Contrast between 1789 and 1889," which all readers will find useful and informing.

The Evening News prints this of a Lenawee county newspaper man, which would be in some respects hard to believe, were the subject of the sketch not of Lenawee county: George W. Fenton, foreman in the Hudson Gazette office, and one of the oldest printers in the state, has worked for one firm, by the light of one window, for over 36 years, and has never laid off a holiday or missed to exceed one month in all those years. A new floor has been laid once by the case where he stands, and he has nearly worn the second one through. He never drinks, smokes, or chews (remember he's a printer) and you couldn't get him to work on Saturday no more than you could fly—he's a strong adventist.

The Fisk Tennesseeans, under the management of Mr. B. W. Thomas, were greeted with a good sized audience at Hamblin's opera house last evening. We congratulate Mr. Thomas upon his company and bespeak for him a full house should he ever visit Battle Creek again.—Daily Journal, Battle Creek.

Our readers will remember that an old man, named Abram Colvin, disappeared from home last summer and that a long and fruitless search was made to discover his whereabouts. Last Saturday while some hunters were going through a piece of woods near Sylvania, Ohio, they discovered his body. The remains were taken to Palmyra for burial.

The Fisk Tennesseeans, the famous jubilee singers who have been captivating American audiences, under the management of Mr. B. W. Thomas, formerly of the Fisk jubilee troupe, gave an entertainment in Elm street Methodist Church last night, which will be repeated to-night. The audience was fairly good, but the company deserved a far larger hearing. A chorus, in which all the troupe took part, opened the program, and it required little musical education to at once realize that every one of the performers was not only endowed with exceptional musical talent, but had super-added a first class training.—The Empire Toronto, Ont.

LOOKS LIKE WAR.

The Little Republic of Chili Defies the United States.

The Junta Puts on a Bold Front and Refuses to Become Responsible for the Recent Outrage at Valparaiso.

CHILI IS DEFIANT.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—Chilian developments have not lessened the seriousness of the outlook. A long cipher cablegram was received from Minister Egan at the state department Thursday morning. It was nearly noon before the cablegram was translated and laid before the president. It reads as follows:

"The department of state received a telegram Thursday morning from Minister Egan dated Santiago, October 28, in which he gives the following as the reply of the Chilian government to the president's telegram of October 23, asking reparation for the recent murder of American sailors in the streets of Valparaiso:

"The minister of foreign affairs replies that the government of the United States formulates demands and advances threats that, without being cast back with acrimony, are not acceptable, nor could they be accepted in the present case or in any other of like nature. He does not doubt the sincerity, rectitude or expertness of investigation on board the Baltimore, but will recognize only the jurisdiction and authority of his own country to judge and punish the guilty in Chilian territory. He says the administrative and judicial authorities have been investigating affairs, that judicial investigation under Chilian law is secret, and the time is not yet arrived to make known results. When that time does arrive he will communicate the result, although he does not recognize any other authority competent to judge criminal cases than that established by the Chilian people. Until the time arrives to disclose the result of the investigation he cannot admit that the disorders in Valparaiso or the silence of his department should appear as an expression of unfriendliness toward the government of the United States which might put in peril the friendly relations between the two countries.'"

The position of the administration is plain enough. The temperate tone of the instructions last week was met by the junta's calling them threats. There was barely the suggestion of an ultimatum in them. Now, however, Minister Egan will soon be directed to lay an ultimatum before the junta. It will be the withdrawal of the minister and the severence of diplomatic relations as a prelude to enforcing the demands of the United States for reparation, and reparation means apology to the flag, punishment of the sailors' assailants and indemnity. Every step now taken by Secretary Blaine is taken with the full knowledge that it may come to a forced apology, though this is still an uncertain contingency, as the resources of diplomacy are far from being exhausted. The United States will not be betrayed into any exhibition of petty spite or of bulldozing, but as the evidences of foreign intrigues grow the necessity of maintaining a firm attitude increases.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31.—Action is better than talk. That was the pith of Secretary Blaine's remark Thursday when he asked Secretary Tracy how soon the navy department could have the cruisers Philadelphia and Newark afloat for Chilian waters. At Friday's cabinet meeting the secretary of the navy gave the answer. Orders have been sent to Boston to have the Newark fitted out with a year's supply of provisions and to complete its crew with two-year service men. The ship, it is now believed, can be got under way within ten days. The Newark will sail to Chili. The Philadelphia will get under way about the same time, or perhaps a few days earlier than the Newark, and the Atlanta will follow as soon as it is ready. These three vessels, with the Boston and Yorktown now under way, and the Baltimore and San Francisco already in the Pacific, would give a fleet of seven of the best vessels now available, and would make quite a respectable showing for the purpose intended—that is, as an aid to diplomacy in securing reparation. One object in selecting the Philadelphia for service in Chili, it is understood, is to place Admiral Gherardi in command of the forces in those waters pending the reparation which will be required. The president and Secretary Blaine look favorably upon his detail for this service.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2. — The only Chilian news received Sunday was in the form of a cipher dispatch dated Valparaiso Saturday. The dispatch reads as follows:

"VALPARAISO, Oct. 31.—SECRETARY OF THE NAVY:—Petty Officer Johnson, in whose arms Riggen was killed, declares that the act was done by the police guard. Apprentice Williams reports that he was arrested by a mounted policeman, who placed cat-gut nippers around his wrists and started his horse into a gallop, throwing him down. After that the policeman walked his horse. Coalheaver McWilliams was arrested and taken to prison with a lasso around his neck. He was bitten in the arm after arrest. Coalheaver Quigley, while trying to effect his escape from the mob, was struck with a sword by a police officer. Apprentice Talbot was arrested, and on the way to prison he was struck repeatedly by the police. Petty Officer Hamilton, dangerously wounded and unconscious, was dragged to prison. One of my people, trying to make him comfortable, was threatened with the butt of a musket and made to desist. My men in prison were examined secretly, although I sent an officer to the court to request authority to allow his presence. The request was denied on account of the proceedings being secret. Before discharge my men were required to sign a paper, and before doing so Rinehart asked a court official the meaning of the paper. He was informed that it was a mere form, stating that the signer was not engaged in the trouble. Two men are dead, three are dangerously wounded and about fifteen are slightly injured. Surgeons believe the wounded out of danger. "SCHLEY."

SANTIAGO, Nov. 2.—The political atmosphere remains about the same. There is no change in the strained diplomatic relations existing between the United States and Chili. The junta still contends that the police of Valparaiso were in no way to blame for taking the sailors of the Baltimore into custody nor for their subsequent treatment.

The United States legation has again been placed under police espionage. The reason for it is not known, but the police are keeping as strict a watch over it as they did when the question of the legation's right to afford asylum to political refugees was under discussion. The only reason that can be given for this action is that the Chilian officials are desirous of keeping fully posted with regard to persons leaving or visiting the legation. The members of the legation are very much annoyed by this last move.

FREED BY FORCE.

A Mob Liberates the Inmates of the Briceville (Tenn.) Prison.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Oct. 31.—At 9 o'clock Friday night 3,000 miners attacked the stockade at Briceville in which 330 convicts were confined, released the prisoners and burned the stockade. The liberators came from every direction and assembled in force, marching on the stockade. Their first act was to blow up the magazine, the uprights of the stockade were knocked off and the convicts who had retired released. They then volunteered to help their rescuers in an attack on the Chumlea stockade. A continuous firing was kept up. The guards of the Chumlea stockade were preparing against the attack. Great bonfires were built all around to prevent a surprise. The miners took possession of the telegraph office at Coal Creek, and no messages were allowed to be received or sent.

Most of the convicts are reported to have gone towards the Kentucky line. It has been ascertained that large numbers of suits of citizens' clothes were purchased several days ago, and it is now certain that they were for the use of the discharged convicts, whose escape would be facilitated by discarding their striped clothes.

EX-SENATOR FAIR WEDS.

Rumor Says Miss Lake, Miss Fair's Old Governess, Is the Lady.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 30.—It is reported on pretty good authority that ex-Senator James G. Fair, the Comstock millionaire, who is worth $20,000,000, was married a few days ago in Nevada to Miss Lake, proprietor of a female boarding school in this city. Fair first became acquainted with Miss Lake when she was governess of his youngest daughter. She is an accomplished woman and Fair took so much interest in her success that he built a fine school building for her. She is the daughter of the late Judge Delos Lake, who had at his death the largest practice of any California lawyer. He lived like a prince, however, and left his two daughters a very small estate.

One Was Burned.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 2.—The Blair county almshouse at Hollidaysburg was destroyed by fire Saturday morning. The building was four stories in height and the fire started from a superheated furnace. The flames spread so rapidly that the fifty-six inmates were rescued with difficulty. One crazy woman who could not be restrained rushed back to the burning building and was cremated. The loss was $30,000; insurance, $12,000.

A Mother Insane from Grief.

OSHKOSH, Wis., Nov. 2. — Ernest Hauer shot and instantly killed Arthur Anderson Sunday morning. The boys are about 16 years old and were around Anderson's boathouse on the shore of the lake arranging decoys for duck-shooting. Hauer shot at a bird on the boathouse. Just then Anderson came around the corner and received the full charge in the neck. Hauer is now in jail. Mrs. Anderson has become insane.

No More Thrashers Needed.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Nov. 2.—The Great Northern Railway Company has issued a special bulletin announcing that there was no further need for thrashing outfits in northern Minnesota and North Dakota. Farmers with large crops in shock have taken advantage of the favorable weather to stack their grain. It is now comparatively safe and can be thrashed any time during the winter.

No Responsibility Fixed.

MONMOUTH, Ill., Nov. 2.—The coroner's jury inquiry into the cause of disaster on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railway at the Monmouth pottery works October 21 returned a verdict Saturday that the wreck was caused by the displacement of the pottery switch, but the cause of the misplacement of the switch cannot from the evidence be determined.

PRAIRIES ON FIRE.

Many Farms Devastated in Kansas and North Dakota.

A Number of Persons Missing, and It Is Feared They Have Perished—Farmers Lose Heavily in the Kankakee (Ill.) Valley.

RUIN BY PRAIRIE FIRES.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 31.—Reports received here from Kansas show that vast prairie fires are raging all over the western part of the state and also in many counties in the eastern part. From Franklin county comes the report that thousands of tons of hay have been burned, while corn in shock and bins have also been destroyed. The fire in Gray county is supposed to have started from a spark from a locomotive, and as the grass is like tinder it spread rapidly and soon swept over the county, licking up everything in its path. In Butler county the flames overtook a herd of cattle, and sixteen head were burned, while seven others were so badly injured that they will die. Not only was the grass burned but every house in the line of the fire was destroyed, and from the meager details obtainable it is thought that seven houses were burned in Butler county alone. In Franklin county two houses have been burned with all their contents, and the fire is still raging fiercely. In Ford county the people had no time to prepare for the fire and were compelled to flee, leaving everything behind them and losing all the grain, buildings, stock and implements in the place. Thousands upon thousands of grazing lands have been burned over, and as there were many herds of cattle upon them, numbering into the thousands, the loss among cattle is supposed to be very great.

There is no authentic report of loss of human lives by the fire, but it is said that two men who were fighting the fire near Beaumont were overcome by the flames as they were running toward the town. They have not been seen since. They started along the track, but the people of the town were so busy looking after the safety of the place that they did not pay much attention to the men. Near Argonia Mrs. C. Twining was burned up in her house. This fire surrounded the town of Argonia and it took hard work to save the buildings on the outskirts. A telegram from Guthrie, O. T., received late Friday night says prairie fires have swept over the entire Pottawatomie reservation and the adjoining counties, doing thousands of dollars' damage. Hundreds of farmers have lost all their hay, grain and pasture, while a score or more have their homes destroyed. Many new settlers were caught on the road and their wagons loaded with their household goods burned. No lives were lost but a large amount of live stock perished, and the fire is still raging in the wooded district, where hundreds of people have been fighting the flames all day.

MANDAN, N. D., Oct. 31.—A prairie fire that started Thursday night northwest of Mandan and burned toward the Missouri river did considerable damage. A range 40 miles long by 20 miles wide was burned.

ELLENDALE, N. D., Oct. 31.—A prairie fire started Friday evening a few miles north of this city. Much damage was done to grain, stock and other property. There is a rumor that Fullerton, a village in the northern part of this county, was destroyed, but the rumor is vague.

MOMENCE, Ill., Oct. 31.—Prairie fires are sweeping the country east of this city between the Chicago & Indiana coal road and the Kankakee river. The heaviest losers thus far are the Chatfield brothers, one-half mile east of Momence, who lost all their farm buildings Friday afternoon, including 4,000 bushels of grain and a large amount of hay and implements. Their loss is between $5,000 and $6,000. Farther east and south the fire swept over a dozen farms, burning several hundred tons of hay, but destroying no buildings of considerable value. Unless the stiff south wind abates the loss will be much larger, as the fires are still burning.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Oct. 31.—Prairie fires near here destroyed sixty acres of corn and thirty tons of hay, besides several sheds, board fences, etc.

Cloak Manufacturers Fail.

NEW YORK, Oct. 31.—Michael O. Simonson and Theodore Weiss, known as Simonson & Weiss, cloak manufacturers, have failed with liabilities estimated at $180,000. The firm began business in 1870. They did a large business, their annual sales reaching $600,000.

To the Black Republic.

NEW YORK, Oct. 31.—The bark Liberia, which sails to-day for Monrovia, Liberia, carries sixty-eight colonists to the black republic. The colonists are from Florida, and they go to their new home under the auspices of the American Colonization society.

An Aged Lady's Frightful Death.

AKRON, O., Oct. 31.—While building a bonfire the clothing of Mrs. James Harbin, of East Thornton street, caught fire. Medical assistance could not save her, and she died Friday morning. Mrs. Harbin was 60 years old.

Couldn't Agree.

WAUPACA, Wis., Oct. 31.—After being out twenty-one hours the jury in the case of Evan Coolidge, the banker, charged with receiving deposits knowing himself to be insolvent, disagreed and were discharged.

Murdered and Robbed.

ELIZABETHTOWN, Ind., Oct. 31.—James Beggs, a well-to-do farmer residing near here, was fatally beaten by John and Frank Newby, two colored toughs, and robbed of a sum of money.

Lost at Sea.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—The steamer Stella has been wrecked at Batoum. Six persons were drowned.

LA GRIPPE AGAIN.

During the epidemic of La Grippe last season Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and colds, proved to be the best remedy. Reports from the many who used it confirm this statement. They were not only quickly relieved, but the disease left no bad after results. We ask you to give this remedy a trial and we guarantee that you will be satisfied with results, or the purchase price will be refunded. It has no equal in La Grippe, or any Throat, Chest or Lung Trouble. Trial bottles free at J. J. Orr's Drug Store. Large bottles, 50c. and $1.00.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent;
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

THE DIFFRUNCE.

It's eight an thirty years an more
Since Hannah left her mother,
An' we agreed that she an' I
Could house with one another.

An' all these years of married life
That I have shared with Hannah
Have gone to prove the diffrunce
'Twixt man an' woman's manner.

Now Hannah has her garden beds,
An' tends her pleats an' posies,
While I weed out my turnip plot,
An' hoe my early roses.

Then Hannah has her cats an' dogs,
Her Poll an' pet canary,
While I think more of useful beasts
Ter keep the farm an' dairy.

We're both contented with our lot,
I let her have her parrots,
She never minds that I prefer
The turnips, beets and carrots.

For in this life the pretty things
Are put beside the common,
An' that's the reason why a man
Was made to love a woman.

A SCOUT'S ADVENTURES.

During the Indian troubles which followed the close of the civil war I was attached to various western forts and camps as scout and dispatch rider, and in that capacity had my full share of adventures. It was my fortune or misfortune almost at the outset of my career to strike the Sioux a blow which made them ever after hungry for my life. This was in 1866, while they were pretending to be at peace, but actually killing every white man who was found outside the forts. I was then at Fort McPherson, and while carrying a dispatch to a small body of troops stationed on the Saline fork of the Kansas river, I encountered a small band of Indians. This was about ten o'clock in the [illegible] I saw them emerge fro[illegible] vine and head to cut me off, [illegible] halted and dismounted. [illegible] hen on the crest of a ridge, and close to a natural sink which would make a good rifle pit. It was big enough to shelter my horse as well, and I was all ready for the redskins before they knew I had taken the alarm.

While not in war-paint they showed every other sign of hostility, and I knew that if I fell into their hands my scalp would change owners within five minutes. There wasn't a Winchester rifle among the Indians at that time and not one in ten had seen one. I had one, while the nine redskins before me had old-fashioned muzzle-loading rifles, and I believed I could surprise them. They were led by a sub-chief named Little Feather and among the nine were two others named White Water and Running Bear. These three sub-chiefs were warriors of renown and were then on their way to attend a council and a war-dance.

It was Little Feather who summoned me to surrender on pain of being burned at the stake, and he was the one who directed affairs when I shouted my refusal. The nine spread out, mounted on their ponies, until they half encircled my refuge; then, at a signal, they came charging up the slope, each one yelling enough to split his throat. Lying on my face, with a dead rest for my rifle, I tumbled Little Feather and White Water out of their saddles, and that stopped the charge. As they checked up I killed Running Bear, and before they got out of range I wounded one of the warriors. The living galloped off, and I carried two ponies and all the accoutrements of the dead chiefs safely into the fort. In a work entitled "The Pioneers of Nebraska," pages 355-6, is an account of this fight, but not a very accurate one. The number of killed is there put down at five and the name of Running Bear is given as Yellow Bear.

It soon became known among the Sioux what had happened, and every branch of the great tribe swore to have my life. A reward of ten ponies was offered to anyone who should kill me, and twenty if I were taken alive. I was advised by everybody to clear out of that locality, but I refused to go until the long-expected war finally broke out and I was attached to a moving column. The threats of the Indians had not greatly disturbed me, as I knew they would always be trying their best to capture a scout, no matter if they had never heard of him. Those were days when every white man on the plains lived a year in every week and never forgot for a moment that his life was in continual jeopardy. Several plans, as I afterwards learned, were formed to capture me, but I slipped through.

I was finally made prisoner under singular circumstances. I was returning from the flying column to Fort Wallace with dispatches. I had set out soon after dusk and made a good twenty-five miles when a heavy fog settled down on the plains. It wouldn't have bothered an Indian to keep the points of the compass, but after I had turned and twisted among some dry ravines I had to own up that I was lost. My horse was just as badly off. When I gave him his head he came to a stop. The only thing to do was to dismount and wait for daylight. I was sitting on the ground not feeling a bit sleepy, and my horse was lying down, when a band of thirty-seven Indians, all mounted, walked right on to me through the fog. I heard the footsteps of their horses, but could not locate them in the fog until it was too late. When I leaped up it was with the thought that I might make a break for it on foot, but before I could turn they were all about me, and in another minute I was made prisoner.

The Indians were as much surprised as I was, and it was broad daylight before they identified me. Up to that time they had treated me fairly well. When it was known that I was the scout whose life they had so long thirsted after half a dozen bucks tried their best to tomahawk me on the spot. When their angry excitement had cooled down there was as much rejoicing as if they had captured a fort. Six warriors were called out as a guard, and soon after sunrise I was put in their charge and started for a big Sioux village on Deer creek, between the two forks of the Republican river. I was, of course, disarmed. Then my elbows were tied together, my feet tied under the horse, and for fear the horse would run off with me he was led by a lariat.

At noon we made a halt of half an hour and I was given about half a pound of jerked buffalo meat as my share of the noonday meal. My arms were unbound that I might eat, but the whole six constantly kept their eyes on me. When we set off again I was bound as before, and we rode at a gallop until ten o'clock at night before the village was reached. I understood the Sioux lingo very well, though I did not let on to, and the talk we rode was anything but pleasant to me. It was agreed that I would be put to the torture, and that it would be made to last as long as possible.

When we reached the village I was placed in a tepee and my arms unbound. They refused to cast the lashing off my legs, though three of the bucks stood guard outside. I was so stiff and sore with the ride that I could not have taken five steps had they turned me loose and told me to go. I got not a wink of sleep that night, and it was not until eight o'clock next morning that my legs were freed. It was a village of eighty lodges, and the one I occupied was almost in the center of the collection. I couldn't have escaped had they left the tent unguarded, but they took no risks. There were always two and sometimes four of the bucks squatted outside of the lodge, and outside of these a circle of squaws and children.

It was the third day after my capture before I was disturbed. Then most of the warriors having returned to the village on purpose to witness my death, I was led out at three o'clock in the afternoon to undergo the preliminary to actual torture. This is running the gauntlet. There were as near as I could judge sixty men and boys in each line, and the lines were four feet apart. Had each one been armed with a switch to strike me it would have been punishment enough, but they were allowed to use clubs and sticks and tomahawk handles. When I looked down the line I felt that there was no show for me to make the run, and yet I must make the attempt. You may ask why I did not obstinately refuse, and let them do their worst then and there. Because I was hoping for them to show me a little mercy. They would torture me, but not so cruelly as if I refused to run.

I got as good a ready as I could and when the signal came I sprang away at the top of my speed. Blow after blow fell upon me while the savages shouted their pleasure, and to my great surprise I at length reached the end of the lines. There I fell in a heap and they gave me about ten minutes in which to brace up for the run back. I made only half the distance this time, being struck such a blow over the head with a club that I sank down unconscious. When I had recovered my senses they returned me to the lodge, where I lay for many hours expecting to be taken out any moment for torture. They would have finished me but for the fact that the wife of Little Feather who was in another village fifty miles away, had not yet arrived. She wanted to be in at the death and so further proceedings were declared off for the day.

The squaw arrived soon after midnight. My ankles were tightly lashed and I could not sleep. She was for having me out at once, and came and looked into the lodge to see if I was safe; but she was told that I would be put to the torture after breakfast in the morning, and long after she had turned away I heard my guards gloating over the prospects. It was agreed among them that I was a game man and would hold out for several hours and give them lots of amusement.

Half an hour after daylight the village was astir, and at sunrise a squaw brought me some breakfast and the lashings around my ankles were cast off. I learned several years after that it was intended to oblige me to run the gauntlet again. I was eating the meal the squaw had brought when a sudden excitement arose outside. There was a great shooting, followed by cheers and the report of firearms, and the next minute the two hundred frontiersmen who had been raised in Kansas and Nebraska as an independent force charged into the village. It wasn't five minutes before the fleeing warriors rallied for defense, but before that time I was safe. At the first alarm I leaped up and sprang out of the lodge full against one of the guards, and as I ran I was fired at two or three times. I was among the horsemen in a minute or two, and after a bit I got a rifle and took an active part in the hot fight going on. We were driven off after a couple of hours but we got every pony in the herd and burned all the lodges, and they had many a dead warrior to mourn over.

It was a singular thing that in after years I should meet the squaw of Little Feather on the reservation and have a long talk with her. So it happened, and she calmly told me that she had been promised my scalp as a keepsake and that it would have been her hand which would have ended my agonies after I had amused the warriors to their fill as a prisoner at the stake.—M. He Stood Pat.

It was on a Sixth avenue surface car. A young woman occupied one end of a seat and a young man the other. The young woman was perfectly sober; the young man had indulged in three glasses of beer. The conductor came along the outside of the car to collect the fares, and as the young woman was far away she handed her nickel to the young man. He received it, looked at her for a moment through his tears, and then said as he passed it on:

"I accept the responsibility and thank you for the confidence reposed in my integrity. Never beat a woman on a street car out of a nickel in my life. Booze a little now and then, but I stand pat on my record for honesty."

She started to look confused and embarrassed, but he fell asleep in about half a minute and she changed her mind.—M Quad, in N. Y. World.

Hod Snow, of Morenci, has patented a dust pan, and proposes to organize a stock company for the manufacture thereof. James Staup, of Ogden, met with a horrible accident. While hulling clover on the farm of Henry Loar, his right arm was accidentally drawn into the cylinder, and before the machine could be stopped it was literally ground to pieces half way above the elbow. The young man is of good constitution and it is hoped will survive the shock.—Blissfield Advance.

Misses Kate and Maggie Goodwin were thrown from their buggy while returning home Saturday evening, sustaining serious injuries. The accident happened at Clifford's Corners, four miles east of this village, and was caused by the horse becoming frightened at a woman carrying a straw bed on her head. When Dr. Dodge arrived he found the older sister suffering from a deep-seated fracture of the left hip; the other's injuries were about the right knee and left wrist.—Hudson Gazette.

The articles of incorporation have been signed by the members and placed on file at Lansing and Adrian, and the association is now ready for business. The first meeting will be held next Tuesday evening, Nov. 3rd, when by-laws will be adopted and arrangements made for securing a gymnasium and furnishing it with the necessary appliances and bath rooms.—Hudson Gazette.

Humane Agent Vhay, of Detroit, came to Adrian on Thursday to get a warrant for the arrest of D. A. Downer, owner of the famous horse "Kit," but his effort in that direction was unsuccessful. The official gentlemen at Adrian couldn't see it his way. Furthermore he learned that the 100-mile drive wasn't being made that day. He came there on his mission, notwithstanding he had been told that he would be duly and promptly notified so that he might see the drive. He seemed to think there was a game somewhere, and discovered that he was mistaken. Last Saturday morning the little mare was found to be very lame, and could scarcely walk, to say nothing about being driven. Hence the trial had to be declared off for the time set. She is now, however, improving rapidly and Mr. Downer expects to make the drive in about two weeks. Vhay insists that he will attempt to stop it.—Morenci Observer.

The decision on the ditch, known as the Robinson drain, is left with the township board and will probably go through as originally surveyed.

W. Lenardson & Son have commenced their closing out sale of suits, overcoats and crockery. They invite everyone to take advantage of this sale, as they mean business.

Report says there is to be a saloon in our town. Maybe here is an opportunity to test the validity of the cold water clause, which heretofore has kept the saloon from our midst.

Fred Dubois is working on the C. J. & M. section, filling the vacancy caused by the resignation of Wm. Hause. Fred has always wanted to railroad it and now that he has secured a position we extend to him our best wishes.

On account of the inclemency of the weather, the meeting called for Nov. 10th, for the purpose of organizing a reading room, or library association, was postponed until Saturday evening, Nov. 14th. Let everyone who can be present.

Another night operator for the Wabash railroad. This makes only about the fourteenth different one in the last year. Seemingly the Wabash is very hard to suit, as this is the fourth change since our friend Maxwell left us, a little over a month ago.

The cider making season over, the next thing to follow is to get it out of the way for next year's supply, and judging by the shouting and racket on our streets every night till 11 or 12 o'clock, the surplus for vinegar will be rather slim and the barrels'll be empty for next year.

Married.—At the home of the bride's parents in Ridgeway, Wednesday, Nov. 4th, Ida M. Pocklington and Mr. Will Babcock. Will is our young and enterprising druggist and we extend to him and his happy bride our heartiest congratulations and best wishes for a long and happy future.

Please accept his kindest regards and grateful thanks.

As Will Cadmus, of Ridgeway, was getting off the Wabash midnight fast train Monday, he made a miscalculation as to the number of steps and fell from the yet fast moving train, receiving severe injuries about the face and head. He was conveyed at once to his home, still in an insensible condition, but later reports inform us he is doing as well as could be expected and his recovery is only a matter of time.

Halladay, of Napoleon, to witness the marriage of their daughter, Addie B., to H. Ray Kemp, of Tipton. Promptly at 11:30 o'clock the strains of the wedding march were heard and the parties took their places under a beautiful arch, and the words were pronounced which made them one. After the ceremony a bountiful repast was served and then came the congratulations of a host of friends. The presents were numerous and costly. And now, as they embark upon the voyage of life, the sincere wish of their many friends is, that they may have a cloudless voyage.

The stormy night prevented a good many from attending the Blind Boone entertainment at Tecumseh Tuesday night. Elder Yager and T. H. The community does not easily become reconciled to the removal of the body and monument of the late Wm. Queal from the Cambridge to the Tecumseh cemetery. It is thought his last resting place should have been in the town for whose best interests he ever worked, and which honored him so many years.

SMALL —BUT— DEADLY Are many of the countless microbes which infest the earth. Their destruction is great, as they destroy life in thousands of human beings annually. The only limitation to their devastation is food to feed on. They produce countless diseases—as malaria, scrofula, eczema, cancer, contagious blood poison, etc., etc. The remedy for this small but numerous and destructive foe, is to expel him from the body by the use of Swift's Specific. S. S. S. will rout him out completely, and force out also the poison which he has left behind. Be sure to get the genuine. Do not let anyone put off on you a substitute or imitation. Send for our book on the blood and skin.

A GREAT MAGAZINE.

The Century's Programme in 1892—A New "Life of Columbus"—Articles for Farmers, etc.

That great American periodical, the Century, is going to outdo its own unrivaled record in its programme for 1892, and as many of its new features begin with the November number, new readers should commence with that issue.

In this number are the opening chapters of a novel by Rudyard Kipling, the famous author of "Plain Tales from the Hills, written in collaboration with an American writer, Wolcott Balestier. It is the story of a young man and a young woman from a "booming" Colorado town, who go to India, he in search of a wonderful jeweled necklace, called "the Naulahka," (from which the story takes its name), and she as a physician to women. The novel describes their remarkable adventures at the court of an Indian maharajah. Besides this, The Century will print three other novels during the year, and a great number of short stories by the best American story writers.

The well-known humorist, Edgar W. Nye ("Bill Nye") is to write a series of amusing sketches which he calls his "autobiographies," the first one of which, "The Autobiography of a Justice of the Peace," is in November. This number also contains a valuable and suggestive article on "The Food Supply of the Future," which every farmer should read, to be followed by a number of others of great practical value to farmers, treating especially of the relations of the Government to the farmer, what it is doing and what it should do. This series will include contributions from officers of the Department of Agriculture, and other well-known men will discuss "The Farmer's Discontent," "Cooperation," etc., etc.

A celebrated Spanish writer is to furnish a "Life of Columbus," which will be brilliantly illustrated, and the publishers of the Century have arranged with the managers of the World's Fair to print articles on the buildings, etc.

by the author of "The Anglomaniacs," and the magazine will contain a great deal about the metropolis during the year,—among other things a series of illustrated articles on "The Jews in New York." In November is an illustrated description of "The Players' Club," founded by Edwin Booth, and one of the features of the splendidly illustrated Christmas (December) number is an article on "The Bowery."

To get The Century send the yearly subscription price ($4.00) to the Century Co., Union Square, New York, N. Y.

MOTHER'S FRIEND,

is the greatest blessing ever offered child-bearing women. I have been a midwife many years, and in each case where Mother's Friend has been used, it has accomplished wonders and relieved much suffering. It is the best remedy for rising of the breast known, and and worth the price for that alone.

MRS. M. A. BREWSTER, Montgomery, Ala. Sold by John J. Orr.

GRATIFYING TO ALL.

The high position attained and the universal acceptance and approval of the pleasant liquid fruit remedy Syrup of Figs, as the most excellent laxative known, illustrate the value of the qualities on which its success is based and are abundantly gratifying to the California Fig Syrup Company.

I feel it my duty to say a few words in regard to Ely's Cream Balm, and I do so entirely without solicitation. I have used it more or less half a year, and have found it to be most admirable. I have suffered from catarrh of the worst kind ever since I was a little boy and I never hoped for cure, but Cream Balm seems to do even that. Many of my acquaintances have used it with excellent results.--Oscar Ostrum, 45 Warren Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The best medical authorities say the proper way to treat catarrh is to take a consitutional remedy, like Hood's Sarsaparilla.
